QUARTERLY REPORTS*

*All alphanumeric characters and monetary amounts refer to receipts and expenditures on page 2, paragraphs D and E of the Quarterly Report Form.

The following reports for the first calendar quarter of 1989 were received too late to be included in the published reports for that quarter:

PLEASE RETURN 1 ORIGINAL TO: THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, OFFICE OF RECORDS AND REGISTRATION, 1036 LONGWORTH HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING, WASHINGTON, D.C. 20515

PLEASE RETURN 1 ORIGINAL TO: THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE, OFFICE OF PUBLIC RECORDS, 232 HART SENATE OFFICE BUILDING, WASHINGTON, D.C. 20510

PLACE AN "X" BELOW THE APPROPRIATE LETTER OR FIGURE IN THE BOX AT THE RIGHT OF THE "REPORT" HEADING BELOW:

"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th

IDENTIFICATION NUMBER

Is this an Amendment? ☐ YES ☐ NO

NOTE on ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:

(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)

(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".

(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:

(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.

(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

☐ CHECK IF ADDRESS IS DIFFERENT THAN PREVIOUSLY REPORTED

NOTE on ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE on ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).

(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have ☐ terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) description, (b) quantity distributed, (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed.)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and, if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly Report."

STATEMENT OF VERIFICATION

[Omitted in printing]

NOTE on ITEM "D."—(a) IN GENERAL. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—§ 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In general. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multi-purpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In general. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

D. RECEIPTS (INCLUDING CONTRIBUTIONS AND LOANS):

Fill in every blank. If the answer to any numbered item is "None," write "NONE" in the space following the number.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

H.R. 2655—REWRITE OF THE FOREIGN ASSISTANCE ACT

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the Members' attention the following summary by our colleagues, LEE HAMILTON and BEN GILMAN, of the status of the efforts by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to update the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961.

In February 1988, BILL BROOMFIELD and I asked LEE HAMILTON and BEN GILMAN to head a task force of the committee to review U.S. foreign assistance policies and programs. Over a period of a year, the Members and staff of the task force reviewed numerous documents and held extensive meetings with a range of experts both within and outside Government. The work of the task force culminated in an excellent report, which was presented to the committee on February 1, 1989. The principal recommendation of the report was to rewrite the Foreign Assistance Act in order to clarify and make comprehensible the objectives of U.S. foreign assistance and remove from the legislation unnecessary and obsolete provisions.

On June 16, the Committee on Foreign Affairs reported legislation (H.R. 2655) rewriting the Foreign Assistance Act, and on June 29, the House passed the bill.

The committee and the House owe LEE HAMILTON and BEN GILMAN a great debt of gratitude for the extensive and thoughtful work they devoted to the review of U.S. foreign assistance programs. I look forward to working with them to see the recommendations written into law.

Following is a letter from Representatives HAMILTON and GILMAN summarizing the status of the recommendations of the task force:

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, August 2, 1989.

Hon. DANTE B. FASCELL,
Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR DANTE: We write to bring you up-to-date regarding the implementation of the recommendations of the Committee on Foreign Affairs Task Force Recommendations. We are pleased to report that roughly two-thirds of the recommendations of the Task Force were included in H.R. 2655, International Cooperation Act of 1989, which passed the House floor on June 29, 1989.

The Task Force had 12 recommendations for military assistance: seven were incorporated in H.R. 2655, four were not and one is appropriately left to the executive branch to implement. On the economic assistance side, the Task Force had nine recommendations: six were incorporated in whole or part in H.R. 2655; one was not and two are essentially for the executive branch to implement.

This summary is detailed a little below:

A. MILITARY PROVISIONS

1. Establish one military assistance account and separate grant and concessional military assistance from cash sales authorities:

Incorporated in H.R. 2655.

Consolidation of all military assistance (FMS and MAP) into one account is intended to enhance achievement of military assistance program objectives and accountability by the executive branch and more effective and meaningful oversight by the legislative branch.

2. Create a new Defense Trade and Export Control Act to replace the Arms Export Control Act:

Created Defense Trade and Export Control Act in H.R. 2655.

This provision clarifies and coordinates the objectives of U.S. cash arms sales policies with that of U.S. foreign policies and national security objectives.

3. Clarify the goals of the Military Aid Program; Incorporated in the new Defense Trade and Export Control Act.

4. Encourage aid graduation:

Incorporated in H.R. 2655.

This provision is intended to encourage movement from military grant assistance to fully cash sales relationships. In order to assure economic independence and self sufficiency of recipient nations of U.S. assistance, it is essential that a concessional component remain available to enable countries near the graduation point in economic development to go from all grant assistance to an all cash arms sales relationship.

5. Replace small military aid programs in individual countries with an unearmarked regional contingency fund:

Established an unearmarked regional contingency fund of 2 percent of the FMS funds authorized. This provision is designed to provide the executive branch greater flexibility in meeting legitimate security needs of countries that do not necessarily have ongoing or long-term security assistance programs with the U.S.

6. Coordinate military assistance with other foreign policy. No explicit provision on such coordination but this is a recommendation for the executive branch to carry out and is implicit in the body of the Committee report.

7. Provide more effective accountability, focused on results:

Incorporated provisions to improve accountability for use of military assistance in H.R. 2655.

Establishes a centralized accounting system for foreign military sales.

Establishes sanctions, including suspension of co-production agreements for one year for illicit third-country transfers.

Improves monitoring of military equipment to foreign countries.

Requires that commercial arms sales using military assistance funds be subjected to monitoring and auditing requirements. No less stringent than those required by the federal acquisition regulations.

8. Streamlining arms export licensing procedures:

Incorporated in H.R. 2655.

This provision will expedite the processing of arms export control licenses by the Department of State and will obtain greater accountability and enforcement of sanctions against illicit or illegal arms export activities that undermines the credibility of the program and negates the foreign policy benefits of military sales.

9. Reduce, if not eliminate, earmarking:

This was not accomplished in H.R. 2655.

98 percent of the FMS account was earmarked last year. Roughly 85 percent of the FMS funds in H.R. 2655 is earmarked.

10. Create a separate line item for police training: This was not incorporated in H.R. 2655 as recommended by the Task Force.

11. Examine alternative financing: This was not incorporated in H.R. 2655.

12. Phase out over a five year period of military assistance as a quid pro quo for base rights access: A separate base rights account was not created in H.R. 2655 and there is no plan to phase out base rights assistance as an explicit quid pro quo, but the report accompanying H.R. 2655 requires a study and a report of base rights assistance and the options for the future.

B. ECONOMIC PROVISIONS

1. Repeal the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961. Enact a new International Economic Cooperation Act:

This was accomplished in H.R. 2655.

H.R. 2655 is a complete rewrite of the Foreign Assistance Act. It consolidates policy language, eliminates outdated provisions and unnecessary reporting requirements, and reduces conditions and restrictions.

2. Specify four main foreign economic policy objectives:

This was accomplished in H.R. 2655.

H.R. 2655 brings together economic assistance policies under four basic objectives: economic growth, sustainable resource management, poverty alleviation, and economic and political pluralism.

3. Draw clear distinctions among various types of economic assistance:

This was partially accomplished in H.R. 2655.

H.R. 2655 shifts projectized ESA ($1 billion) into development assistance.

4. Allow maximum flexibility in developing strategies and programs for pursuing the four objectives:

This was accomplished in H.R. 2655.

H.R. 2655 provides general policy guidance and removes some conditions and restrictions and specific program directives.

5. Require accountability based on the measurement and evaluation of progress toward the achievement of the legislative mandate:

This was accomplished in H.R. 2655.

H.R. 2655 requires evaluation of the impact of U.S. economic assistance (but fails to eliminate earmarking).

6. Encourage cooperative development relationships with advanced developing countries:

This was accomplished in H.R. 2655.

H.R. 2655 explicitly authorizes programs with advanced developing countries.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

7. Establish a new economic cooperation agency to administer U.S. economic cooperation programs: This was not accomplished in H.R. 2655, but will be up to the executive branch to consider and to implement.

8. Improve coordination: This was not accomplished in H.R. 2655, but like recommendation No. 7 above, will require executive branch action.

9. Require a simpler procurement regime for the economic assistance program: This was not accomplished. It was accomplished in draft form, but Government Operations Committee objected.

We want to express our appreciation to all of our colleagues for their help with the work of the Task Force. We also want to insure you that, working with the Chairman, we will work to try to insure that the provisions already in H.R. 2655 become law and that over the coming months we are able to make some progress in the implementation of some of the outstanding issues raised by the Task Force.

We are available to discuss any of these issues with you and we hope we can continue to work together on this important project.

With best regards,

Sincerely yours,

LEE H. HAMILTON,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East.

BENJAMIN A. GILMAN,
Ranking Minority Member, Subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East.

VALVOLINE NATIONAL DRIVING TEST AIRS AUGUST 29

HON. NICK JOE RAHALL II

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, during the August recess, just prior to the Labor Day weekend, CBS will air the "Valvoline National Driving Test" from 10 to 11 p.m., eastern daylight time.

As a member of the Subcommittee on Surface Transportation which exercises jurisdiction over national highway safety issues, I urge my colleagues and constituents to take the time to watch this important program. In the course of the committee's business, I find myself constantly reminded of the devastating impact which traffic accidents have on the lives and economy of this Nation.

Statistics show that the approximately 21 million traffic accidents each year result in nearly 50,000 fatalities and 1.8 million injuries, and cost this Nation at least $64.7 billion. According to the National Safety Council, 67 percent of all accidents are caused by driver error, such as speeding, failing to yield the right of way, and following too closely, although sometimes those driver errors are combined with other factors.

The airing of the "Valvoline National Driving Test" just prior to the upcoming Labor Day weekend could not be more timely in light of the hundreds of lives traditionally lost over that 3-day period. I would hope that if enough holiday drivers can be encouraged to watch the show, our Nation's highways will be far safer this Labor Day weekend.

HONORING QUEEN OF PEACE CHURCH ON ITS 50TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay special tribute to an outstanding establishment, the Queen of Peace Church, whose Catholic congregation is celebrating 50 years of faithful service to the Kew Gardens Hills community in Queens County, NY.

Throughout the years, Queen of Peace Church has sponsored many community service programs, including an elementary school, currently run by Sister Delores Ryan, and a "50-plus" club for senior citizens. It warmly embraces all members of the community and shares a harmonious relationship with the community's many other religious denominations.

To honor the 50th anniversary of Queen of Peace Church, its devoted congregation will offer a rededication ceremony on Sunday, September 10. His Excellency, Bishop Francis Mugavero of the Diocese of Brooklyn, will be present. After this formal religious service, the congregation will then have a parade of flags, led by the Stars and Stripes and including heritage flags which represent all the nationalities that make up this vibrant multiethnic community.

Queen of Peace Church was founded by Pastor Eugene Nolan. Father John Riley is the pastor emeritus and Father Celsus Collini is the current pastor for the congregation.

Mr. Speaker, in a time when urban violence and crime are crippling our cities, it is heart warming to see citizens come together to honor their church, their community, and their country. I would like to ask all Members of the U.S. House of Representatives to congratulate Queen of Peace Roman Catholic Church and wish their congregation continued success in the future.

RIGHT TO LIFE OF UNBORN CHILDREN

HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, on July 25, 1989, two women of northern Virginia, Ellen Commerce and her mother Maryclaire Ishee, presented a petition to me that had nearly 250,000 signatures. The signers were all women and each of them made it very clear that as women they support the right to life of unborn children.

The petition reads: "I am a woman. The National Organization for Women [NOW] does not represent me on the subject of abortion."

Mr. Speaker, it is critical to note that in a short period of time, approximately 2 months, Mrs. Commerce and Mrs. Ishee were able to collect close to 250,000—a number greater than the entire membership established by NOW over the past 23 years. In a purely grassroots, no budget, no overhead effort, these women have said clearly that abortion is not a women's rights issue. It is a human rights issue and the rights of the unborn child should be protected.

When presenting me with the petition, Mrs. Commerce made an eloquent heartfelt statement that I would like to have included in the RECORD:

Congressman Smith, my name is Ellen Commerce. These are my children, Neil, Jasmine, Matt, and Patrick. On April 19th these children's grandmother, Maryclaire Ishee and I started a petition to take issue, somehow, with the full page, paid advertisements appearing regularly in the Washington Post, which stated that "the majority of Americans support abortion."

After the N.O.W. sponsored a march for abortion on April 9th, pro-abortionists gleefully concluded that the male and female marchers represented the majority of Americans. Molly Yard, president of N.O.W. was quoted in the front page Post article the next day as saying "it is time for Congress to understand that we are the majority." Several weeks later, when I approached Mrs. Yard outside of the Supreme Court with the story of the signatures we were collecting, she told me, curiously, that "the National Organization for Women has never claimed to represent the majority of American women."

Indeed, N.O.W. has a membership, nationwide, of about 175,000. I think it is very significant that in a spontaneous, unfunded grass-roots petition drive, my mother and I were able to collect, in just a few weeks' time, the signatures of many more women than the entire membership of the 20-year-old N.O.W. The women who signed our petition are stating, emphatically, that the national organization for women does not represent them on the subject of abortion. We even have several former N.O.W. members among the signatories, who felt moved to identify themselves as womens' rights activists who simply could not stomach N.O.W.'s abortion platform.

One long letter I received, in fact, was from a woman who was publicly resigning from N.O.W. in order to pursue her interest in women's rights issues within the organization called Feminists For Life.

I feel that a strongly biased media has been highly successful in convincing prolifers that there must be a huge majority out there somewhere, who demand abortion as is and that, consequently, we must be somewhat timid and reserved in our advocacy of the most basic and precious right-to-life.

My mother and I, in starting this protest statement just had an intuition; a hunch, that that supposed majority might be an illusion. We knew that we were pro-life, and almost everyone we had ever talked to strongly opposed abortion.

I feel that our results (thus far) have exposed the tip of a very large iceberg of opinion that solidly supports the right of the unborn to live. The hundreds of thousands of women who have signed this petition want our politicians to know that we will enthusiastically support them if their leanings and their actions are pro-life, and that we will decisively oppose them, if they oppose and deny our nation's unborn children the right to live.

This petition drive is continuing, and in fact is gaining momentum. With the strict time limit we had imposed now removed, I invite all large and small pro-life organizations and churches of whatever denomination to make the wording of this statement available for their women members to sign, and to collect and return these signatures in batches to me, so that I might continue to present them to the pro-life caucus.

Congressman Smith, I truly appreciate your willingness to receive these signatures and all of your activities on behalf of the unborn.

Thank you very much.

ELLEN COMMERCE

SUCCESS IN MEETING THE CHALLENGE OF GLOBAL COMPETITIVENESS

HON. STEPHEN L. NEAL

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. NEAL of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, if the United States hopes to be competitive in the high technology economy of the future, it will be more important than ever that American industry and university researchers have a strong working relationship. We will need to move new technology from the campus laboratory to the private business production line.

At the same time, the increasingly close research relationship between business and academia raises questions and problems. How will the independence and the traditional academic functions of the university be affected?

Duke University has given considerable thought to the business-university relationship and has developed its own set of guidelines defining the partnership. An excellent article on this subject was published in the Winston-Salem Journal by two Duke officials, Michael D. Rierson and Judity K. Argon. Mr. Rierson is director of corporate relations and associate vice provost for research and development. Ms. Argon is director of the office of research support.

Mr. Speaker, to give my colleagues the benefit of these valuable insights, I ask that the article by Mr. Rierson and Ms. Argon in the Winston-Salem Journal of July 22, 1989, be reprinted in full in the RECORD. The article follows:

ACADEMIC RESEARCH AND TECHNOLOGICAL INNOVATION

These are heady times in the world of university/industry research. Multimillion dollar research relationships between business and university scientists are becoming a badge of achievement. Excitement over real scientific breakthroughs (superconductivity) and potential revolutionary advances (cold fusion) have heated to a boil the business of transferring technology from the research lab to the corporate product line.

All this activity raises a red flag that is becoming increasingly prominent in the skies above the changing university/industry relationship: Are we in danger of confusing private profit with the university's academic research and teaching mission?

The university/industry research relationship has grown fast and furiously, surpassing even the most optimistic expectations. During the 1970s and early 1980s this relationship developed from tentative sponsored research and clinical drug trial agreements to multimillion-dollar corporate deals such as the $65 million biomedical research contract between Monsanto and Washington University that has now generated dozens of patents. But the fear many critics expressed—that corporate presence in research universities would cause the education community to lose its academic balance and tilt toward lucrative corporate-oriented research—has not materialized.

Most major universities have instituted policies to govern their corporate research relationships and, thus, safeguard their academic mission. At Duke University, for example, a set of guidelines was adopted in May 1986 that established a clear definition of the university/industry partnership and its purpose.

No company sponsoring research on campus, for example, can require that information be kept confidential for more than 90 days. The decision to publish conclusions will always be determined by the university. The faculty always has final authority over the design and control of research, and no faculty member can be required to participate in a particular research effort as a condition of employment. Graduate students may not participate in proprietary research. A corporate research sponsor cannot restrict a faculty member's freedom to exchange ideas with colleagues or conduct research in related areas.

The point of these guidelines is to remind all parties that the business and academic cultures are different ones. It's the educational partner's responsibility to set down the fenceposts in this relationship. And as the relationship evolves and matures, we must pick up and move the fence accordingly. We now have a relationship whose pace is being set by the relentless forward march of technological change. We are seeing the business of transferring technology between universities and their business partners accelerate to include licenses, patents and joint research partnerships.

In this climate, each university must now have in place a governing body that shoud continually address new, innovative university/industry research partnerships and develop the necessary guidelines to lead us through this uncharted territory. In 1986 Duke formed a Research Policy Committee, composed of faculty from across the campus, to refine and develop additional research policies. What are the academic issues to be address when a faculty member wants to spin-off a promising research project to a start-up company in which he or she has an equity interest? What safeguards need to be built into this new technological world that asks scientists to be entrepreneurs one day and academic researchers the next? As the relationship changes the safeguards must struggle to stay current.

How did we arrive at the delicate balance between academic research and technological innovation? The rules changed in 1980 when a new federal law granted universities the right to retain ownership of and seek patent protection for the technology discovered as a result of federally funded research—the bulk of all research dollars on campus.

The 1980 patent law stipulated that universities must make a good faith effort to license technology to companies, which could develop and market products and technology for the benefit of society. It also provided that the university could receive royalty income from the licensing of its technology with inventors receiving at least 15 percent of the income of those patents. These provisions created a compelling incentive for the transfer of new technology and, in turn, for the creation of a variety of new more complex university/industry relationships.

The federal government continues to play an encouraging and nurturing role by fostering cooperation between federal labs, corporations and universities. For example, complementary corporate support must be demonstrated as a condition of many large federal grants. The National Science Foundation's Engineering Research Center (ERC) grant program requires a demonstration of substantial corporate research interest. Duke's ERC in Emerging Cardiovascular Technology has corporate support from Eli Lilly and General Electric, as well as an educational partners program in which 25 corporations participate.

Post-Sputnik federal support of higher education was substantial into the 1970s when government support lagged behind skyrocketing inflation. Now the federal government has slowed its financial commitment to higher education and quickened its role as matchmaker between education and industry—and that is a catalytic role that could be vital to our economy. How can we expect Zenith to compete head-to-head with the Japanese without the new ideas generated by university research and a vigorous relationship between campus and corporate scientists?

While the Federal government is our matchmaker, the university must set the reasonable guidelines for the business partnerships that will change at a pace equal to the advance of science. And that pace can be blinding. It could blind both parties to the fact that universities are in the business of pursuing education research and public service. We must harness the energy of technological innovation and focus it on progress, not profit. With a firm set of guidelines and an infrastructure that can respond to the changing university/industry relationship, we must constantly reaffirm to faculty, the business community and the public that we are in the business of education.

These trends come at a time when few people doubt that education and research programs are the twin engines pushing ahead the process of technological change and the enhanced competitiveness of American industry. National Science Foundation President Erich Bloch has succinctly defined the equation: "Success in meeting the challenge of global economic competitiveness depends on the vitality of our science and technology base. Technology depends on basic research. Basic research depends on universities, where it combines with education to produce both new knowledge and the people that the country needs in this competitive world." Universities cannot meet the challenge alone; nor can industry.

THE 25TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE DUTCHESS COUNTY COMMUNITY ACTION AGENCY

HON. HAMILTON FISH, JR.

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the 25th Anniversary of the Dutchess County Community Action Agency [DCCAA].

The DCCAA serves the low-income, handicapped, and elderly residents of Dutchess County in two basic ways.

First, staff and volunteers at the agency's four multiservice centers help individuals identify and apply for services to which they are entitled. DCCAA advocates help fill out forms, or represent their client's interests in negotiating with public or private agencies. Advocates of the DCCAA are also trained to assist clients in finding the help they need through programs and services both outside and within the agency.

Second, the agency develops and implements its own programs and services which are designed to address the specific unmet needs of the disadvantaged population. These programs include adult day care, transportation, housing, weatherization for low-income homes, advocacy for the developmentally disabled, and a rural dental program.

DCCAA administers a midday meal program for the indigent residents in the southern sector of the county and offers the Carrier Alert/Friendly Pal Program, in which letter carriers or phone volunteers will check on senior or disabled residents to ensure their well-being. There are also seasonal programs which include the distribution of holiday food baskets and the Adopt a Needy Family for Christmas Program.

It is important to note, Mr. Speaker, that the DCCAA is not a county agency. Instead, it is a private, not-for-profit organization which receives funding through government and private grants and contracts. Contributions of services and funds by community businesses, churches, service organizations, and individuals are the life-blood of DCCAA.

"People Helping People"—that is DCCAA's motto and it comes to life everyday for the people served by this agency. The contributions by organizations such as DCCAA enrich our communities and strengthen the fabric of our Nation. I am extemely proud of the Dutchess County Community Action Agency and I send out my sincerest congratulations on its 25th anniversary.

THE DEMOCRACY MOVEMENT IN MAINLAND CHINA—AN INFORMED VIEW FROM TAIWAN

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, the recent tumultuous events in the Peoples' Republic of China have shocked and appalled people around the world. The significance and long-term importance of these developments is being debated and analyzed in many quarters.

One recent important analysis of these events and their significance has been given by Dr. Shaw Yu-ming, the Director-General of the Government Information Office of the Republic of China in Taiwan in a speech at the World Affairs Council in Los Angeles on August 2.

Dr. Shaw brings solid academic credentials to this task. Born in northeast China, he was 10 years old when he came to Taiwan with his parents. He earned a bachelor of law degree from the National Chengchi University and then received his M.A. from the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy and his Ph.D. in history from the University of Chicago. He taught history at the University of Notre Dame for 9 years and was a research associate of the University of Chicago's Center for Far Eastern Studies.

In 1982 he returned to Taiwan to a succession of academic positions: Director of the Asia and World Institute, dean of the Graduate School of International Law and Diplomacy of the National Chengchi University, and director of the Institute of International Relations of the same university. He is a recognized scholar and has written widely on United States-East Asian relations, modern Chinese history, and United States foreign policy.

In April 1987, Dr. Shaw was appointed Director-General of the Government Information Office and official Government spokesman.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that Dr. Shaw's address be placed in the RECORD and I urge my colleagues in the Congress to give it serious attention.

THE REVOLUTION HAS DEVOURED ITS OWN CHILDREN: SOME THOUGHTS ON THE DEMOCRACY MOVEMENT IN MAINLAND CHINA

Mr. Chairman, Distinguished Guests, Ladies and Gentlemen:

I am truly impressed and honored that so many of you with such busy schedules found the time to attend this gathering and discuss issues relating to China; this fully reflects your genuine concern for China and the Chinese people.

You all know about the shocking events that took place in mainland China in early June this year: the Chinese Communists mobilized tanks, armored personnel carriers, and other weapons to massacre unarmed students and others who were demonstrating peacefully in Tienanmen Square in Peking, resulting in massive casualties. This was a rare tragedy in the history of mankind, in which a government massacred its own people. As news of the incident spread, the world responded with rage and condemnation, and the international news media launched an unbridled attack against the Chinese Communists' brutal actions. Over the past two months, Chinese people all over the globe have arisen to voice their rejection of the Chinese Communist regime. Chinese both at home and abroad have through this incident not only reached a consensus to do away with the Chinese Communist regime, but have also achieved a high degree of solidarity based on shared nationalistic feeling. This has profound and far-reaching historical significance.

I would like to offer you the following thoughts on this tragedy, for your reference.

Regarding the reasons behind this democracy movement on the mainland, there is no doubt that the political corruption, cultural isolation, and economic backwardness accumulated over 40 years of Communist rule, particularly in the present situation of inflation and wide gaps between rich and poor, has resulted in a high level of popular dissatisfaction. This has caused a feeling of disillusionment and hopelessness in mainland youth, students, and intellectuals, those most sensitive and attuned to events, those with the sharpest sense of justice and mission; to the point where they were ready to risk their own lives for what they believed in. But there was also another important reason: they were influenced by Taiwan's success story, and by the Republic of China's open policy toward the Chinese mainland. Since November 1987, over 500,000 people from Taiwan have been to the mainland for family visits, international conferences, sports competitions, newsgathering, and filmmaking, and have exercised a far-reaching influence on the people of the mainland. Taiwan's success story has been disseminated across the mainland through these channels, and was one of the motivating factors behind the mainland democracy movement.

The mainland democracy movement was launched by youths and students. To avoid giving the Communist authoriities an excuse for suppression, they staged sit-ins and hunger strikes to win the support and sympathy of the general population and people of other countries. Throughout the whole process, they did not use slogans voicing opposition to communism or socialism. They had good reason to stage such a mature and restrained demonstration. In 1956, Mao Tsetung launched the so-called "Hundred Flowers" campaign, whose slogan was "Let the hundred flowers bloom, and the hundred schools of thought contend." Mao used this campaign to get those with anti-communist sentiments to spill out their true feelings so that they could be readily identified and dealt with in one blow. They believed the "promises" of the Chinese Communists that those who spoke out would not be incriminated, and that what they said would be received as constructive criticism. Soon after, however, these intellectuals went from being "fresh flowers" to "poisonous weeds," and were subsequently purged. And the intense and violent political struggle that occurred during the Cultural Revolution of the 1960s and 70s, in which today's hero could well be tomorrow's felon, was an unprecedented phenomenon in human history. These are all reflections of the fickleness, unpredictability, and ruthlessness of the Chinese Communist regime. This is why students in this democracy movement attempted to use the most peaceful methods possible, and avoid the possibility of trumped-up charges against them. Ultimately, however, they did not escape the Chinese Communists' purging of dissidents through brutal suppression. For 40 years, the greatest tragedy of mainland China's intellectuals, has been how they have repeatedly been of the offerings sacrificed on mainland China's political altar, and how they have been unable to realize their ambitions and goals.

I personally believe that this student democratic movement can be considered a revolution to overthrow the communist system, and that it is not an effort at reform within the communist system. Although those demonstrating in mainland China did not, as already mentioned, call for the overthrow of the Chinese Communists, in no case did they voice support for the Chinese Communists. Their use of the slogan, "Give me democracy or give me death," harks back to the American revolutionary Patrick Henry's "Give me liberty or give me death." The "goddess of liberty" they erected in Tiananmen Square is further proof that what they were asking for was Western or American-style democracy. Accordingly, mainland Chinese students and scholars residing abroad, who were not subject to restrictions on their actions, called out slogans demanding the overthrow of the Chinese Communist dictatorship. It is reasonable to assume that the true demands of the students and others in mainland China are in fact the same as the mainland Chinese living abroad, namely, to overthrow the Chinese Communist dictatorship. Thus this is a revolutionary movement outside of the communist system, and this is the reason why the Chinese Communists had to suppress it with heavy weapons, something the Chinese Communists, including Teng Hsiao-p'ing, openly admit.

Some people in other countries as well as some overseas Chinese have expressed that the statements issued and actions taken by the government of the Republic of China on Taiwan during the period of the democratic movement came too late and were not strong enough. I would like at this time to respond to this. The ROC government has from the beginning followed this movement closely and studied various counterstrategies. However, in order to avoid giving the Chinese Communists a pretext to suppress the movement (for example, on the false grounds that Taiwan instigated the movement from behind the scenes), and bringing harm to the mainland Chinese students and others, we had to take an extremely cautious attitude. For this reason, our government did not make its first formal statement until May 21, one day after the Chinese Communists declared martial law in Peking and sent in troops. Our president, Lee Teng-hui, issued a very strong statement on June 4, after the Chinese Communists launched their all-out bloody suppression of the movement. Our government initiated a series of concrete measures three days later. On June 7, the government passed "Measures to Support the Mainland Chinese Democracy Movement." These measures included using every means available to break through the Chinese Communists' blackout on news regarding the Tienanmen massacre, and providing aid in kind for mainland Chinese students and scholars presently in foreign countries who have been deprived of their passports or stipends due to their anti-communist activities, among other measures. This program fully demonstrates the ROC government's sincerity and resolution in supporting our mainland compatriots.

After the "Peking Massacre," our President Lee Teng-hui pointed out that the concrete response that both the government and people of the Republic of China should adopt toward developments in mainland China is to strengthen political democratization and maintain economic prosperity in Taiwan, so as to further consolidate Taiwan's role as a base for future action. He indicated that we must respond to any disturbances on the Chinese mainland by maintaining a spirit of fighting turmoil by remaining firm ourselves. This will from the heart of the ROC's future mainland policy.

The ROC government's mainland policy will proceed as in the past, continuing to disseminate the "Taiwan Experience," under the premise of protecting our national security. It is our hope to use Taiwan's model of development as a basis for our goal of eventually achieving China's reunification under a free and democratic system with an equitable distribution of wealth.

After graduating from the university in Taiwan, I went to the United States to continue my studies in the areas of international relations and history in 1965. Before I entered governmental service in 1987, I held posts in a number of universities in the U.S. and the ROC for over 20 years. So I would now like, in the capacity of a student of contemporary Chinese politics and history, to make the following points regarding the future of mainland China.

I believe that, in the wake of the Tienanmen massacre, the Chinese Communists' "four modernizations" program faces a very gloomy future. When the Chinese Communists declared over a decade ago that they could "realize the modernization of agriculture, industry, national defense, and science and technology within this century," the ROC government pointed out that the basic condition for the realization of the "four modernizations" was political democratization. Without it, the Chinese Communists would never be more than an oppressive, tyrannical regime. The outbreak of the Tienanmen massacre is attributable to the Chinese Communists' total lack of democratic concepts and a democratic system. At present, intellectuals and Chinese with a sharp sense of conscience on the Chinese mainland have totally abandoned the Chinese Communist regime. Without the cooperation and support of the intellectuals and other angry souls, along with the tightening of foreign investment and technology transfers, plus the nearly unanimous contempt and implementation of sanctions toward the Chinese Communist regime by foreign governments, we can safely predict that the future of the "four modernizations," like the overall outlook for the Chinese Communists, is a dismal one, and the victory the ruling stratum has now temporarily claimed for itself will in the end be reversed.

When at critical moments in history Chinese people come to a consensus and resolution in their thinking and actions, the common wishes of the people will be realized. In 1905, for example, when Dr. Sun Yat-sen founded the T'ung-meng Hui, or Revolutionary Alliance, a predecessor of the Kuomintang, in Tokyo, Chinese intellectuals in China and abroad resolved to overthrow the Manchu government. Seven years later, the Manchu government was overthrown and the Republic of China established. Again in 1919, Peking's students and intellectuals made up their minds to bring down the northern warlords. Nine years later, Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek led a successful campaign against the warlords, and set up the National Government in Nanking. When the Japanese militarists invaded China in 1937, they incurred the hatred of all the people. Eight years later, China was victorious in the Sino-Japanese War. Chinese in mainland China, Taiwan, Hongkong, Macao, the United States, Canada, Europe, and the Asian-Pacific have all, in the wake of the Tienanmen massacre, come to a consensus, namely, to do away with the Communist Chinese tyranny. Based on historical experience, I personally believe that through the efforts of all the Chinese people, China will eventually be reunited under a free and democratic system.

Over the past 40 years, the government and people of the Republic of China on Taiwan have repeatedly stated that the Chinese Communists are a tyrannical regime that will ultimately be rejected by the people. Some foreign governments, scholars, and specialists have considered this view to be "propaganda motivated by an ulterior purpose." However, the "Peking Massacre" has fully proven our decades-old view to be correct. For this reason, I hope that the free world will in the future pay closer attention to the ROC's views on developments in mainland China, so that they can have a better understanding of the true situation on the mainland, and adjust their responses accordingly.

Ladies and Gentlemen: as mentioned earlier, the democracy movement in mainland China traces its beginnings to the "Hundred Flowers" movement of 1956, after which the democracy movement continued an unbroken development, wave by wave. Another climax in this movement that occurred before the "Peking Massacre" was the "Tienanmen Incident" of April 5, 1976, when students and intellectuals from all over China expressed their resolution to fight the fascist Community Chinese Regime to the bitter end. They once wrote a famous poem that contained the following lines:

Preparing to mourn, we hear the ghosts shriek;
The wolves laugh even as we weep.
Sprinkling blood in memory of the heroes that went before us,
We staunchly drew our swords.

This spirit of being ready to struggle and sacrifice for freedom and democracy brings to mind the words of an American poet who wrote about democracy, Walt Whiteman:

There is no week nor day nor hour,
When tyranny may not enter upon this country;
If the people lost their roughness and spirit of defiance—
Tyranny may always enter—
There is no charm, nor ban against it—
The only bar against it is a large resolute breed of men."

Ladies and Gentlemen, the Chinese Communist revolution has devoured its own children, but it has also produced countless fighters who have vowed to fight to their deaths to overthrow the Communist Chinese tyranny. The future history of China and of humanity will be written by these heroic fighters, and democracy will in the end conquer tyranny. I believe that because both the American and Chinese people possess countless fighters like these, democracy has a brilliant future ahead of it. Let us all salute our fighters for democracy.

I thank you.

LEGISLATION TO FUND SIMON WIESENTHAL CENTER

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speakr, today I am introducing legislation to provide a limited, one-time authorization for Federal funding for the Simon Wiesenthal Center's educational outreach programs at the new Museums of Tolerance. These programs will be designed for use in public schools throughout the country. The amount provided in the bill, $7.5 million for fiscal year 1990, will not be used for construction, and total less than 20 percent of the overall cost of the museum. The Wiesenthal Center has already raised over $30 million for the Museum of Tolerance, with a scheduled opening in 1990.

The Holocaust—the genocide of six million Jews in World War II Nazi Germany—continues to shock the conscience of our Nation and the peoples of the world.

One institution in our country, the largest of its kind, was founded in 1977 in Los Angeles, CA., to educate all sectors of society, particularly school-age children, about the events surrounding pre-Nazi Germany and the Holocaust. The Simon Wiesenthal Center, named in honor of the legendary Nazi hunter, is renowned throughout the world for its historical vision and educational endeavors. The Wiesenthal Center's programs do not end with the Holocaust: they seek to provide an understanding of civil rights, justice and morality in our society and in other countries as well.

The Simon Wiesenthal Center, a non-profit institution, contains books, films, videos and computers as resources for comprehending racism and human behavior in this country and abroad. In further fulfillment of its mission, the Simon Wiesenthal Center is currently undergoing a significant expansion, which includes the construction in Los Angeles of the new Beit HaShoah: Museum of Tolerance. In light of recent acts in our country indicating a resurgence in racism, the Wiesenthal Center counteracts intolerance. The Museum of Tolerance will challenge us to embrace tolerance as a means of preserving democracy in our society, and ensuring that the Holocaust will never be repeated.

In addition to its exhibits and educational programs regarding the Holocaust, the Museum of Tolerance will chronicle the Nazi persecution of other minorities during World War II, and contain exhibits addressing modern-day repression and the universal struggle for freedom, from our own civil rights movement to the fight for human dignity in other countries around the world. When completed, the Museum of Tolerance will serve as a major human rights and education resource center for Americans from all walks of life.

I urge my colleagues to support this worthy legislation.

TRIBUTE TO TUSTIN "MIND GAME" WINNERS

HON. BILL SCHUETTE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. SCHUETTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate seven young people from the Tustin Elementary School who recently won a State-wide "Odyssey of the Mind" competition. The seven students are sixth-graders Rylan Kahley, Mike Pacola, Lisa Black, Megan Anderson, Kelly Anderson, seventh-grader Cindy Hix, and eighth-grader Wendy Paramenter.

The competition consisted of two parts: problem solving and brainstorming. The problem solving portion of the competition required the students to pick a Greek mythical character and use that character to help sell a product or service. Brainstorming involved thinking creatively to come up with several different solutions to a problem. Principle James Cooper of the Tustin school summed up the valuable lessons learned from the competition when he said, "Our kids have found out that thinking games can be as rewarding as they are fun."

Because of their success, the Tustin elementary students were able to travel to Boulder, CO, in May to take part in the World Odyssey of the Mind competition. There they competed against students their own age from all 50 States as well as China, Canada, Mexico, and the Netherlands. They placed a very respectable 22d.

Mr. Speaker, and my colleagues in the House, please join me in congratulating these young people for a job very well done. It is students like these who give me great confidence in the future of our country and our world.

TO COMMEMORATE THE CENTENNIAL OF YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK

HON. RICHARD H. LEHMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, it is a very great honor to represent Yosemite National Park—a premier national park and World Heritage Site. Today I have introduced two pieces of legislation to commemorate Yosemite's 100th birthday. On October 1, 1890 President Benjamin Harrison signed into law an act to set-aside "reserved forest lands" surrounding Yosemite Valley. It is this date which has been formally recognized as the establishment of Yosemite as a national park for all the people of the United States.

My legislation—a joint resolution officially recognizing this centennial event and a bill which authorizes the strking of a Yosemite Centennial medal—pays tribute to what I believe is the finest national park in America. Covering over 1,200 square miles, Yosemite National Park lies in the Sierra Nevada mountains in central California with the San Joaquin Valley to the West and the Great Basin to the East. Yosemite contains the headwaters of the Tuolumne and Merced Rivers and is known worldwide for such landmarks as Half Dome, Bridalveil Fall, El Capitan and, of course, Yosemite Valley itself.

Yosemite's history and its geography are stories of the American people and our relationship to the landscape. As Yosemite's 100th birthday approaches, it is time to reread these stories of our past so that we can apply their lessons to our future.

John Muir came to Yosemite in the 1860's and was among the first to recognize that Yosemite Valley was a product of glacier movement. He described glaciers as nature's landscape architects, saying: "Here are the roots of all the life of the valleys, and here more simply than elsewhere is the eternal flux of Nature manifested. Ice changing to water, lakes to meadows, and mountains to plains." Muir noted: "God's glacial mills grind slowly, but they have been kept in motion long enough in California to grind sufficient soil for a glorious abundance of life * * *."

Historians say that native Americans first inhabited the magnificent landscape of Yosemite and the Sierra about 3,000 years ago. Ancestors of the Sierra Miwok, known as the Ahwahneechee or Yosemite Indians, entered higher elevations of the Sierra from the Central Valley of California. Non-Indian adventurers did not arrive until 1833 when, it is believed, the famous Joseph Walker party skirted the cliffs of Yosemite Valley in search of new furtrapping territory. In 1851 Maj. James D. Savage led the Mariposa Battalion into Yosemite Valley in pursuit of Indians.

The first tourists came to Yosemite in 1855 with a party organized by James M. Hutchings, who was the publisher of California Magazine. Hutchings' visit marked the beginning of Yosemite as an attraction for nature lovers and tourists. One of those early visitors to Yosemite was Horace Greeley, who wrote: "I know no single wonder of Nature on Earth which can claim a superiority over Yosemite." Landscape painters such as Albert Bierstadt and Thomas Moran lent their talents to idealized portraits of Yosemite and photographers such as C.C. Weed and Carleton Watkins exhibit their Yosemite works in New York galleries. It was only a matter of time until both protection and promotion of Yosemite became a cause for California and for the Nation.

Although Yosemite's official birthday is October 1, 1890, when Congress designated the region surrounding Yosemite Valley as a reserve, in a symbolic sense Yosemite is the first and oldest national park in the world. In 1864, a businessman wrote California Senator John Conness to request that he introduce a bill to preserve Yosemite Valley and the Mariposa Grove of Giant Sequoias—"to prevent occupation and especially to preserve the trees in the Valley from destruction." On June 30, 1864, President Abraham Lincoln signed into law the first scenic reservation in America for public enjoyment, which came to be known as the Yosemite Grant. The Federal Government granted Yosemite Valley and the Mariposa Big Trees, covering 60 square miles, to the State of California to preserve the area's outstanding scenic qualities. This first set-aside of land at Yosemite by the U.S. Government was the birth of the National Park System idea and the birth of State park systems throughout America.

California administration of Yosemite Valley and the Mariposa Big Trees continued until 1905–6 when California relinquished its ownership and President Theodore Roosevelt signed a Federal law accepting the return of the Yosemite Grant. The Yosemite Grant was thus combined with the 1890 back-country Federal forest reserve to constitute Yosemite National Park.

The years when Yosemite Valley and the Mariposa Grove were administered by California State commissioners were controversial ones. Yosemite Valley was a laboratory for the development of park management and conservation practices, and the results were often mixed. Frederick Law Olmsted was the first chairman of the Board of Yosemite Commissioners, and in 1866 the California legislature appropriated the sum of $2,000 for the management of the Yosemite Grant. In the decade preceding the grant, total visitation to Yosemite Valley barely exceeded 600 persons for the entire period. Ten years after the Yosemite Grant, visitation rose to 2,700 persons annually.

Complaints about Yosemite management were numerous, and reading about them more than a 100 years later gives one a very strong sense of deja vu. Access to and within the park was a serious problem, as were visitor accommodations. In order to generate revenue for visitor services and park improvements, lands and buildings were leased to private individuals. Yosemite's manager, known as the Guardian, was accused of favoritism in granting privileges and leases at Yosemite. River courses were changed and meadows were drained to allow cultivation in Yosemite Valley. Magnificent trees were cut to improve vistas and portions of the valley floor were fenced with barbed wire. Enormous controversy arose over the Yosemite Commission's efforts to divest the valley floor of settlers. Hotel proprietors were accused of pooling to boost rates.

Objections were voiced to the Yosemite Commission's park expansion proposal by individuals who feared State control of future central California water sources because of domination on the Yosemite board by southern California and San Francisco interests. John Muir came to Yosemite Valley during the State grant years and condemned the commercialism in Yosemite Valley—from fenced pastures to damage by sheep and lumbermen.

Eventually discontent with California's administration of the Yosemite Grant led to creation of the U.S. forest reserve surrounding Yosemite Valley, and for 16 years dual management coexisted. Yosemite Valley and the Mariposa Grove became a park within a park, with the valley and grove administered by State commissioners and the backcountry administered by the U.S. Army.

On October 1, 1990 we will celebrate the official creation of Yosemite National Park. We will acknowledge that the last 100 years of park administration have not been perfect and that most of today's problems have ancestors dating from the 19th century.

Over the course of the last 100 years at Yosemite, the size of Yosemite has diminished to accommodate mining and timber potential and to eliminate most private inholdings. Management policies at Yosemite have fluctuated—trying to walk the precarious tightrope between visitor use and preservation of the natural environment. In 1907, a bold U.S. Army major at Yosemite received permission from the Secretary of the Interior to ban automobiles from the park. Today, with annual visitation exceeding 3 million people, automobiles probably represent the single biggest threat to Yosemite National Park.

In 1913, the U.S. Congress enacted the Raker Act which allowed the construction of O'Shaughnessy Dam and the massive Hetch Hetchy hydroelectric system within the park. In 1988, Congress enacted new legislation to prohibit any expansion of the Hetch Hetchy reservoirs in Yosemite. Today Yosemite's prime concessioner is criticized for contributing to the urbanization of the park. At various times in the past, Yosemite embraced such anomalies as a petting zoo, a dance hall, a race track for Indian field days and a firefall from Glacier Point during evening park programs.

Through all the variations of State and Federal, military and civilian management, Yosemite National Park has survived the 19th and 20th centuries and has given millions of American families countless hours of enjoyment. The park's interpretive services, its museum, and its education programs have served as models for all of our national parks. Yosemite was said to be the favorite park of Stephen Mather, the first Director of the National Park Service, who set about making Yosemite the showplace of the National Park Service.

Americans have much to celebrate during Yosemite's centennial; as we approach the 21st century at Yosemite, we have even more to contemplate. The challenges of natural preservation in concert with public use at Yosemite have existed from the very beginning. In the late 1920's and 1930's, Yosemite Park Superintendent Charles Goff Thomson summed up these challenges very well. Thomson described it as reconciling two conflicting objectives * * * "First, the National Park Service is controlled by an earnest determination to preserve the parks for posterity * * *" "Our second responsibility," Thomson said, * * * "is to make Yosemite as useful as possible to the people of this generation * * *"

I urge my colleagues to join with me in commemoration of Yosemite National Park and our National Park Service whose very roots lie in this grand Sierra Nevada landscape.

A TRIBUTE TO THE COMMUNITY OF PACIFIC BEACH FOR ESTABLISHING THE ROSE CREEK COTTAGE AND MEETING HALL

HON. BILL LOWERY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. LOWERY of California. Mr. Speaker, the community of Pacific Beach, in California's 41st Congressional District, has set the standard for volunteerism and public-private partnership.

When the Evans family decided to remodel and expand the Catamaran Hotel in Mission Beach, they were kind enough to donate the 30-year-old wedding chapel to the Pacific Beach Town Council. The only provision was to find a suitable location and help in moving this historic building.

Pacific Beach Town Council President Jeff Sykes and Vice President Jim Moore found a small parcel of unused Navy land. They contacted my office for assistance in obtaining a lease on the property for saving this piece of beach area history.

After securing the lease, the Taylor family, Vern and his sister Emma, donated the financial resources to move and place the building at the new location along the Rose Creek Arboretum.

Once the building was in place, Jim Moore, who had become town council president began coordinating the effort to lay a foundation, landscape, hook up to city services, and complete the restoration.

The Daley family generously provided grading of the entire property and asphalt paving of the parking lot at no charge.

Mr. Speaker, we would be remiss if we did not recognize the assistance from the San Diego Job Corps. Working on weekdays and weekends Jim Moore and Job Corps participants committed themselves to innumerable hours of pure physical labor to make the restoration a reality.

There were many members of the town council and the community who donated time and resources. I would like to acknowledge and thank all of those very special people.

The Pacific Beach community and town council have demonstrated what can be accomplished with volunteer initiative and devotion. The move and restoration of what is not called the "Rose Creek Cottage and Meeting Hall," is a solid symbol of the community pride that makes this country great. Mr. Speaker, please join me in saluting this community, its many valuable unselfish friends and supporters in an outstanding accomplishment.

100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE RIDGWAY FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH

HON. GLENN POSHARD

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. POSHARD. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to take this opportunity to congratulate the Ridgway First Baptist Church on its 100th anniversary. Ridgeway is a town of 1,245 people in Gallatin County, IL. Some of you may know it better as the Popcorn Capital of the World, but it's a town well known for caring and giving people.

The First Baptist Church is a fine example of that spirit. The church will begin the celebration of its 100th anniversary this September, and it won't end until August of next year. The members of the Ridgway First Baptist Church have worked hard to achieve this milestone, and are rightfully proud of their accomplishment.

Since its humble beginnings in 1890, the church has grown to be the largest Protestant church in Ridgway. Throughout its 100 years, church members have supported a full-time minister to meet the needs of the congregation. Church members have also given generously enough to send missionaries around the world to share the spirit which keeps the Ridgway First Baptist Church alive.

That spirit can also be seen through support of the annual Popcorn Days Festival, where the church annually sponsors a float in the parade. The church also supports young athletes in the community by holding an annual rabbit fry for the basketball team.

At a time when bigger seems to be better, it's wonderful to see small can at times be stronger, and the Ridgway First Baptist Church shows us the way. When small town America is losing its identity, sometimes unable to support the institutions that are its lifeblood, the church plays an important role in keeping rural America alive. It provides a place for townspeople to meet, worship, and share, and makes life better, and the Ridgway First Baptist Church has been doing that for the last 100 years.

The church is committed to staying together for the next 100 years, and it will at that time be the privilege of some other Member of Congress to congratulate them. But it is certainly a great honor for me now to offer my congratuations and thanks, and tell the members of the Ridgway First Baptist Church how proud I am to represent them in Congress.

CONGRESSIONAL REFORM

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, in late December of 1987, the House and Senate dropped a mammoth $600-plus billion CR and a 1,000-plus page budget reconciliation bill on the President's desk a few days before Christmas. He signed both. The President had won some battles and the Congress had won others. Some taxes were raised, some spending was cut. A senior official at the Department of Agriculture, who had angered a senior Member of Congress, had his job eliminated—a task considered so vital to the welfare of the Union that it tied up the CR conference for 2 days.

It was not long before some of the chicanery hidden in these huge bills bubbled to the surface. One Senator did a favor for a colleague by including a paragraph to force a flamboyant and abrasive publisher to sell his newspaper. A Congressman took two airplanes away from the Defense Intelligence Agency as retribution for their insulting refusal to fly his girlfriend. A powerful Senator was damaged by revelations that he had earmarked $8 million to build Hebrew schools in France, an appropriation he was eventually forced to rescind.

These abuses were widely reported by many newspapers and television networks The stories did not simply tarnish the individuals involved, they were a national embarassment for the Congress as an institution.

Disgust over the CR led to congressional efforts to stop this procedural abuse. A group of House Democrats wrote the Speaker to protest use of the CR. A group of Senators sent a similar letter to the President. On the night of December 22, while the CR was winding its way through Congress, I rounded up 146 signatures on a letter to Mr. Reagan asking him to announce in his State of the Union Address that he would veto any omnibus CR sent to him for fiscal year 1989. For our part, we pledged to uphold any such veto. As a result of all these efforts and attention, the President did make such a pledge in his January address.

Congress moved expeditiously in 1988, and on the last day of September passed the last of the 13 appropriations bills separately and on time. For the first time in 14 years, the use of a Continuing Resolution was avoided, government agencies were funded on time, and the annual spectacle of passing short-term funding extensions, shutting down the government for a day or two, and otherwise acting like schoolyard children was avoided.

Unfortunately, as the August recess approaches it is clear that Congress has decided to return to its bad habits. While the House has awoken from its pay raise and ethics induced lethargy to report out spending bills at a dizzying rate in the last month, we nonetheless lag behind last year's barely adequate pace, and we have failed to meet the deadlines established by law in the Budget Act.

By law, the House was to complete all appropriations bills by June 30, a deadline we will miss by 5 weeks. Last year, by comparison, all 13 were passed by June 29. Unless a redoubled effort is made in September, a CR looms as all but a reality. However, it is neither impossible or unrealistic to meet this deadline. To do so will require the Senate to act expeditiously on all 13 measures, and will require the House to immediately conference these bills, settle all differences, and avoid the instinct to delay and use the weapon of last minute brinksmanship.

The CR is a dangerous and unnecessary device. By combining completely unrelated Federal obligations into one huge bill which no one has read and which is protected from amendment by a closed rule, the CR directly undermines efforts at rational policymaking. Eleventh-hour CR's effectively prevent the Executive from exercising his constitutional responsibility to act as a check against profligacy and waste. CR's present the Executive with an unacceptable dilemma—either sign the bill, or be blamed for shutting down the Government. The President of the United States should never be forced to make such a choice.

It is not impossible to avoid a CR for fiscal year 1990, all it will take is a little hard work, courage, and resolve. Although we are at least 5 weeks behind schedule, we are considerably ahead of the record for the prior 2 years and an all out effort in September could result in Congress meeting its obligations under the law and to the American people. Avoiding the CR is important—to rely again on that expedient device is to admit our incompetence before the Nation and the world.

SHORT HISTORY OF APPROPRIATIONS

FISCAL YEAR 1987

The House of Representatives passed 11 of the 13 appropriations bills as freestanding measures—the first on June 25th, 1986, the eleventh on September 12th. Two measures reported by the full committee in August were never considered on the floor as separate measures but were dumped into an omnibus CR, containing all 13 measures (including three conference reports) which passed the House on September 25th and was cleared for the President on October 17th.

FISCAL YEAR 1988

The House passed 10 of the 13 bills as freestanding measures—the first carried on June 24th, 1987, the tenth on September 22nd. Three measures approved by the full committee were never considered as freestanding measures on the House floor but were dumped in the CR on December 3rd. On December 22nd a CR containing all 13 bills was cleared for the President.

FISCAL YEAR 1989

Working efficiently, the House cleared all 13 bills as freestanding measures—the first carried on May 17th, 1988, the last on June 29th. All thirteen were enacted into law as separate measures by October 1st for the first time in 14 years.

After doing virtually nothing for six months, the House has begun aggressively passing appropriations bills. The first carried on June 28th, 1989, the last is expected to pass on August 4th. The House is thus running five weeks behind its statutory deadlines and the pace adhered to last year, but doing considerably better than in FY88 and FY87.

THE U.S. DELEGATION WINS ONE AT THE ITU

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, the International Telecommunications Union, a specialized agency of the United Nations, completed its plenipotentiary conference on June 29 after 6 weeks of intense negotiations. Whether it was the new constitution, the election of new officers, the reorganization proposals, or the budget, I am pleased to report that the interests of the United States were very well served.

The perception of the United States as the unheeding giant ignoring the needs of others has been seriously undermined. And while damage control lurked in many a mind, we were able to seize some measure of leadership and participate in the establishment of a new bureau for technical assistance which will serve to focus the talents of this unique agency and hopefully bring to bear the full measure of its potential assistance to serve not only the needs of the developing world but also the interests of the major donors in these activities. At a time when increasing trade opportunities for American business abroad is a paramount national objective, intimate participation of the United States in the implementation of this decision of the conference can turn this new entity into a trade tool for our country.

Besides thwarting premature reorganization of portions of the ITU where U.S. interests principally lie as well as other attempts to shift the direction of the agency in ways most menacing to our interests, the members of the union reelected Mr. Richard Kirby, from the United States, to the head the Consulative Committee on International Radio despite intense pressure from the Secretariat. They enthusiastically supported, by a wider margin, the renewal of U.S. membership on the Administrative Council, and elected a new Secretary General who enjoyed strong and overt U.S. support.

The conference could have gone in a very different direction by granting membership to the Palestine Liberation Organization, by expelling Israel from its midst, or even by forcing the conference to address the so-called 50/50 arrangements governing the apportionment of revenues generated by international telephone traffic. There is no doubt that the majority bloc of developing countries could have forced the adoption of an overall budget that suited their political needs while thumbing their noses at financial concerns of major donors. They could have adopted a technical assistance package that directly threatened the integrity of existing activities.

Needless to say, many factors contributed to the more favorable, perhaps even positive, outcome of this meeting. However, I believe that the work and determination of Ambassador Travis Marshall made a fundamental difference. As the head of the U.S. delegation, he played a crucial role in convincing key factions of the conference of the necessity to give a little in order to achieve something that everyone could support. His was an arduous task of reconciling a multiplicity of views within our own delegation with the various strains running throughout the membership of the union. His personal style and commitment to the process smoothed many a sharp edge.

As he concludes his work at the Department of State, Ambassador Marshall joins a small group of American citizens who have distinguished themselves by taking precious time from their businesses to share their knowledge and expertise to represent the United States.

In the years to come, communications and information issues will come to dwarf their own relevance today. As our Nation continues to globalize its economy, as we increase our promotion of democratic values around the planet, the edge we enjoy thanks to our leadership in this field will become more dramatically obvious and crucial.

VERY REVEREND JOSEPH T. CAHILL RETIRES AS PRESIDENT OF ST. JOHN'S UNIVERSITY

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay special tribute to the Very Reverend Joseph T. Cahill, C.M., who will be leaving the presidency of St. John's University in New York after 24 years of dedicated and meritorious service.

During his time as president of St. John's, Father Cahill directed a major revision of the university's various undergraduate curricula. This resulted in a wide range of career-oriented programs of study, which were offered along with the traditional courses of study in the liberal arts and sciences, and which enabled university graduates to gain immediate access to the complicated American job market. The substantial changes in undergraduate curricula, coupled with the new recruitment operation, yielded steady increases in St. John's enrollment.

In 1970, construction began on a new law building on the Queens campus to house the prestigious law school. The following year Father Cahill was instrumental in acquiring the property of the former Notre Dame College for a new St. John's campus on Staten Island. Originally designed as a facility for 1,000 students, this unit of the university has an enrollment now in excess of 2,500.

Born in Philadelphia, PA, on June 1, 1919, Father Cahill was ordained in 1946 following studies at St. Joseph's College in Princeton, NJ, and at Mary Immaculate Seminary in Northampton, PA. After ordination, Father Cahill spent 7 years at St. Joseph's as a teacher of history and director of dramatics.

In 1953, he was assigned to Niagara University where he continued teaching. He became moderator of athletics at Niagara in 1956, and was named dean of the graduate school and the school of education in 1958. The following year, he became academic vice president and dean of the Niagara University college of liberal arts and sciences.

Father Cahill was named president of St. Joseph's College in 1962, and 2 years later he assumed the presidency of Niagara University. He was appointed president of St. John's University on July 16, 1965, and is the only person to serve as president of three different institutions of higher learning in a single year.

St. John's University's dramatic success story would have been impossible without the keen administrative leadership of the Very Reverend Joseph T. Cahill, C.M. Through it all, he has never lost sight of the purpose of a university. Father Cahill is one of those rare university presidents who, despite a demanding schedule and enormous pressures, finds time every semester to teach courses in Western civilization to maximum capacity classes. We in Queens are proud and lucky to have him among us. I would like all of my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join me in honoring the Very Reverend Joseph T. Cahill and commending him for his outstanding service.

INTRODUCTION OF THE VETERANS HEALTH PROFESSIONALS EDUCATIONAL AMENDMENTS ACT OF 1989

HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, as the vice chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Subcommittee on Education, Training, and Employment, today I am introducing legislation, the Veterans Health Professionals Educational Amendments Act of 1989, which will add an additional benefit to the existing Montgomery GI Educational Assistance Program for the Selected Guard and Reserve component.

Under the Montgomery GI bill, most reservists are now eligible to receive $5,040 from the Department of Defense to finance their undergraduate studies. The legislation I am introducing will enable the Department of Veterans Affairs [DVA] to provide an additional $400 per month to a reservist who majors in a health-care profession and in return agrees to work in a VA health-care facility for a limited time. The DVA will be given the authority to identify their staffing shortages and target the benefit accordingly.

The bill is intended to provide benefits only for the time period when the student is taking their health related courses—generally for the last 2 years of a 4-year program. The benefit can be awarded to individuals pursuing baccalaureate, associate, or technical degrees.

In order to receive this added benefit, a recipient must sign a contract with the DVA stating that they will serve 1 year in a VA health-care facility for every year of benefits they receive. If the reservist reneges on the agreement, he or she must repay the benefit amount, plus interest and penalty, to the DVA.

The goal of this legislation is to supply the DVA with sufficient recruiting tools to attract much needed health-care professionals—particularly nurses. We are all aware of the difficulty the VA has had in recruiting and retaining nursing personnel, but it is also true that similar shortages exist in other professions. According to the "1988 VA Survey of Health Occupational Staff," VA health-care facilities nationwide are experiencing a 25-percent vacancy rate in physical therapy positions, a 20 percent vacancy rate in occupational therapy positions, and a 8-percent vacancy rate in pharmacy positions, as compared to a 5-percent vacancy rate in nursing staff.

Mr. Speaker, the need to provide incentives for individuals to choose health careers and to work in VA facilities is apparent. The advantages of this program will be threefold: the value of the Selected Guard and Reserve GI Educational Program is increased, the VA is guaranteed employees once they accept the benefit, and the dwindling pool of health care professionals is increased nationwide.

I would like to thank the original cosponsors of this bill, the chairman and vice chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, SONNY MONTGOMERY and BOB STUMP, and the chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Subcommittee on Education, Training, and Employment, TIM PENNY, for their assistance and support in crafting this bill. I would appreciate the support of my colleagues on this legislation and encourage Members to join me in sponsoring the Veterans Health Professionals Educational Amendments Act of 1989.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. HAMILTON FISH, JR.

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I was absent on July 28 and July 31 and missed votes. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea" on rollcall votes 188, 190, and 192, 191, and "no" on rollcall vote 186.

THE CLEAN CONSULTANTS ACT OF 1989—POLITICAL INFLUENCE PEDDLING AND CONSULTANT ABUSES MUST STOP

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Employment and Housing Subcommittee which has been conducting the congressional investigation of serious abuses at the Department of Housing and Urban Development [HUD], I have been shocked and outraged at the widespread use of highly paid political consultants by developers and others seeking Federal funds. Political influence peddling and many of the other serious abuses that we have discovered at HUD have been encouraged, fostered, supported, and—in some cases—caused by consultants.

In our investigation of HUD, we have found a complete distortion of the intention of Congress as political consultants have turned the system on its head. In the moderate rehabilitation program at HUD, for example, local housing authorities should identify the need for this type of housing and then seek Federal funds to get it. What we found is the exact opposite. Developers and their highly paid political consultants identified projects which were highly profitable, secured support for these projects in Washington through influence peddlers, and then told local housing authorities they were developing the project.

We have enacted programs to help Americans of modest means achieve the American dream of adequate, affordable housing, but the system we found at HUD distorted and undermined that dream. Programs that were intended to direct scarce resources to areas of the greatest need, instead were doled out to projects which had the best connected political consultants.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment to the Interior appropriations bill by the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, Mr. BYRD, takes an important step toward eliminating the serious abuses we have found at HUD. Today, together with a number of our distinguished colleagues, I am introducing legislation similar to the Byrd amendment here in the House. Our version includes a number of minor changes which have been suggested by Senator BYRD's staff and by the Office of Management and Budget which supports the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, our legislation makes a number of important changes regarding the use of consultants in dealing with Congress and agencies of the Federal Government.

First, the bill prohibits recipients of Federal grants, contracts, loans, or cooperative agreements from using Federal funds to pay consultants—directly or indirectly—in order to influence executive or legislation decisionmaking in connection with the Federal award.

Second, the bill requires that any person or organization requesting or receiving Federal funds to report each quarter to the Federal agency involved the name of any lobbyist of consultant paid with non-Federal funds, the amounts paid, and the purpose for which they were paid. This information will be made public.

To enforce these provisions, penalties of up to $100,000 may be imposed and the heads of Federal Government agencies will have the authority to cancel contracts, grants, or loans to those who violate the provisions of the bill.

Our legislation does not prohibit reasonable payments to consultants for professional and technical services in connection with meeting the requirements for receiving Federal contracts, grants, or loans, but it does eliminate the use of Federal funds for political influence peddling.

Mr. Speaker, there are many other grave problems that we have uncovered in our investigation of HUD and others continue to arise as our investigation continues. This legislation deals with only one of those problems—political influence peddling—but it is among the most serious and troubling of the problems we have discovered. It is a problem that we can and must correct.

Mr. Speaker, I urge our colleagues in the Congress to join us in cosponsoring this legislation.

TRIBUTE TO HOMER UNITED METHODIST CHURCH

HON. BILL SCHUETTE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. SCHUETTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the congregation of the Homer United Methodist Church, which is celebrating its centennial anniversary this year. Many special events are planned for the centennial celebration, including the dedication of a new steeple, a homecoming for past pastors of the congregation, and the opening of the 1889 cornerstone, which will then be relayed with updated information.

The church was destroyed in 1890 by a cyclone, but it was soon rebuilt and has since undergone at least four major building programs. Over 50 ministers have served this illustrious congregation, which in some families stretches back to the days when Homer was originally carved out of the Michigan wilderness.

The members of Homer Methodist have performed many community services and religious events over the years. One popular event, held annually in December, is the "holy walk." It is a reenactment of the events in Bethlehem at the time of the birth of Jesus. This event draws over 3,000 people each holiday season.

Mr. Speaker, and my colleagues in the House, please join me in congratulating Homer United Methodist Church on this milestone in its history and wishing the church and its congregation continued prosperity as it pursues the spiritual, intellectual, and physical excellence which make Homer a great place to live and work.

IN HONOR OF MARK WELLMAN AND MIKE CORBETT'S ASCENT OF EL CAPITAN

HON. RICHARD H. LEHMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I wish to pay tribute today to two courageous men who exemplify the very best spirit of America. Mark Wellman is a 29-year-old ranger naturalist in Yosemite National Park. He is also a paraplegic who became disabled from a 50-foot fall down a cliff in the John Muir Wilderness 7 years ago. On July 26, 1989 Mark and his companion Mike Corbett, a staff member of the Yosemite medical clinic, made history when they completed their ascent of El Capitan.

As the Congressman who represents Yosemite National Park, I am especially hornored to represent these outstanding Americans. I know that the challenges faced by climbers are difficult under any condition. El Capitan is considered to be one of the most difficult climbs in the world. Mark Wellman, with the assistance of Mike Corbett, faced the challenge of El Capitan and conquered it. In doing so, these men demonstrated that the vistas for disabled Americans are unlimited—that strong spirits are more important than strong bodies.

Mr. Speaker, Mark Wellman and Mike Corbett serve as an inspiration to all Americans. It is a privilege to honor and congratulate them today.

HONORING THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE B-24 LIBERATOR BOMBER

HON. BILL LOWERY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. LOWERY of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the 50th anniversary of the B-24 Liberator bomber. On September 20, 1989, one of the last flying B-24's will arrive in San Diego at the Convair plant where these historic pieces of World War II lore were first built.

In 1939, on the eve of the Second World War, the Consolidated Aircraft Corp. of San Diego was called upon to design and produce a strategic bomber. This company, later to become Convair brought the B-24 from concept to production in only 9 months, a near industrial miracle.

Over 18,000 bombers were produced, making the B-24 the most extensively produced airplane in American aviation history. The B-24 was widely used by the Navy, Air Force, and RAF. This workhorse was used in every theater of World War II and had 89 confirmed U-boat kills to its credit. Thus, the Liberator not only served a valuable strategic function, but also helped make the shipping lanes safe for essential allied supplies.

The B-24 has had many distinguished pilots. Actor James Stewart was a B-24 pilot, and an 8th Air Force squadron commander. Senator LLOYD BENTSEN served as a B-24 pilot as well. In addition to these famous pilots, Stanly Pace, chief executive officer of General Dynamics, piloted one of these historic planes.

The B-24 that will appear at the anniversary celebration was painstakingly restored by the joint efforts of private individuals, and General Dynamics. This historic celebration has come to fruition due to the dauntless efforts of the International B-24 Liberator Club, Convair, General Dynamics, and the San Diego Aerospace Museum.

Mr. Speaker, distinguished colleagues, please join me in honoring the B-24, and the thousands of people associated with this historic plane as an essential part of the fight for freedom as they gather in San Diego from September 20 to 24 to celebrate the B-24's 50th anniversary.

A TRIBUTE TO MR. BOSCO SIMICH

HON. GLENN POSHARD

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. POSHARD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to Mr. Bosco Simich, upon the 50th anniversary of his arrival to the United States.

Mr. Simich, like many other immigrants to this great country, overcame numerous obstacles to reach the United States and become a citizen.

At age 13, he left his homeland of Yugoslavia by boat, to escape Hitler's rampage throughout Europe. His long, lonesome journey across the ocean was soon forgotten as the boat entered New York Harbor and Simich was awestruck by his first sight of the Statue of Liberty.

Soon after his arrival, he joined his father operating the American Bakery in Eldorado, IL. The move to Eldorado was full of firsts for Bosco Simich, including his first taste of ice cream, his first Coca-Cola, and his first chance to live in a house which had electricity. Although he could not speak English, he enrolled in the sixth grade the week following his arrival, and only 5 years later, he was fighting for his new country in the Asiatic Pacific as a member of the U.S. Navy.

Upon his honorable discharge, Simich became a partner in his father's business, and eventually became a U.S. citizen. At about that same time, Mr. Simich was married, and began working to bring members of his family, as well as other Yugoslavians, to the United States. Many immigrants owe their freedom to the efforts of this man.

Mr. Simich not only provided for himself, but provided the opportunity for his son and daughter to go to college and receive advanced degrees, inspiring them to be successful in their own right.

Mr. Bosco Simich is a shining example of the classic American success story which makes our country so great. Against considerable odds, Mr. Simich worked to achieve the dream and promise offered to anyone willing to make the effort and pay the price. His life story is an inspiration to me and any other person who knows the words on the Statue of Liberty are more than letters strung together, that they mean something very real in the lives of millions who now call this country home.

I am honored to represent Mr. Simich in the U.S. Congress.

THE INNOCENT VICTIMS OF THE AFGHAN WAR

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, a lot has been written about the current state of affairs in war-torn Afghanistan. News reports depict the nation locked in an intense civil conflict following the pullout of Soviet troops in February. What has not been given enough attention though is the suffering that many innocent Afghans, in particular its women and children, have been subjected to during the 10-year war.

Recent statistics and eyewitness reports from people who have visited the area tell of horrible conditions facing the vast numbers of refugees who have fled the violence and bloodshed. Currently, there are 3 million registered refugees in Pakistan, 2 million in Iran, and 2 million homeless refugees inside the borders of Afghanistan. Of these 7 million refugees, 75 percent are women and children. For the most part, the women and children who are interned in the camps live in squalid and crowded conditions. Families can only consume the staples their ration books will allow, such as edible oil, wheat, sugar, tea, and kerosene.

Their misery in the camps is compounded by limited access to adequate health care and basic schooling. In 1 year alone, Afghanistan had the highest infant mortality rate, the highest under-5 mortality rate, and one of the highest maternal mortality rates in the world. The illiteracy rate among Afghan women is also astoundingly high, at about 90 percent. The tragedy is that these families cannot return to their homes because they fear the presence of millions of antipersonnel mines installed by the Soviets along the 40- to 50-mile Afghan-Pakistan border.

The refugees are not the only victims of this war. A massive number of human rights violations have been committed on thousands of citizens for far too many years. Immediately after the coup which toppled the government of President Daoud, at least 200 former government elites and members of the royal family were arrested and held incommunicado in primitive Afghan prisons. Prisoners were denied a trial and prison officials told their families that they had been killed. Recently, however, several dead prisoners who disappeared after the 1978 coup were found and reunited with their families.

We have heard from the family of Mr. Badruddin Sharafi, who was a University of Texas graduate, president of the Afghan Petroleum Co. and subsequently a member of the Shansab Service until his disappearance on June 9, 1979. No documentation is available on the whereabouts of this Afghan citizen, and his wife, three children, mother and other family members do not know whether to mourn his death or look forward to his homecoming.

In addition, throughout the past decade thousands of children have been taken from their homes and families in Afghanistan and have been deported to the Soviet Union where they have received intensive reeducation against their own culture. Today, there are over 30,000 Afghani children, some as young as 9 years old, being held in these special schools. Despite the Soviet pullout, over 800 children were recently deported in 1 day.

Arbitrary arrests and disappeared persons, torture, executions, the denial of fair trials and the right of citizens to change their government remains commonplace in Afghanistan today. While the freedom fighters battle for control of the country, women and children remain the most adversely affected. While many families anxiously await word about the whereabouts of their loved ones, these same prisoners linger in prisons awaiting their freedom. In addition, thousands of Afghan children are being forcibly taken from their families. These innocent victims are caught in the middle of political chaos that they did not seek nor do they deserve. The illegal Afghan Government must recognize that respect for human rights does not just belong to the women and children in Afghanistan. It belongs to us all.

LAWRENCE E. HITE

HON. NICK JOE RAHALL II

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Mr. Larry Hite of Ona, WV, who will soon complete his term as president of the Independent Insurance Agents of America.

President of Insurance Systems Inc., Mr. Hite was elected president of the Independent Insurance Agents of America in September 1988. As cochairman of the Future One Project Supervision Committee, and executive committee liaison to agency contracts, Government affairs, young agents, and IIAA/ISO senior company forum committees, Mr. Hite has been extremely involved in the many substantive changes within the insurance industry in the last year.

He served as chairman of IIAA's political action committee, Insurpac, from 1983 to 1985 and was a member of IIAA's steering committee. He also served as executive committee liaison to the communications, finance, personal lines and planning coordination, technical conference committees.

But being extremely busy and on the go is nothing new to Mr. Hite. He has served as past State national director and is a past president of the Independent Insurance Agents of West Virginia. In 1983, he received the West Virginia IIAA Agent of the Year Award. Mr. Hite is also a past president of the Rotary Club of Huntington, WV.

Mr. Speaker, Larry Hite's dedication to his association should be commended, especially in light of the personal sacrifices he has made for his fellow agents. He has guided the Independent Insurance Agents of America through a turbulent year, both on Capitol Hill and in State capitals across the country.

Mr. Hite's community spirit and civic activism are an inspiration to all. Although his term as president of the IIAA will soon come to a close, his leadership and ability will live on, both in the community and as a member of the executive committee of the Independent Insurance Agents of America.

PROTECTING THE FLAG AND THE CONSTITUTION

HON. STEPHEN L. NEAL

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. NEAL of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, in view of the Supreme Court's recent decision in Texas versus Johnson, many of us are looking for a way to protect the American flag. President Bush and others have proposed constitutional amendments. Some believe that statutory law amendments would be sufficient.

Laurence H. Tribe, a professor of constitutional law at Harvard University, is among those contending that we protect the flag by statute. He made a strong argument for this strategy in a recent article in the New York Times.

Professor Tribe believes that a law prohibiting deliberate flag mutilation would pass constitutional muster if it simply made physical abuse of the flag—for any reason—a crime. Such a law would not make reference to the flag burner's ideas or motivation and thus, in Professor Tribe's opinion, would not raise first amendment free speech issues.

The problem in Texas versus Johnson, he says, is that Texas sought to punish Gregory Lee Johnson for "the views he publicly expressed in burning the flag instead of punishing him for the bare fact of his desecration of that special object."

Protecting the flag by statute would be much preferable to the drastic remedy of a constitutional amendment. For one thing, it could take years to get a constitutional amendment protecting the flag ratified by three-fourths of the State legislatures. A flag-destruction statute could be approved in a matter of days. And Mr. Speaker, we must never forget that our Bill of Rights protects our God-given freedom. Quick passage of a constitutionally sound statute may provide the strongest defense of this freedom and our flag.

Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of those of us who are struggling with this issue, I ask that Professor Tribe's article from the July 3, 1989, New York Times be printed in full in the RECORD.

The article follows:

GIVE OLD GLORY A BREAK: PROTECT IT—AND IDEAS

CAMBRIDGE, MASS.—As we reflect on the meaning of the American flag, who can doubt the importance of a national debate about the pros and cons of a constitutional amendment to protect it?

After all, isn't an amendment the only proper way to overcome a Supreme Court interpretation of that document? And hasn't the Court interpreted the Constitution to mean that Congress and the states are powerless to protect the flag from deliberate mutilation or wanton destruction?

I am convinced that this misstates the issue, that defenders of what the Court actually held in Texas v. Johnson if they think they must defend a supposed "right" to burn the flag as a form of protest, and that crities of the ruling err as seriously if they suppose they must defend existing laws that ban flag desecration.

Properly understood, the Court's decision upheld no right to desecrate the flag, even in political protest, but merely required that Government protection of the flag be separated from Government suppression of detested views.

Texas went astray by punishing Gregory Lee Johnson for the views he publicly expressed in burning the flag instead of punishing him for the bare fact of his desecration of that special object. For the Texas law made it a crime to mistreat the flag so as to "seriously offend" likely observers.

In a little noted passage, the Court majority observed that the case would have been altogether different if the state had punished Mr. Johnson on the simple ground that he had physically mistreated something that the majority of the people had chosen by law to protect.

Just as many people would understandably want to punish individuals who wantonly destroy historical artifacts in private, so could they wish to protect the flag in all places.

Look at how people are rallying against the deliberate poisoning of the Treaty Oak in Austin, a landmark that took root before Columbus set sail of the New World. The point of punishing whoever was responsible for that tragedy need not be to censor the views he or she expressed. The point is simply to give force to the community's shared sense that the object is worthy of special protection.

Thus, if a flag desecration law were written and enforced without regard to the presence or absence of any message, government could defend the values embodied in the flag without addressing the values expressed by its destruction. I believe the Court would uphold such a law.

When government undertakes to protect a special place or symbol, it need not focus on whatever message might be expressed by someone who defaces the object of such protection. The same protective impulse that animates laws against the desecration of a gravesite may properly animate laws against desecration of a flag that might cover a casket.

When government legislates to protect special places or symbols, the Constitution does not require it to ignore emotions, whether of grief or patriotism.

What is vital from a First Amendment perspective is that, when we single out particular symbolic objects for special protection, we avoid singling out those occasions on which such objects are destroyed publicly or in a manner that expresses contempt.

Thus, I believe that the existing Federal statute outlawing flag desecration—which punishes "whoever knowingly casts contempt upon any flag of the United States by publicly defacing it"—could be rendered constitutional easily.

But it is not enough to delete the reference to "contempt," as the Senate did last month. To pass muster under the First Amendment, the statute must extend to anyone who intentionally defaces the flag, in public or in private. Only this step would remove the law's gratituous reference to the speech element.

Thus, if Congress sees in the flag such intrinsic value that it chooses to put all American flags beyond the reach of physical abuse—but leaves all Americans free to say what they will about the flag, and free to display the flag to whatever ends they choose—nothing in the First Amendment need stand in the way.

When a goal may be achieved without constitutional difficulty by the removal of a few words from the U.S. Code, surely it is folly to reach for the heavy artillery of the amending process to achieve that goal.

Why pursue a path that might take months or years when one is available that would take only days? On its 200th birthday, the Bill of Rights deserves a better present than a needless amendment. It is hardly consistent with the flag itself—or the freedom for which it stands—to tamper with the Constitution as a first rather than a last resort.

SSI COMMUNITY LIVING AMENDMENTS OF 1989

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, today, Congressmen EDWARD ROYBAL, ROBERT MATSUI, and I are introducing a bill, the "SSI Community Living Amendments of 1989". It is a major piece of long-term care legislation that begins with the neediest segments of our population. It differs from other long-term care legislation because it applies a social rather than a medical model.

As its name implies, this bill uses the Supplemental Security Income [SSI] program to identify eligible persons and to provide them with the help they need to stay in their own homes or in small group living situations—a setting which may provide a higher quality of life at a lower cost than institutionalization.

When the SSI program began in 1974, it served poor aged, blind, and disabled persons with a minimum income supplement. The number of SSI recipients (4.3 million people in 1975) has not increased dramatically (4.4 million people in 1988), but there has been a shift among the categories of people receiving SSI. In 1975, 53.4 percent of the persons receiving SSI received it only because they were 65 or older and met the other eligibility criteria. In 1988, only 32.4 percent of SSI recipients received it on the basis of their age only. The number of SSI recipients 80 years old or older did not decrease as much as recipients between the age of 65 and 79. This means that the SSI population today is primarily the frail elderly, the long-term disabled, and disabled children, who need home-based or supported living arrangements, including long-term nonmedical residential care. So, generally using SSI eligibility, this bill targets the poorest of the frail elderly and disabled.

We believe our bill supports a reconstituted Federal/State partnership to do the following: (1) maintain the Federal role of a national minimum income standard for the aged, blind and disabled; (2) create incentives for State assistance to low-income aged and disabled who need additional assistance to maintain themselves in their own home or, if needed, in a supported-living long-term care arrangement; and (3) establish cooperative Federal/State efforts to identify and correct instances where SSI and other vulnerable aged and disabled are living in inadequate and unsafe board and care residences or live in isolation with inadequate protective oversight.

In preparing this bill, the questions which were the most difficult to answer were: (1) How many other people could an individual live with and still be eligible to receive this supplement? (2) Could anyone not receiving SSI be eligible to receive this supplement? (3) Who can be a provider of the regular assistance a person needs with their activities of daily living [ADL's]?

People on SSI reside in all types of living situations: In their own homes, in small and large group residences. We knew our bill would not be able to provide for all SSI recipients needing help with their ADL's. If we could enable people to stay in their own home and receive the help they needed there, the quality of their life would be better and it could be more cost efficient.

Then, we struggled with how we could impose enforcement of standards for board and care homes, if we were targeting our funds to individuals living in their own homes or in other small group living situations.

It became clear that we could offer money to States to help them improve the board and care facilities and if they accepted this challenge, they could be eligible for additional money to help them supplement individuals who needed help with ADL's in order to stay in their homes or in small group residences. So, that's what we did. We set the bill up with two parts: Title I—Income Supplements and Title II—Quality Assurance for SSI Recipients in Group Living Arrangements. If the States fulfill section 1635 of title II, they will receive matching Federal funds to carry out title I.

In discussing the question—"Could anyone not receiving SSI be eligible to receive this supplement?", we knew we could be taking a small pot of money and trying to divide it among a greater number of people than we were when we started. However, we didn't want to limit recipients to just the people now receiving SSI for a number of reasons, including the following:

State supplements already extend beyond SSI recipients;

Persons needing help with ADL's might have a monthly income a few dollars above the $368 or $553 limit but a monthly income below the amount a SSI recipient receiving a supplement provided by this legislation will have.

So, our bill does define eligible individuals to include poor people who have monthly incomes beyond the meager SSI allowance but whose income is not sufficient to meet their needs based on the individual determination of the value of the assistance needed.

The possibility for abuse and/or misuse of funds surfaced when we discussed the question—"Who can be a provider of the regular assistance a person needs with their ADL's?" We conjured up worst case scenarios, for example, a brother-in-law receiving money to provide regular assistance which consists of turning on a TV set and watching it. We knew we didn't want our limited resources going to people we felt would be caring for people anyway. We certainly didn't want to discourage people who help others for noble reasons. But, we also acknowledged that people who were not family or friends could be engaged to provide assistance and then fail to give it. We moved to the question—"If SSI money is personal income and individuals determine how to spend it, shouldn't the supplemental amount be treated in the same way?" In addition, the States are required to have a case management system, a plan of care for each individual and a system for a periodic review of services, which should provide safeguards against providers who do not deliver the needed services.

In many other areas, the bill, on purpose, leaves decisions to the States. States vary widely in what they provide as supplements to SSI. It makes no sense to bring everyone back to the starting line nor can we make sure all arrive at the finish. We can and do encourage all States to continue what they are doing and to move forward. We wanted to use existing structures that work; we didn't want to impose new structures just to have uniform structures.

There are requirements the States must meet in order to receive funds under title I. These requirements identify systems to be developed as part of the comprehensive plan to implement the bill but leaves the development of these systems to the States. We believe the requirements allow flexibility, creativity and accountability, ingredients for a successful program.

Once the systems are in place and the program is operating, the States shall submit two reports yearly to the Secretary of Heatlh and Human Services, one—a financial accounting of the funds and the second—data, in a uniform manner, on the characteristics of the individuals served by this legislation, including the types of residence which they live in and the monthly amount of assistance and the services provided.

While drafting the bill, we were able to consult frequently with the National Association of State Mental Health Program Directors and with staff from the Congressional Research Service, the Center for the Study of Social Policy and the Mental Health Law Project. We are extremely grateful for their interest, input, and encouragement.

Our bill establishes a capped entitlement program. There will be people who will advocate doing more than we have done. We believe our approach is reasonable and responsible.

A summary of our bill follows:

SUMMARY

TITLE I. ASSISTANCE TO INDIVIDUALS IN NEED OF CARE

1. It provides federal matching funds to States to give funds to or on behalf of aged or disabled individuals to assist them in obtaining services to maintain themselves in their own home or a non-medical residence in the community. Fifty percent federal matching would be provided and States would be required to maintain their current level of expenditures for such assistance provided to such individuals.

2. Among the requirements for a State to qualify for federal matching funds are the following:

Have in place a system for establishing the criteria for targetting assistance to those individuals in greatest need for regular assistance.

Provide for a system of assessing the needs of individuals to determine the amount of assistance eligible individuals need on a regular basis for their activities of daily living related to the physical or mental limitations of the individual. Eligibility would be limited to SSI recipients and individuals just above the SSI income standard in a State but whose income is not sufficient to meet their needs based on the individual determination of the value of the assistance needed.

Have in place a case management system with respect to the individuals who would receive assistance which provides for the person managing an individual's case to develop a plan of care for the individual when required.

Have in place a case review system which reviews the appropriateness and amount of services being provided to individuals receiving assistance.

Have in place procedures and enter into an agreement with the Secretary to identify and investigate inadequate group care facilities.

3. Funds provided to the States under the program would be limited to assistance to eligible individuals living in their own homes or in small group living arrangements. The size limitations would include:

For the mentally ill, mentally retarded, or developmentally disabled, group residences not exceeding 16 people;

For the aged, group residences not exceeding 30 people.

(These suggested limitations are included in model board and care standards published by the Center on Legal Problems of the Elderly of the American Bar Association).

4. The program would be an authorized capped entitlement to the States (similar to the title XX Social Services program). The funds would be allocated to the State on the basis of the population of the State. The capped entitlement ceiling would be: FY 91, $250 million; FY 92, $500 million; FY 93, $1 billion; and FY 94, $1.5 billion.

TITLE II. PROTECTIVE SERVICES AND HOUSING QUALITY ASSURANCE AMENDMENTS

1. For the purpose of assisting States in identifying SSI recipients in unlicensed group living arrangements, the Social Security Administration would be required to provide States information which identifies non-medical residences where three or more unrelated SSI recipients reside.

2. It provides the option to the Social Security Administration to contract with a State, at the option of a State, to carry out some part of the Department's responsibilities related to making SSI or OASDI payments through a representative payee. This may include: identifying, investigation, approving and providing for the continuing accountability of representative payees.

3. It provides for grants to States related to the protective services and special housing assistance needs of SSI recipients and other low income aged, blind and disabled individuals. $100 million for each of the four fiscal years 91-93 would be authorized for allocation to the States on the basis of the number of SSI recipients in the State. To qualify for funding a State would:

Be required to have procedures to identify, investigate and take action to protect SSI recipients found living in unlicensed board and care homes or other group living arrangements. The provision in current SSI law which reduces Federal SSI benefits if an individual is living in an unlicensed facility would be repealed. It would be replaced with this new requirement on a State as a condition of receiving these grant funds and the federal matching funds under Title I of this bill.

A State would have the option to utilize such funds to assist other groups of low income aged, blind and disabled individuals identified as in a particular need of obtaining housing assistance and other related services including, but not limited to the following:

Mentally ill denied care in nursing homes under the new nursing home screening program and those identified with priority housing needs in the federally assisted State Mental Health Planning program; and Frail elderly with priority housing and protective services needs identified by State and Area Agencies on Aging.

INTERNATIONAL SHIPPING PRACTICES

HON. NORMAN F. LENT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced legislation that is designed to follow and complement the Foreign Shipping Practices Act of 1988, enacted as subtitle A of title X of the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988 (Public Law 100–418).

This legislation is a refinement and improvement to existing law. Section 19(1)(b) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920 [46 U.S.C. App. 876(1)(b)], gives the Federal Maritime Commission ("FMC" or "Commission") authority to make rules and regulations affecting shipping in the foreign trade to meet conditions that might be unfavorable to shipping and which arise from practices used by foreign operators that unfairly restrict American vessels in international trade. My bill would simply pick up on that existing responsibility and give the Commission some additional tools that they can use to rectify unfair trade problems. It would broaden their ability to look at trade practices that might involve intermodal movements of cargo and would expand the remedies available to the Commission once they have been through the administrative process to ascertain the extent of any unfair trade practices.

The Commission has successfully employed section 19 on a number of occasions against a wide variety of practices of foreign governments and their agents. The Commission has interpreted section 19 broadly both as to geographic scope and persons protected by it, in order to give full effect to the purposes of the provision.

The ocean transportation industry has changed considerably since the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, was enacted. Moreover, current concepts of administrative procedures have evolved over the years. It is possible that a narrow application of these administrative procedures could undermine the broad remedial purposes of section 19. In addition, the Commission can presently obtain information through compulsory process only from ocean common carriers and not from other affected interests. It is, therefore, appropriate and timely to amend section 19 to reflect the precedent which has evolved and to make section 19 a much more modern and efficient tool to address unfair practices in our waterborne foreign commerce.

The bill would make the following improvements to the Commission's existing authority to address and correct conditions unfavorable to shipping in the foreign trade: (1) clarify the scope of section 19(1)(b) by indicating that shipping includes intermodal movements and certain land-based activities which are integral to shipping; (2) specify those persons to whom section 19 relief is available by expressly stating who may file a petition for relief under that section; (3) empower the Commission to use compulsory process to obtain information concerning unfavorable conditions and, at the Commission's discretion, provide for discovery in section 19 proceedings; and (4) make available a broader range of remedies to correct unfavorable conditions.

This bill is substantially the same as H.R. 1803, that I introduced in the 100th Congress. H.R. 1803 was reported by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, but the House never voted on the bill.

The primary difference between this bill and H.R. 1803 is that it incorporates several changes to conform it as closely as possible to the provisions of the Foreign Shipping Practices Act of 1988, as included in the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988. The Foreign Shipping Practices Act, however, only applies to U.S.-flag ocean common carriers, that is, liner operators, and does not cover bulk or tramp operators. Section 19 encompasses all carriers in U.S. oceanborne trades, regardless of type or where they may be registered. In addition, it applies to trade in general and consequently can be used to protect U.S. shippers and others involved in our foreign commerce by ensuring that access to U.S. trades will not be denied to carriers of their choice. This bill, revised to specifically incorporate provisions recently adopted by Congress for U.S.-flag liner operators, will provide the FMC with an updated, more efficient means to address unfair maritime practices in the U.S. foreign trades.

Mr. Speaker, this bill also confirms another critical point concerning the regulation and control and international shipping in the U.S.-foreign maritime trade. The FMC has authority under section 19 and the Foreign Shipping Practices Act to respond to certain unfair trade practices. These two laws provide the United States significant authority concerning international shipping.

The U.S. Government will soon become involved in discussions on the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade [GATT] regarding trade-in-services industries. The inclusion of maritime transportation in this GATT negotiation would not be in the best interests of our maritime programs, not to mention the Nation's national security. The legislation I have introduced today recognizes that the United States has the most open international maritime trade in the world and we should continue to regulate this trade through our domestic statutes rather than letting it fall under some kind of international regime under GATT. This bill reflects the intent of House Concurrent Resolution 151, a resolution cosponsored by 120 Members, that opposes including maritime transportation services within GATT.

I urge my colleagues to study this bill carefully and join me in supporting its consideration and enactment. It is consistent with what Congress did in the last Congress and carries forward the intent of seeing that all unfair trading practices are eliminated from the international maritime trade.

SUPPORT FOR SECTION 89 PROVISIONS IN THE TREASURY/POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL FOR FISCAL YEAR 1990

HON. CASS BALLENGER

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, last week the House approved the Treasury, Post Office, and General Government fiscal year 1990 appropriation bill (H.R. 2989) with my support.

The bill included a provision that prevents the Department of the Treasury from using any funds under this act to enforce the current section 89 provisions in the Tax Reform Act of 1986. While this measure is not an outright repeal of section 89, it will help lighten the load for many small businesses.

As you may recall, section 89 is designed to ensure that employee-sponsored benefit plans do not favor top-level employees over other employees. It requires all business owners to conduct a series of complicated tests to determine if their health and life insurance plans are distributed fairly among their highly paid employees and the rank and file.

While the legislation may have been enacted with noble intent, the multiple testing procedures under section 89 will result in massive new paperwork and create so much redtape that many small employers, like those in my district, will likely stop providing some or all health fringe benefits. I believe this is contrary to the purpose and spirit of U.S. health policy and of section 89.

With over 300 Members of Congress supporting repeal of section 89, prohibiting expenditures to enforce the law is clearly the correct action to take.

HAPPY 10TH ANNIVERSARY TO PENOBSCOT JOB CORPS

HON. OLYMPIA J. SNOWE

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, the Penobscot Job Corps is celebrating its 10th year of operation, and I would like to take this opportunity to join with its hundreds of graduates in thanking the corps and its hardworking staff for the fine work they have done in that time.

Over 60 percent of those who enter the program finish their vocational training. And the job placement rate is 92.5 percent. That figure alone says so much about the success of the program, both for the participants and the community.

I would like to share an article from the Bangor Daily News which highlights the 10 years of hard work and the commitment which have gone into making the Penobscot Job Corps such a success.

PENOBSCOT JOB CORPS IN 10TH YEAR

(By Carrol Astbury)

About 6,600 young adults from low-income families, from homes with disruptive lifestyles, or with handicaps have received training from the Penobscot Job Corps. And several regional and national awards have lauded the center's performance.

But the going wasn't always easy for the center, which is marking its 10th year in Bangor.

Don Soucy, a businessman and former chairman of the Bangor City Council, remembers his reaction to the announcement that the Job Corps would come to Bangor.

"I said, 'No way are we going to have them in Bangor.'" and to add to Soucy's original fear, during the first months that Job Corps was in Bangor there were several incidents involving vandalism and general rowdiness.

Charles Tetro, president of the Training and Development Corp., operator of the Penobscot Job Corps center, said that the problems resulted from a quick start-up.

"We had 120 new staff people hired to run something they had never heard of, and there were 385 students who were recruited quickly," Tetro said. "We hadn't established a culture in the program."

A Community Relations Council was formed to help iron out Job Corps' problems. It worked. Soucy has been active on the council from day one. Now, he says, Job Corps has no more problems than any other local school.

"Penobscot Job Corps certainly has become a good neighbor," Soucy said. "It is a very successful program, and I often wonder where these kids would be without Job Corps. The successes have far exceeded any negatives."

Nationally, Job Corps is 25 years old. It survived the cuts in social programs initiated under former President Ronald W. Reagan. In his first two budget proposal, Reagan recommended eliminating Job Corps. In his last budget, he recommended full funding for the program.

What happened? Liberals always supported Job Corps as part of their social agenda. Conservatives have come to support it somewhat out of necessity. With projected shortages in the labor force, practical conservatives came to realize that no one's labor-force potential should be wasted, Tetro said.

Tetro has become a national authority on the Job Corps program. He heads a committee that advises the U.S. secretary of labor on Job Corps. And he has testified at numerous hearings in Washington.

Even if Job Corps were eliminated, Tetro is convinced that something like it soon would emerge. "It (Job Corps) represents a uniquely American concept," Tetro said. "Helping people pull themselves up by their bootstraps is something we all adhere to."

The Penobscot Job Corps' classroom and office complex, now located at the former Dow Lane Elementary School in Bangor, is a pleasant setting for the 16- to 24-year-olds who are giving education another shot. The process is overseen by Thomas Brady, center director.

A veteran teacher and elementary and high school principal, Brady says Job Corps is different from most educational settings because students can work at their own paces, and the relationships with teachers are close.

"We monitor and set performance standards much closer than in public schools," Brady said. "We are much more aware of how students are progressing."

Job Corps students work long periods with single teachers. Most students spend one-half of the day with their basic education teacher and the other half with their vocational instructor. "In terms of pacing, it's almost like an individual program," he said.

John Miller agrees. He dropped out of high school because he didn't get along with the principal. "At Job Corps they don't push you. You go at your own speed and rate," Miller lsaid. "In high school it was do this * * * do that."

The Job Corps formula has worked for Miller. This summer he is working at the Brewer Housing Authority. Brian Stormann, a maintenance foreman at the Brewer agency, says that Job Corps students make a good contribution on the job. Miller and others paint, landscape, and do carpentry and custodial work.

Everyone entering Job Corps doesn't find the formula to their liking. About 60 percent of the entrants finish their vocational training. This percentage is typical for the 106 Job Corps centers in the United States.

For those who complete the program, the outlook is bright. Carol Kulberg is the Job Corps employee responsible for recruitment and placement. Last month, her office was able to place 92.5 percent of the students finishing the program. The placement percentage generally runs between 85 and 95 percent, she said.

The recruitment effort at Job Corps is conducted out of Bangor, Portland and Augusta, with additional efforts by outreach people in Caribou and Houlton.

Kulberg says that aspirations are very important in the recruitment effort. "We want kids who are interested and will give the program their best shot," she said. According to Kulberg, schools and community agencies are very important in the recruitment process.

Kulberg also stresses that her office conducts a thorough search of court records before admitting students. "I probably overdocument the court records, but I think that's necessary," she said. "We can't afford to have people who will be disruptive."

Geeta Balakrishnan, the Training and Development Corp.'s vice president for the Job Corps Division, said the toughest part of running the program is maintaining interest on the part of the students. "We work to keep students motivated enough to keep interested," she said.

To help the motivation process, students are given classes in the development of social skills and employability training. Brady said these factors are necessary complements to the basic education and vocational classes.

Research indicates that the Job Corps works better than other training programs, Balakrishnan said. The research shows Job Corps to be the best performer in terms of how the training affects the long-term prospects of participants.

For some of the Job Corps participants, the rewards come quickly. Wendy Lawler of Carmel graduated from high school, but found that she didn't have any marketable skills. With children to care for, and waitressing her only option, her future didn't look encouraging.

She entered the program, which provided support for the care of her children. She pursued the business program and, after graduation, obtained a job with the Dunlap Agency in Bangor.

"We got an outstanding person when we got Wendy Lawler," said Barbara E. Lawrence, office manager at the Bangor branch of the insurance company. "She'll go places. Job Corps gave her an opportunity to retrain, and that was all she needed."

The basic education curriculum at Penobscot Job Corps has received enough national acclaim that the Training and Development Corp. has received a $500,000 grant to write a curriculum that will be used nationally. A computer-management system for the curriculum also will be developed. Balakrishnan will use three new employees and some consultants to work on the grant.

Meanwhile, the Penobscot Job Corps brings about $4 million a year to the Bangor economy. And the U.S. Department of Labor has purchased a 27-acre site bordering the classroom facility that will be the location for a Job Corps dormitory to be constructed sometime in the next couple of years.

The Job Corps students live in a dormitory at Husson College. Officials at the college and at Penobscot Job Corps admit that the living situation has been less than perfect for Husson and Job Corps students.

But the relationship between the college and Job Corps has been a good marriage of convenience. Until a couple of years ago, Husson was encountering financial difficulties and the rent money from Job Corps was helpful. And, for its part, Job Corps needed a place for its students.

Both nationally and locally, Job Corps would appear to have a solid place in the education and training community. But Tetro, who has worked hard to make the program a success, balks at calling it established.

"No institution is established," he said "Those that think they are, are an endangered species."

TRIBUTE TO LT. COL. AND MRS. THOMAS E. ADAMS

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay special tribute to Lt. Col. Thomas E. Adams and Mrs. Rose Adams. After 7 years of dedicated and meritorius service as the executive director and vice president of the board of trustees of Booth Memorial Medical Center in Flushing, NY, Lieutenant Colonel and Mrs. Adams have received farewell orders to assume new positions at The Salvation Army's Territorial Headquarters, located in Manhattan.

Lieutenant Colonel Adams has been appointed assistant to the chief secretary at the Eastern Territorial Headquarters of the Salvation Army.

Appointed in June 1983, Colonel Adams has full administrative responsibility for the 487-bed Medical Center, which employs over 2,000 people and is the single largest Salvation Army installation in the world.

In 1984, Colonel Adams initiated the "Booth Salutes Queens" Annual Luncheon, bringing together members of the business community to recognize achievements of Queens leaders. Just this past year, the luncheon attracted an audience of 600 people resulting in $80,000 in proceeds, which were used to support the construction of a new 20-bed unit, opened in December 1988.

Colonel Adams has participated as an active member of many professional and community organizations acting as a strong advocate of the need for more hospital beds in Queens. He is a member of the board of trustees of the Hospital Association of New York State, a member of the executive committee of the City University Medical School, a director of the Greater New York Hospital Association, a nominee of the American College of Healthcare Executives, and a member of the planning board of the Queens Health Systems Agency and the Advisory Board of Queens Public Television.

Among his community affiliations, Colonel Adams is a director of the Queens Chamber of Commerce and chairman of that organization's Health and Safety Committee. He has been a member of the Queens Development Corp., chaired the Health Committee of Queens Festival for 4 years, is a former vice president of the International Rotary Club of Flushing and a member of the Rotary's Board of Directors. In 1987 he received a Paul Harris Fellowship, the Rotary's highest honor. Other honors include receiving community service awards from the Pride of Judea Mental Health Center, Visions, and the Anti-Defamation League.

Mrs. Rose Adams has served with her husband in all appointments since their marriage in 1956. At Booth Memorial, she has held the important position of director of volunteer services, responsible for all the activities and programs of the Women's Auxiliary and Volunteers. During her tenure The Women's Auxiliary has raised $1.2 million. Just during this past fiscal year, the auxiliary has completed over $195,000 in pledges, including the completion of a $500,000 pledge for the Women's Auxiliary Ambulatory Surgery Center. Mrs. Adams will assume the appointment of Territorial Medical Fellowship Secretary at the Eastern Territorial Headquarters of the Salvation Army.

Lieutenant Colonel and Mrs. Adams have dedicated their life to helping others. Their devotion and altruism is an inspiration to us all. We in Queens are proud and lucky to have had them among us and I am fortunate to consider them among my personal friends. I would like all of my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join me in honoring and commending Lt. Col. Thomas E. Adams and Mrs. Rose Adams for their outstanding service, and to wish them God speed in their new assignment.

TRIBUTE TO RAOUL WALLENBERG ON HIS 77TH BIRTHDAY

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, today—August 4th—marks the 77th birthday of the ultimate humanitarian and Holocaust hero Raoul Wallenberg. On this anniversary, I invite my colleagues in the Congress to join with me in paying honor and tribute to this great man.

Mr. Speaker, during his recent visit to Budapest, President Bush stopped at the outstanding monument to Raoul Wallenberg in that city to pay tribute. This was a most important and symbolic gesture—Wallenberg became an honorary U.S. citizen 8 years ago, the second person after Sir Winston Churchill to be so honored by the U.S. Congress. His gesture was recognized by Hungarians and Americans alike as an acknowledgment of how much the world owes this great man.

Raoul Wallenberg was a Lutheran Swede who left behind the comfort and safety and security of neutral Sweden and his hometown of Stockholm to go to Hungary at the height of the brutality of the Nazi war machine for the sole purpose of saving his brothers and his sisters, with whom he had nothing in common except his humanity. Through his efforts, over 100,000 Hungarian Jews were saved from Nazi death camps.

On January 17, 1945, after Soviet troops expelled the German Army from Budapest, Wallenberg drove off for a meeting with high-ranking Soviet military officials in eastern Hungary. He never returned, and he has not been seen outside Soviet prisons since that time. In 1957 under Western pressure, Soviet officials claimed that Wallenberg died of a heart attack in a Soviet prison in 1947. Nevertheless, there have been numerous sightings of Wallenberg by Soviet prisoners who have subsequently emigrated to the West, and some of those sightings are as recent as the early 1980's. The possibility that Wallenberg is still alive in a Soviet prison is strong. Many of us in Congress continue to work on his behalf. We cannot rest until Wallenberg is released and the facts of his disappearance have been made known.

In his own lifetime, Raoul Wallenberg has become a legend of the ultimate values of decency to which we all aspire. Wallenberg has given us hope in the perfectibility of man and woman through his example of dignity and courage and determination in the face of incredible obstacles and difficulties.

Mr. Speaker, on the 77th birthday of one of the great men of our age, I ask that my colleagues join me in wishing Raoul Wallenberg a "Happy Birthday." It is my hope and dream that next year we may be able to convey birthday greetings to Wallenberg in person.

A TRIBUTE TO DADS AGAINST DRUGS, DRINKING, AND DRIVING

HON. BILL LOWERY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. LOWERY of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Joe Ingorvaia, national president of Dads Against Drugs, Drinking, and Driving [DADDD's].

Joe is a single parent concerned with the safety of children and all adults who use our highways and surface streets. DADDD's purpose is to locate intoxicated individuals before they become drivers.

Through a public awareness campaign and personal contact with bartenders in specific geographic areas, DADDD's works to assign designated drivers and offer rides to those who have consumed too much alcohol.

Recently, DADDD's filled a special need. Each weekend, an average of 2,000 young people under the age of 21 venture into Baja California, Mexico without parental supervision. Many of these youths become intoxicated and occasionally engage in disorderly and illegal activities.

This issue has received the attention of the San Diego County Board of Supervisors, County Office of Transborder Affairs, United States and Mexican Consulates, California Highway Patrol, San Diego Police and Sheriff's, and United States Customs.

Joe and DADDD's recently organized a group of volunteers with a donated bus and even a couple of limousines at the United States and Mexican border to meet the young revelers as they entered and returned. From 10 p.m. to 6 a.m. Joe and his group distributed brochures on Mexican laws and offered rides from the border to those who may have been considering driving while intoxicated.

DADDD's can continue to fill a very special need and enhance the relationship with our neighbors to the south with this program of education and rides. The public's safety will benefit from this organization that uses the slogan, "Get the drunk driver off the road before he enters the vehicle."

As no private citizen has attempted to serve the needs of those who go to Mexico for merrymaking and return intoxicated, Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in a salute to this creative guardian, Joe Ingorvaia and DADDD's.

INTRODUCTION OF THE STOP SMUT ACT

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, today, I am reintroducing legislation which addresses the problems caused by unwanted 976 telephone services. The legislation, entitled the Special Taxation on Pornographic Services and Marketing Using Telephones [STOP SMUT] Act of 1989, would promote the practice of regional telephone companies of offering free blockage of commercial and residential telephones. The measure is unique: it can be seen by everyone as a pro-family, pro-business, and pro-consumer initiative. Most importantly, it doesn't violate our Constitution.

STOP SMUT is an idea whose time has arrived. As Members of the House of Representatives have seen the U.S. Supreme Court overturn last year's effort to ban all dial-a-porn services outright, STOP SMUT is a constitutional answer to this problem.

I have long advocated and supported efforts by the regional telephone companies to offer free blockage to all consumers, parents, and businesses who are telephone customers. Many of the regional telephone companies have had such a policy for many years, and these policies have proved to be a most effective means to solve a rather complicated problem.

Unfortunately, some of the regional telephone companies, including California's Pacific Bell, have chosen the inappropriate route of forcing customers to pay for blockage. This fee for blockage, up to $15 per telephone line, is blatantly unfair to businesses with multiple numbers of lines.

I know of several charitable hospitals, elementary school systems, and industrial businesses which may be forced to pay upwards of $100 to block their telephones from 976 and dial-a-porn services. Mr. Speaker, this is just not right.

Imagine going into your local McDonald's and ordering a hamburger without ketchup and being charged 50 cents extra for the effort. For Pacific Bell to charge $15 for each line is simply incomprehensible to any parent who doesn't want their children to hear unwanted 976 or dial-a-porn services, or any business which has been forced to pay hundreds of dollars in unwanted 976-related bill charges. To charge any telephone customer, either residential or commercial, for their request to prohibit a 976 or dial-a-porn service they never wanted nor requested, simply goes against rules of fairness or appropriate business policy.

Yet, Pacific Bell will come back to say that each blockage of each line costs their company money, even perhaps more than $15. However, that is not relevant to this debate. Pacific Bell ought to take corrective action to offer free blockage to all customers, and pass the costs along to the 976 service only. Residential and commercial telephone customers should not bear any of the costs of blockage, and should not be forced to subsidize these 976 or dial-a-porn services though paying for any of the blockage.

Last year, Pacific Bell did an about-face and reversed its previous policy of charging residential customers, an estimated 250,000 homes throughout California, for blockage of their telephones. That act was heralded by proconsumer advocates throughout the State of California.

If precedent, consistency, and integrity mean anything to Pacific Bell and its operations, they should act prudently and responsibly to revise its current policy of charging $15 to commercial businesses seeking to block their telephones of 976 and dial-a-porn services. Otherwise, under the STOP SMUT Act, a penalty tax of three times the amount for each blockage charge to customers, or $45 dollars in Pacific Bell's case for each $15 charge placed on customers, would be levied.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to introduce the STOP SMUT Act and look forward to working with my colleagues for its passage.

ELECTIONS IN MEXICO

HON. JIM KOLBE

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, Mexico, a nation with whom we share more than a 2,000 mile border, and which borders on my own State of Arizona, has been undergoing important and fundamental changes. Most recently, changes have come in the form of political opening, most significantly with the election of the PAN candidate for governor in Baja California Norte. His election represents the first time a state governorship will be occupied by an opposition party in the 60 years of PRI dominance.

Mr. Speaker, the changes in Mexico hold great significance for the United States and we must pay close attention to these changes. Today I am submitting for the RECORD an article which first appeared in the July 19 edition of the Washington Report of the Hemisphere, a biweekly publication of the Washington-based Council on Hemispheric Affairs. I encourage my colleagues to read this article on this timely subject.

PRI CONCEDES BAJA DEFEAT

(By Jose Carrillo)

Amid widespread political tension, accusations of fraud, and threats of demonstrations in the Mexican state of Baja California Norte, the Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI) conceded the defeat of one of its gubernatorial candidates for the first time since its creation in 1929. Days before official results were to be released by the PRI-controlled state electoral commission, the ruling party, as well as the country's president, announced that its candidate, Senator Margarita Ortega Villa, had lost to the right-of-center National Action Party (PAN) candidate, Ernesto Ruffo Appel.

The PRI's concession is being heralded as a sign of President Carlos Salinas de Gortari's commitment to clean elections, but the depth of this commitment is being questioned by some observers. The PRI has not admitted defeat in other questionable races throughout the country, and fraud continues to be a common practice in many of the contests.

The opposition's accusations of election "irregularities" mounted both before and after the elections. In Baja, the anti-PRI politicians claim that there were delays in opening up the polls, especially in districts that were won by the opposition in last July's presidential race. Charges were also leveled that PRI militants engaged in multiple voting, that thousands of opposition names disappeared from voting lists, and that electoral rolls were inflated with the names of deceased or non-existent voters. In Michoacan, considered a stronghold of Cuauhtemoc Cardenas' left-of-center Democratic Revolutionary Party, state legislative elections were marred by violence, with nine peasant supporters of the PRD being assaulted during the campaign. In both the Baja and Michoacan elections, the opposition continues to dispute claims of a PRI victory in municipal and state legislative races.

A split in the ruling party has mushroomed between the reformers (a group Salinas wants to be an integral part of the party, even though he owes his office to election-fraud tactics) and those regulars who fear losing the patronage that comes with electoral victory. The Baja governor's race suggests that the reformers were victorious in their plan to recognize an opposition victory, or that Salinas directly intervened to have them do so. By promptly acknowledging a possible defeat in Baja, the president effectively closed the door on electoral shenanigans, at least in that particular race. But resentment of the fraudulent and bully-boy tactics favored by PRI militants elsewhere will not disappear overnight, as evidenced by such charges made in most of the other races. And, if the PRI is forced to concede more seats to the opposition, it could open a floodgate of defeats of its candidates in future elections, thereby contributing to its already diminishig base of support in those areas, like Michoacan, where the opposition maintains a strong following, as well as demolishing the myth of the ruling party's electoral invulnerability.

Salinas and top PRI leaders such as Luis Donaldo Colosio, president of the national executive committee of the PRI, were forced to acknowledge defeat in Baja in order to maintain credibility. After Salinas' call for fair elections, his personal involvement in the indictment of the electoral fraud-stained PRI mayor of Hermosillo, Sonora, and Ortega's picking up the president's "with clean hands" injunction as her own campaign theme, it was no surprise that the PRI leadership in Mexico City did not join local party officials in Baja with their prematurely optimistic and erroneous claims of victory.

By sacrificing the governor's seat to the PAN, the PRI has saved itself from having to explain another victory marred by highly visible fraud. At the same time, this opposition victory has given more legitimacy to the Salinas presidency at home and abroad. If the series of local elections had been totally discredited by vote fraud, the international financial community might not feel that Salinas had the necessary stability to make the difficult economic reforms that are essential to Mexico's road to fiscal soundness. Salinas knows that by recognizing a clean PAN victory in Baja, which means a pro-U.S. and pro-business triumph, he might attract more foreign investment, as well as enhance his chances of effectively dealing with the foreign debt, two areas where success has so far eluded him.

At the same time, some Mexican politicians and political analysts have glumly noted that the PRI was forced to sacrifice Baja as a token gesture to maintain a still-tainted system. Although the governorship in Baja has been lost, the ruling party is claiming victory in other races around the country, and indications are that the PRI will not risk alienating local party bosses by sacrificing more offices than is necessary.

BICENTENNIAL OF THE FOUNDING OF THE CONSTITUTION

HON. DAN BURTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the national celebration this year of the bicentennial of the founding of the Constitution serves an important national interest in focusing the attention of all Americans on one of the most inspired plans of government ever to spring from the mind of man.

When the constitutional convention met in Philadelphia in 1787 George Washington was chosen to preside. "Let us raise a standard to which the wise and honest can repair," he said, "the event is in the hand of God."

Actually the Constitution is a coat of mail which man himself fashioned for his own protection, and which he has changed from time to time that the protection might be more complete—protection against the abuse of power by his servants in the Congress, whom he may dismiss at election time or by impeachment, and against whose invasion of his rights he can appeal to the courts; against his executive offices, whom he may dismiss by impeachment or by ballot; against his judges, whom he may remove for lack of "good behavior." His government is not his master, as the king or dictator has always been, but his servant.

"In questions of power, then," wrote Thomas Jefferson, "let no more be heard of confidence in man, but bind him down from mischief by the chains of the Constitution."

Recently the White House and several individual Members of Congress entered into a deal to bypass the Constitution and cut humanitarian aid to the anti-Sandinista insurgents in Nicaragua in violation of a law enacted by Congress providing this assistance to protect the United States against what President Bush has proclaimed to be "an unusual and extraordinary threat to our national security and foreign policy." I and Congressman ROBERT SMITH, Congressman CHARLES DOUGLAS, and Congressman PHILIP CRANE have challenged this unconstitutional deal in Federal court. This matter is so fundamental that I am including our "motion for summary judgment" in the RECORD and I invite the views of all interested persons:

MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

1. Plaintiffs move the Court for a summary judgment and request that it be rendered forthwith in accordance with Rule 56, FRCP, and for cause state that the pleadings, exhibits thereto, and official documents of which this Court is requested to take judicial notice show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that plaintiffs are entitled to a judgment as a matter of law, as appears more fully herein below.

QUESTION PRESENTED

2. The question presented is whether a "side agreement" entered into between defendants and nine members of the House and Senate not to obligate funds appropriated by Congress to provide humanitarian assistance to the Nicaraguan Resistance except upon affirmative approval in writing "from the Bipartisan leadership of Congress and relevant House and Senate authorization committees and appropriation subcommittees" is an impoundment of funds, a legislative veto, or an amendment of Public Law 101-14 (April 18, 1989), in violation of Article I of the Constitution?

BACKGROUND FACTS

3. On April 18, 1989 defendant Bush signed Public Law 101-14 providing up to $49,750,000 for humanitarian assistance "to the Nicaraguan Resistance, to remain available through February 28, 1990". (Ex. 1 hereto)

4. On April 11, 1989 the House Committee on Foreign Affairs favorably reported H.R. 1750 (H. Rep. 101-23, Part 1, 101st Cong. 1st Sess., Ex. 2 hereto), which stated in pertinent part: "H.R. 1750 was introduced on April 10 by Representative Foley, and cosponsored by Messrs. Michel, Coelho, Gingrich, Bonior, Lewis (CA), Fascell, Broomfield, Obey, Edwards (OK), and Lagomarsino. The bill was referred jointly to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Foreign Affairs held a hearing and markup on April 11, 1989. Testimony was received from the Honorable David Bonior, Deputy Majority Whip, and Deputy Secretary of State Lawrence Eagleberger. H.R. 1750 was reported by the committee without amendment by a vote of 32 Yeas and 6 Nays."

5. The Report (Ex. 2) is captioned "IMPLEMENTING THE BIPARTISAN ACCORD ON CENTRAL AMERICA OF MARCH 24, 1989", and states that "The purpose of this legislation is to implement the March 24, 1989 Bipartisan Accord on Central America signed by President George Bush, Speaker of the House James C. Wright, Senate Majority Leader George A. Mitchell, House Majority Leader Thomas S. Foley, Senate Republican Leader Robert Dole, and House Republican Leader Robert Michel. Under this agreement, humanitarian assistance to the Nicaraguan Resistance will be continued at current levels for an additional 11 months through February 28, 1990".

6. By a yea-and-nay vote of 309 yeas to 110 nays, Roll No. 27, the House passed H.R. 1750, to implement the Bipartisan Accord on Central America of March 24, 1989. (Cong. Rec. April 13, 1989, Vol. 135, No. 44, p. D349; Ex. 3 hereto) and by 89 yeas to 9 nays (Vote No. 44), the Senate passed H.R. 1750 on April 13, 1989 (Ex. 3, p. D346). H.R. 1750 was signed by defendant Bush on April 18, 1989 and became Public Law 101-14 (103 Stat. 37). The Bipartisan Accord of March 24, 1989 referred hereinabove (Ex. 4) provides in pertinent part: "To implement our purposes, the Executive will propose and the bipartisan leadership of the Congress will act promptly after the Easter Recess to extend humanitarian assistance at current levels to the Resistance through February 28, 1990 . . .".

7. However, in a "draft" letter from defendant Baker to "Chairman of House and Senate Authorization and Appropriation Committees and Senate and House Leadership" (Ex. 5 hereto), which was included in the House Foreign Affairs Committee record (Ex. 6 hereto) and in the Committee report on the bill (H. Rep. 101-23, Part 1, 101st Cong., 1st Sess., p. 4.), in pertinent part made the following undertaking: "This assistance has been authorized and appropriated but will not be obligated beyond November 30, 1989, except . . . if affirmed via letter from the Bipartisan leadership of Congress and relevant House and Senate authorization committees and appropriation subcommittees."

APPLICABLE LAW

8. The principle of separation of powers is expressed in our Constitution in the first section of each of the first three Articles, Article I, par. 1 provides that "all legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives". Art. II, par. 1, cl. 1 provides that "the executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America".

The above words do not mean some of the executive power, but all of the executive power. While the courts normally owe deference to Congress' view that what it has done is constitutional, that idea does not apply where the issue is separation of powers. As stated by Madison in Federalist 49, "The several departments being perfectly co-ordinate by the terms of their common commission, neither of them, it is evident, can pretend to an exclusive or superior right of settling the boundaries between their respective powers . . ."

Article II, part. 1 requires the President to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed" and Article II, par. 1, cl. 7 requires him to "preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States".

Art. I, par. 1, cl. 2 and 3 provide "Every Bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it become a law, be presented to the President of the United States . . . and before the same shall take effect, shall be approved by him. . . ."

In addition to the above referenced provisions of the Constitution, plaintiffs call the Court's attention to the following decisions which bear importantly on the issues which are or may be involved in this lawsuit. These cases, and the citations they contain cover all collateral points, such as standing, case or controversy, political question, alternative relief, jurisdiction, justiciability, and equitable discretion. Plaintiffs rely upon these cases and the citations they include, rather than making the same arguments and burdening the record with a repetition of points and authorities well know to the Court:

Kennedy v. Sampson, 511 F.2d 430; Bowsher v. Synar, 106 S.Ct. 3181; Barnes v. Kline, 759 F.2d 21; INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919; Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137; Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433; Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579.

ARGUMENT IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

9. Congressman Chuck Douglas of New Hampshire, a plaintiff herein, former senior justice of the New Hampshire Supreme Court, expressed his expert opinion that the "side agreement" at issue herein is unconstitutional in that "the executive branch cannot give way nor empower to others its power of veto and its power to execute the laws . . . it is obvious it is unconstitutional. The separation of powers is being frustrated by giving a certain select group in this body a vote in November that I will not have. The people of my State elected me. New Hampshire in November will not be voting on whether Contra aid continues because neither of New Hampshire's Congressman happen to be part of this little gang of seven who will be voting in November by writing a letter". (135 Cong. Rec. Vol. 44, 6396; Ex. 6 hereto).

10. When defendant Bush signed Public law 101-14 on April 18, 1989 it became the "supreme law of the land". (Art. VI, cl. 2) The statute provides for humanitarian assistance to the Nicaraguan Resistance "through February 28, 1990". (Ex. 1) The draft letter from defendant Baker to the certain committee chairmen in the House and Senate (Ex. 5) unconditionally undertakes not to obligate, i.e. spend, the funds provided in the statute after November 30, 1989 except upon unanimous affirmative approval in writing from eight members of Congress (Ex. 5).

11. The draft letter is a part of a "deal" made by defendants and certain designated letters of the House and Senate who signed the Bipartisan Accord of March 24, 1989, as set forth in the committee report accompanying H.R. 1750, which became P.O. 101-14. (Ex. 4). The complete history of the "deal" is referred repeatedly in the debate on H.R. 1750, which was rushed through the House in one day, April 13, 1989, under a closed rule which prohibited amendment, and adopted by the Senate the same day. (See 135 Cong. Rec. Vol. 44, April 13, 1989, (pages 6368-6423 and 6440-6423, H. Res. 127)

12. In the course of debate Congressman Douglas, a plaintiff in this action said: "Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this deal because I think it violates Article I of the Constitution. The letter that Secretary Baker intends to send to the chairmen of the House and Senate authorizing and appropriations committees and to the House leadership indicates that any one of nine individuals in the House and Senate has the power to stop a line item in a bill that we will be voting on . . . . We are supposed to trust that these 9 individuals who each represent 500,000 people, the same number of people that I represent, are somehow given this extraordinary power to determine when an appropriation by the Congress of the United States will end." (Ex. 6)

13. As demonstrated by the facts set forth herein above, of which the Court must take judicial notice (FREV.201,803), the terminal date for humanitarian assistance funding for the Nicaraguan Resistance provided in Public Law 101-14 (April 18, 1989) is February 28, 1990.

14. However, defendants Bush and Baker entered into an arrangement with nine members of Congress which in substance and effect amended Public Law 101-14 by substituting a new terminal date of November 30, 1989 for the statutory date of February 28, 1990. (Ex. 4,5 hereto).

15. The Bipartisan Accord of March 24, 1989 and Baker "draft" letter included in the House Foreign Affairs Committee official records of April 11, 1989 (Ex. 2 hereto; see also statement of House Speaker Foley, page 6367, 135 Cong. Rec. Vol. 44, April 13, 1989 (Ex. 8 hereto; page 6369, id. Ex. 8; statement of Congressman Broomfield, a floor manager of H.R. 1750 during debate, page 6379, id., Ex. 9) are in effect not only an unconstitutional amendment of the Act of April 18, but also in substance an unconstitutional legislative veto, and an unconstitutional intrusion by the Executive and Secretary of State into the law making process whereby the Executive has agreed to impound funds appropriated by Congress in contravention of the separation of powers principle on which the Constitution is founded. (INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919)

16. During debate on H.R. 1750 in the Senate on April 13, Senator Armstrong made the following argument (Ex. 10):

"The question has arisen about the constitutional issues in this bill. It has been questioned that perhaps by agreeing to give four Members of Congress a sort of veto power over part of the expenditures contemplated by this legislation, that we might run afoul of the Supreme Court.

"The explanation I have heard in response to that is that this really is not unconstitutional. It would be unconstitutional if we put it in the bill, but since it is not in the bill, but it is just a side agreement, we do not run afoul of any constitutional limitations. . . .

"I do not think it is wise for the administration to bargain with a handful of Members of Congress to cut all the other Members of Congress out of the deal . . .

"I do not think being a Senator ought to be a spectator sport. I think we ought to be involved in the decision to extend this aid if, as, and when that decision is made."

17. The legislative history of the side agreement at issue in this case is important in shedding light on the motives of defendants to evade the constitutional procedures which protect the people from hasty, ill advised, and premature decisions of government which might not be in the long term national interest. (See INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. at 949, quoting the Federalist No. 22, 51, 62, respecting "the bicameral requirement and the Presentment Clauses" as serving "essential constitutional functions".)

18. During the April 13 debate in the Senate, Senator Specter addressed the constitutional issue (Ex. 11 hereto, pages 6510-6511, April 13, 1989, Cong. Rec.) (13 Cong. Rec.) as follows:

"The other issue is the issue about letters from the subcommittee chairman or from the full committee chairman. The Senator from Colorado asks an important question: Is this constitutional? I doubt it. . . .

"But what we have here is the issue of the legislative veto. That has been litigated in the Supreme Court of the United States and we now know that one House cannot have a legislative veto. We know that two houses cannot have a legislative veto. We know that if a joint resolution is passed jointly it has to be approved by the President. Or, if it is vetoed then it has to be passed by two-thirds.

"Now, you have an arrangement where there will be a termination of the proposal by a disapproval by any one of four individual Members of Congress. . . .

"That is effectively stopping executive action on far less than a resolution passed by both Houses of Congress. If a resolution is passed by both Houses of Congress and disapproved and vetoed by the President, then it must obtain, as we all know, two-thirds of the membership. When the Senator from Colorado asks whether the approach can be constitutional, if it has an unconstitutional purpose, my initial answer to that is no, or at least probably not.

"If there is an effort to circumvent or subvert a constitutional provision, then it is immediately suspect and very likely unconstitutional. . . . .

"But it is highly irregular, if not totally unprecedented, to have the cessation of the executive action turn on the disapproval of any one of four individual Members of the Congress. (page 6510, April 13 Cong. Rec.)

"The legislative veto is a very important consideration, a complex term as to how the Congress overrules the President. We have set a variety of ways to do it, and the Supreme Court has put the brakes on and said you cannot do it unless you comply with the slow mechanism of the Constitution . . ."

19. While debating in the Senate on H.R. 17150 (page 6545, Cong. Rec. April 13, Ex. 14 hereto) Senator Helms made the following argument:

"Mr. President, an integral part of this bill, this proposal, even though it does not appear in the text, is the concept that funds authorized and appropriated by Congress will not be obligated by the President unless; "affirmed via letter from the bipartisan leadership of Congress and relevant House and Senate authorization committees and appropriation subcommittees".

"Frankly, the meaning of this clause is vague, but the obvious intent of it seems to be to allow one single chairman of a relevant committee or subcommittee to stop humanitarian aid to the freedom fighters.

"Mr. President, whether we want to or not, we have to look at the logical consequences of this so-called gentleman's agreement, because whether we like it or not, it is an unconstitutional arrangement. In practical terms it amounts to a legislative veto and a veto not just by one House, either the Senate or the House of Representatives, but by one committee, even indeed by one subcommittee, and when you come right down to it, by one chairman of one subcommittee.

"Mr. President, the bottom line is that there are at least five Senate committees and subcommittees that could claim to be "relevant" under this gentleman's agreement."

20. The arguments of Congressman Douglas, and Senators Armstrong, Specter and Helms all go the heart of the issue before the Court, i.e. the involvement of defendants in the legislative proceedings leading to Public Law 101-14. Prior to the prearranged introduction in Congress and enactment of the statute defendants entered into a "side agreement" which changed the terminal date of the appropriation in the bill from February 28, 1990 to November 30, 1989 absent affirmative written approval of 8 individual Members of Congress.

21. In Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579 (1952), a principal Supreme Court decision on the division of authority between Congress and the President, the Court ruled:

"In the framework of our Constitution, the President's power to see that the laws are faithfully executed refutes the idea that he is to be a lawmaker. The Constitution limits his functions in the law making process to the recommending of laws he thinks wise and the vetoing of laws he thinks bad. And the Constitution is neither silent nor equivocal about who shall make laws which the President is to execute. . . . .

The Constitution does not subject the law making power of Congress to presidential . . . supervision or control. . . . . .

The Founders of this Nation entrusted the law making power to the Congress alone in both good and bad times."

22. While there is a presumption that when the President acts he does so in an executive or administrative capacity, (See J.W. Hampton & Co. v. U.S., 276 U.S. 394, 406 (1928), that presumption is overcome by the explicit bicameral and presentment procedural requirements of Art. I, par. 1 and 7 of the Constitution. Here the calculated evasion of the bicameral and presentment requirements of the Constitution in the name of "bipartisanship" as expressed in the "side agreement", no matter how well intentioned, must be declared null and void.

23. Defendants have no discretionary power to refuse to execute Public Law 101-14 in accordance with its terms, whether they disagree with its terms or for some other reason, i.e. "bipartisanship". Kendall v. U.S., 37 U.S. (12 Pet.) 524

24. Although the defendants may have some discretion in implementation of Public Law 101-14, they have no discretion to ignore the standards for implementation contained in the statute, i.e. the February 28, 1990 termination date. The clear legislative intent of the law is to provide humanitarian assistance to the Nicaraguan Resistance until February 28, 1990, not November 30,1989.

25. On April 21, 1989, three days after defendant Bush signed Public Law 101-14, he published notice of continuation of the national emergency with respect to Nicaragua. (Weekly Compilation of Presidential Documents, Administration of George Bush 1989

p. 595), stating: "Because the actions and policies of the Government of Nicaragua continue to pose an unusual and extraordinary threat to the national security and foreign policy of the United States, the national emergency declared on May 1, 1985, and subsequently extended, must continue in effect beyond May 1, 1989 . . . . ." (Ex. Order No. 12513, May 1 1985, extended on May 1, 1989), Ex. 7).

26. The Congress recognized that emergency by providing funds to assist the Resistance in Nicaragua until February 28, 1989. The President signed the bill on April 18, although he had already joined in a March 24 agreement with several individual Members of Congress that he would not obey the law's command after November 30 without their written approval.

27. It is difficult to imagine a more egregious manipulation of procedures to evade the bicameral and presentment dictates of Art.I. The fact that the President could not get the votes of a majority of the Members of Congress without the "side agreement" does not justify the March 24 "deal".

28. If the "side agreement" is viewed as an impoundment arrangement, it fails to comply with the Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (included as Title X of the Congessional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974, signed June 12, 1974 (88 Stat. 332), and must therefore be declared null and void. (See also Local 2677, American Fed. of Gov. Emp. v. Phillips 385 F. Supp. 60 (1973) and citations therein on unconstitutionality of Executive impoundment of appropriated funds. (See further State Highway Commission of Missouri v. Volpe, 347 F. Supp. 950, aff'd 479 F. 2d 1099, on same point.)

The President must execute an appropriation law enacted by Congress as a constitutional duty, and cannot refuse because he disagrees, or enter into a "side agreement" that he will not execute the law in accordance with its terms, if Art. II and the separation of powers principle are to have meaning.

If Congress or the President want Public Law 101-14 amended to specify November 30, 1989, as the termination date for funding humanitarian assistance for the Nicaraguan Resistance, Art. I provides the exclusive method for changing the date from February 28, 1990, to November 30, 1989. And it matters not whether the "side agreement" is a legislative veto, an impoundment, an amendment, or a trespass against the separation of power principle, it is unconstitutional and thus null and void.

29. It might be argued that the "side agreement" is a useful "political invention" justified by the political realities in the unique circumstances surrounding the Congressional deadlock on aid to the Contras. (e.g. Justice White's dissent, INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. at 1003) However, as the majority in the Chadha case ruled, "But policy arguments supporting even useful "political inventions" are subject to the demands of the Constitution which defines powers and, with respect to this subject, sets out just how those powers are to be excercised. Explicit and unambiguous provisions of the Constitution prescribe and define the respective functions of the Congress and of the Executive in the legislative process," citing Art. I, par. 7, cl. 1 and 2.

30. Is this suit premature? The answer is "no", because in the "side agreement" the deal is done. Public Law 101-14 cannot be implemented or appropriated funds obligated after November 30, 1989 except upon unanimous and affirmative approval in writing of several leaders and "relevant" (whoever that might be") committee and subcommittee chairmen, despite the February 28, 1990 termination date in the statute itself.

31. It cannot be speculatively assumed that defendants will violate the "side agreement" they helped craft. So this case is ripe for decision now, and time is of the essence because of the November 30 date which will bring Contra aid to a halt, unless the "side agreement" is declared null and void by the this Court as demanded in the complaint for declaratory judgment which initiated this suit.

32. It cannot be contended that the Court should decline to decide the constitutional question raised in this case because there may be other statutory relief available to plaintiffs. Defendants have forestalled that possibility by agreeing not to comply with an existing statute.

33. As a result of the "side agreement", the vote of plaintiffs Burton, Smith and Crane for the law have been made ineffective, as has plaintiff Douglas, vote against the law. (See "Dear Colleague letter signed by plaintiffs Burton and Douglas, page 6434 April 13 Cong. Rec. at pages 6435 and 6424 for final vote, Ex. 13 hereto).

34. The "side agreement" at issue in this case collides head-on with a basic principle of constitutional law set forth in Bowsher v. Synar, 106 S. Ct. 3181 at 3187, as follows: "The Constitution does not contemplate an active role for Congress in the supervision of officers charged with the execution of the laws it enacts."

In the instant case a handful of members of Congress are given the power in the "side agreement" to block the defendants in their constitutional duty to implement Public Law 101-14 in accordance with the terms of its terminal date, i.e. February 28, 1990, not November 30, 1989, and agreement of defendants to fail in their duty does not "constitutionalize" an unconstitutional legislative action.

35. The "side agreement" is in effect a device or strategem permitting eight Members of Congress to share in the execution of Public Law 101-14. As held in Bowsher v. Synar, supra: "The structure of the Constitution does not permit Congress to execute the laws; it follows that Congress cannot grant to an officer under its control what it does not possess. Cf. INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, pp 3186-3189."

36. In the Bowsher case, supra, the Supreme Court stated the same idea in another way, i.e.: "To permit the execution of the laws to be vested in an officer answerable only to Congress would, in practical terms, reserve in Congress control over the execution of the laws.

37. While the facts in the Bowsher case are different, the constitutional principles involved are identical. The record does not indicate that the eight Members of Congress designated in the "side agreement" have been specifically authorized by Congress as a whole to act on its behalf, the execution of Public Law 101-14 is vested in them, thus Congress has reserved to itself control over the execution of the statute, and that is unconstitutional.

38. Based on the facts of record plaintiffs request and this Court must, per Rule 201(d), F.R.EV., take judicial notice of the adjudicative facts set forth in the exhibits attached hereto as a part hereof, as these facts are the kinds of facts which are not subject to reasonable dispute, they are generally known in this jurisdiction and these facts are capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned. (See Rule 201(b) and 803, F.R.EV.).

39. Time is of the essence in this case, as the "side agreement" at issue blocks funding for the Nicaraguan Resistance on November 30, 1989, 90 days prior to the February 28, 1990 date in the Act.

40. Therefore, plaintiffs request the Court, under Rule 57, F.R.C.P, to order a speedy hearing of this action for a declaratory judgment and advance it on the calendar, and to grant their motion for summary judgment in their favor forthwith.

CARL SHIPLEY,
Attorney for Plaintiffs.

CONCERN OVER CIVILIANS IN THE CONTRA CAMPS IN HONDURAS

HON. CHESTER G. ATKINS

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my concern over civilians in the Contra camps in Honduras. The United States provides all the funding for these camps, and we bear the responsibility for what takes place in them.

The agreement on aid for Nicaragua reached by the Congress and the President earlier this year was in part intended to encourage repatriation into Nicaragua or to other countries. However, there are no procedures that allow civilians within the camps to determine whether they would like to stay with the resistance, be repatriated to Nicaragua, or apply for refugee status.

The United Nations High Commissioner on Refugees has expressed a willingness to conduct interviews to make these determinations, but the Contras apparently will not permit these interviews to take place in a neutral setting.

Reports indicate that there is no mail service into and out of the Contra camps. Without such service inhabitants have no way to communicate with their relatives in Nicaragua, or indeed even to know if they are still alive. Few if any newspapers are permitted in the camps, so the Contras control all access to information. This imposed ignorance only serves to make people increasingly more hesitant to try to leave the camps. They are denied indications what the current situation is within Nicaragua or what their prospects would be if they were to try to return to their homes.

Mr. Speaker, the United States should stand for the free exchange of information, and for the freedom to live where and how you please. By continuing to subsidize the Contra camps while doing nothing to facilitate mail delivery or movement out of the camps, we turn our backs on this principle. We have an obligation to the people living within the camps, and this obligation extends beyond simply providing salaries, food, and shelter for the Contras. We must also provide those who wish to leave the Contra camps with avenues by which they can do so. We must not remain guilty of funding involuntary imprisonment, and by denying civilians within the Contra camps opportunities to leave, that is precisely what we have been doing.

MX AND MIDGETMAN: A UTILITY TEAM

HON. NORMAN D. DICKS

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, I don't expect the House to revisit the issue of ICBM modernization today during the debate on the fiscal year 1990 Defense appropriations bill. But we clearly must consider the implications of our actions last week as we move toward conference both on this bill, and on the authorization bill.

I want to reaffirm my support for the President's two-missile modernization plan. Many have criticized this plan, arguing that it is simply a political expedient. I take issue with that assertion.

Peter Zimmerman, who was a member of the U.S. delegation to the strategic arms reduction talks in Geneva has laid out the reasons that the two-missile program does in fact make sense in a recent article printed in the Los Angeles Times. His conclusion is that:

Since the two missile solution—whether by accident, by design or as a political expedient—is also likely to lead to the best deal in Geneva, it alone is the optimum choice.

I ask unanimous request that the full article written by Mr. Zimmerman be included in the RECORD, and hope that the points he raises will be taken to heart by our conferees, and the House as a whole, as we complete action on the defense funding bills.

MX AND MIDGETMAN: A UTILITY TEAM—DEPLOYING SOME OF EACH IS BEST BET FOR ARMS CONTROL

As Congress and the President near the decision point on the next defense budget, and as the date for new arms-control negotiations approaches, it becomes more necessary than ever to reach a binding decision on which American ICBMs to build and how to deploy them.

Indecision on our intercontinental missile force has endured for a decade; George Bush is the third President to confront it. His Administration's solution: Put 50 MX missiles on trains that will leave their garrisons when an attack is imminent; meanwhile, continue to develop the truck-mounted Midgetman ICBM at a slow pace.

This two-pronged approach in the budget Bush submitted to Congress seems to satisfy everyone and no one. Midgetman is Congress' missile; the MX is the Air Force's bird.

Midgetman is small, has the mobility of a truck, and carries only one warhead; MX is six times larger, can be moved easily only on trains, and carries 10 warheads. Both missiles can survive a Soviet first strike if they can dash fast enough so that the enemy must blindly barrage a huge area.

Arms controllers prefer Midgetman because it carries only one warhead and is not a particularly lucrative target for the other side, which would have to use two warheads to knock out one Midgetman. But Midgetman is expensive to buy and to run. It requires a gigantic "hardened mobile launcher," or HML, to haul it around either the Great Plains of the southwestern desert. HM's, which are tougher than tanks, aren't cheap. In addition, at least two men will be needed in the cab of each HML, 24 hours a day, every day.

The Air Force prefers the rail-garrison MX. Each missile is more deadly because it carries 10 weapons. Trains are cheap to buy or build; 50 special missile and command cars wouldn't cost as much as even a few HMLs. Furthermore, trains could roam the tracks in safety for hours or days waiting for the moment to retaliate after an attack, while HMLs would endure for only a few hours until the personnel in the cabs became fatigued.

Given three hours' advance warning of an attack, and the will to act, rail-garrison MX missiles are at least as survivable as HML's and their Midgetmen. In fact, we can be more confident of the design of the trains, because real trains were once tested against real atomic bombs in the Nevada desert. However, if a bolt-from-the-blue attack caught the trains in their garrisons on Strategic Air Command Bases, they would probably be destroyed.

The effort to choose just one new missile and deployment scheme has failed with good reason. No single missile system is best at meeting all strategic needs: delivering striking power against an enemy, riding out a first strike, providing arms-control stability and coming in at the right price over a 10- or 20-year life cycle. Furthermore, no matter how deployed, no missile system can be sure of survival unless an appropriate new arms-control agreement limits the size of the Soviet missile force that threatens this country.

If cost were no object, building 500 Midgetman missiles might be sufficient. However, the price-tag for such a system is around $40 billion, while putting the MX on trains will cost $5 billion or $6 billion. The MX missiles have already been built and paid for.

If a nuclear Pearl Harbor were an absolute impossibility, and if we were sure that we would always take decisive action to scramble the trains when we had warning of an attack, the rail-based MX alone would be satisfactory. But some of the American land-based missile force must be able to survive a surprise attack. A smaller number of Midgetmen could be deployed in ways that would let a part of the force escape with almost no warning at all, but the price for that survivability is very high.

To some extent, we must also deploy new missiles in order to negotiate away a large portion of our strategic arsenal. The Soviets have a rail-based missile, the SS-24, and a road-mobile one as well, the SS-25. With no mobile missiles in our arsenal, the American side has been severely handicapped in dealing with the Soviets. But the Bush Administration's choice of missile deployment now gives the chief U.S. strategic arms negotiator, Richard Burt, the levers he needs to extract the best possible deal from the Soviet Union when arms reduction talks resume a month from now in Geneva.

The decision to put MX on rails and afterwards to procure small numbers of Midgetmen was reached for political reasons, to satisfy Congress and the Air Force simultaneously. But consider: It will provide a cheap, deadly and moderately survivable new ICBM in the short run; a few years late, it will add a small missile that complements the MX by being stabilizing, highly survivable and, if only 200 are deployed, affordable.

Since the two-missile solution—whether reached by accident, by design or as a political expedient—is also likely to lead to the best deal in Geneva, it and it alone is the optimum choice.

THE RICHMOND BRIEFCASE STORY AND A HOMILY ON EXPECTATIONS

HON. NANCY L. JOHNSON

OF CONNECTICUT

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I include the following commencement speech given by Mr. David T. Kearns, the chief executive officer of Xerox Corp., at the Salisbury School in Salisbury, CT, on June 2, 1989.

BRIEFCASE STORY

This is a very special place—special for our family—Todd graduated in 1986 and of course Andrew is graduating today.

Two grandsons, Michael and Ryan Frame, are here today and maybe someday will go to school here as well I hope.

Shirley and I will miss our trips to the hilltop. In fact you may still find us hanging around the rink. In fact, Dick Flood, you may find it more difficult to get rid of us than it was to graduate Todd and Andy.

For me, making a difference is what life is all about.

This school has made a difference for Todd, for Andrew, and for our family and for that we say thank you.

I have been speaking out on the plight of the American public school system for the past few years. As a result of this work, I have a particular perspective of education in this country and how Salisbury fits.

It fits very well indeed.

I would like to quote from the Salisbury Mission statement.

"The Mission of Salisbury School is to instill within the individual student the self-confidence needed to develop intellectually, morally and physically.

"This school seeks to encourage each young man to find satisfaction and take pride in his accomplishments inside and outside the classroom, and to build a sense of self-worth as he formulates goals for the future."

This mission is being carried out by an incredibly competent and dedicated staff and teacher core.

At a time when our country is woefully short of teachers, we have been fortunate to have you with our boys.

What you do is important and what you do will make a difference.

For all the parents and the class of 1989, we say thank you.

I believe Salisbury has fulfilled that Mission for you, the class of 1989.

You appear to me to be a self-confident group of young men ready to take the next step.

The underlying theme of every commencement is the same. They are all about beginnings and endings, and this one is no exception.

You are stepping up from one rung on the ladder of life onto the next one.

That is tough, because, it means leaving behind the security of what you know and love, for the insecurity of the unknown.

But it is something you will have to do over and over again in your lives, and speaking from experience, it does get a little easier—but not much.

The education you have received at Salisbury is absolutely first rate and therefore your opportunities are enormous.

Twenty-five percent of all young people drop out of school each year.

Another 25 percent graduate each year—get a diploma—but cannot read or do even the most rudimentary arithmetic.

Another large group of students go on to college and are not prepared and therefore the colleges spend the first two years doing remedial work.

As a comparison, our Japanese competitors graduate 96 percent of all young people with an education equal to at least two years of college in the United States.

Now what does all this mean to the 1989 graduating class at Salisbury.

First of all, it has been said that most people cannot remember who spoke at their graduation much less remember what was said.

So listen up. There will be a quiz tonight and a real test in ten years.

The world you will have to deal with today is very different from the one I entered when I was your age.

It is different economically, socially, and politically.

But the most disturbing change I see is the erosion of our democratic values and ethical principles.

Today's global economy breeds a particularly destructive brand of amorality, where loyalty to the yen or the mark, or the pounds or the dollar often replaces loyalty to country.

We are producing a generation of Americans that neither understands nor appreciates what it means to be a citizen in a democratic society.

Values like equal rights for all, social and economic justice, the rule of law and tolerance of diversity are the underpinnings of our society.

Everything is not relative.

There are plenty of constants in our American values.

Truth is better than dishonesty—loyalty is better than betrayal—compassion is better than indifference.

At Salisbury you have been taught how to learn, think, discern with a strong sense of value.

That gives you an enormous advantage over the majority of Americans.

And a responsibility.

Most of you are going on to first-rate colleges and universities.

That means an opportunity to leverage your Salisbury experience.

Remember, what you have learned here will allow you to break out into new areas—try new things—new subjects.

The point I am making is that this is the time of your life to challenge yourselves.

I want to leave you with this thought.

HOMILY ON EXPECTATIONS

I am challenging each of you that starting this summer and each year of your life, you examine your level of expectation.

Reset those expectations regularly and I will guarantee that you will startle yourselves with what is possible.

Enjoy yourselves always.

A broad liberal education more than anything else I know will allow you to do that.

And always remember, the successful person will be those of you that believe that one man can make a difference and that everyone must try.

Go for it!

ENERGY POLICY AND CONSERVATION ACT AMENDMENTS

HON. PHILIP R. SHARP

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a bill today to assure the future development and increased usefulness of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve [SPR]. The SPR remains the backbone of our policy for dealing with an energy emergency. The SPR's existence, along with similar stockpiles held by other nations, may have helped prevent an oil crisis during the recent tanker war in the Persian Gulf. Few expenditures of our tax dollars have been more farsighted.

Our energy situation has changed since 1975, however, and a good program now needs to be made better. In June, the Congress extended the authorization for the SPR to April 1, 1990. The short extension was intended to give the administration and Congress time to consider and resolve several emerging policy issues related to the use and expansion of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve. These issues were raised in a clear and convincing manner by expert witnesses at a Subcommittee on Energy and Power hearing on April 19, 1989. I was persuaded that a simple extension or expansion of the SPR would restrict its usefulness.

The first issue concerns the use of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve as a response to a shortage of domestic oil. There is clear authority to use the SPR in response to any shortage of foreign oil; however, if the shortage is in domestic oil, the SPR may only be used if the cause is sabotage or an act of God. Following the Exxon Valdez oilspill, the Department of Energy [DOE] stated that they felt there was unclear or insufficient authority to use the SPR as a response to the rapid rise in gasoline prices because the shortage was in domestic oil rather than foreign oil.

The bill includes a section that expands the circumstances in which the President can use the SPR as a response to domestic oil shortages. As a result of the Exxon Valdez oilspill and the associated reduction in shipments to the west coast, we observed how seriously consumers can be hurt by only a relatively minor, short-lived interruption in supplies. We should learn from the experience and modify the SPR drawdown authority.

A second issue relates to the severity of an energy crisis in which the SPR can be used. Currently, the President may only use the SPR as a response to a severe energy supply interruption. The Energy Policy and Conservation Act [EPCA] currently requires this interruption to be of significant scope and duration, to be emergency in nature, and to have major adverse impact on national safety or national economy.

These restrictive requirements mean that the President may not be able to use the SPR for a regional oil shortage even if it meets the requirements for scope, duration, and impact on safety and economy. Additionally, the President cannot use the SPR as a means to prevent a minor shortage from developing into an emergency or to reduce the possibility of an emergency. Moreover, a Presidential declaration that a troubling situation is a significant national emergency may create the kind of psychological response that can make the problem worse.

Current policy calls for the use of the SPR early in an emergency, but the fear of a psychological response that could offset the economic effect of additional oil supplies is a powerful disincentive to ever use the SPR.

These very restrictive requirements for the use of the SPR were warranted when the SPR was much smaller and it was appropriate to ride out minor shortages and hold the SPR for only the most major oil shortages. Today, however, the SPR holds over 570 million barrels, and I believe the President should have greater flexibility to use the SPR early in a crisis to prevent shortages. The SPR is a strategic reserve, but it can and should be used in circumstances that are less than an energy apocalypse.

To meet the need for greater flexibility in the use of SPR, the bill includes new authority that allows the President to divert oil enroute to SPR for immediate use, use the SPR as a response to a severe regional shortage, and draw down the SPR early at reduced rates as a measure to prevent the development of a severe energy emergency.

The bill provides a range of responses to an energy crisis. This increased flexibility should make it easier to use the SPR earlier in an impending crisis and possibly even prevent a severe energy emergency. The response can also be tailored to an emergency and avoid the appearance of an excessive response to an important, but comparatively small, energy shortage. The bill limits the amount of oil that can be used under this new authority so that the SPR is not depleted to a point that it is unable to respond to a severe energy emergency.

Another issue raised at our hearing is the speed with which the SPR crude oil can make its way into commerce and actually reduce a shortage. Even by DOE's own estimates, they believe that they will take up to 3 weeks to sell and deliver the SPR oil. Then there will be an additional delay while the oil is transported to an oil refinery, refined, and distributed to the consumer. To reduce this delay, the bill requires for the first time that the SPR include refined petroleum products in its inventory. These products can be injected much more quickly into commerce and reduce the effects of an energy shortage.

Energy experts tend to agree that the greatest damage to the economy is done at the start of an oil shortage, when consumers or marketers hoard available products or bid up prices. Therefore, it is vital that products such as gasoline and heating oil be placed in commerce as early as possible in a crisis.

The storage of oil products is not intended to take the place of crude oil storage. Crude oil gives the Nation the greatest flexibility in responding to a variety of circumstances.

Crude oil is also the cheapest form of petroleum to store.

Storage of some product is warranted because refined product can be distributed to consumers more quickly than crude oil. For example, a supply of gasoline on the west coast would be very useful in the event of a disruption of Alaskan supplies, and storage of fuel oil in New England could accelerate the response to an interruption of east coast supplies. This immediate availability should have a significant moderating effect on hoarding and other psychological responses such as those that contributed to the seriousness of the energy crisis of 1973–74 and 1979.

A related issue is where the SPR crude oil and product is stored. Currently, all the oil is stored in caverns along the Texas-Louisiana gulf coast. This has a number of cost and distribution advantages.

EPCA currently requires DOE to evaluate the need for regional storage by considering the specific needs of each Petroleum Administration for Defense Districts [PADD's]. This analysis works well for the contiguous areas of the continental United States. However, it may not properly consider the unique characteristics and problems of the insular parts of the United States.

Specifically, Hawaii's energy distribution requirements are statutorily lumped together with California's and the other Western States when considering the need for a regional reserve. This bill does not require regional storage for insular areas; it simply recognizes their unique resource and transportation problems and allows DOE to consider regional storage for insular areas separate from the rest of their PADD.

Another concern addressed by this bill is the operational testing of the SPR. In 1985 DOE conducted a very successful test drawdown and sale of crude oil from the SPR. This test was done in response to a congressional mandate to test the reserve. DOE has been reluctant to conduct additional full-scale test sales and deliveries of oil. There are three reasons DOE should periodically continue to conduct tests similar to the 1985 test.

The sales and distribution of the oil allows industry to develop and retain a high level of familiarity with DOE procedures and operational requirements which will ease sales during actual crisis.

Sales, distribution, and refining of SPR oil during periodic tests builds public confidence in the SPR. It definitively answers the public's repeated question of whether DOE can really get the oil out of the ground. Confidence in the Government's ability to use the SPR is essential in reducing public anxiety and minimizing oil hoarding in the event of a shortage.

Sale and delivery of oil allows DOE the opportunity to test faster methods of selling oil. Speed of response to a crisis may be essential. Periodic test sales allow DOE to develop more rapid ways of responding to a Presidential mandate to sell SPR oil.

Finally, the bill requires expansion of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve beyond its currently planned size of 750 million barrels. Oil imports are increasing. This Nation needs to have 90 days of supplies simply to meet its commitment to the International Energy Agency. Therefore, we must expand the SPR to 1 billion barrels.

However, this country also has a budget crisis and any expansion will be expensive. We must give consideration to alternative methods of acquiring the oil other than the current practice of direct purchases. The Government cannot give up any control over the timing and circumstances for using the oil. What we can do is evaluate ways of allowing the private sector to finance the acquisition of the oil.

DOE is currently doing a study of these possibilities. My support for the expansion of the SPR to 1 billion barrels under present budget conditions is based on the assumption that the Congress and the Department of Energy can identify and agree on a suitable alternative financing mechanism. Expansion of the SPR must be a national priority, but so must reduction of the deficit.

The bill also includes studies related to export of domestic oil, the need for regional reserves, and the availability of Jones Act shipping waivers needed to better prepare us for use of the SPR during an emergency.

The bill also extends to December 31, 1993, title I of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act, the basic authority to build and use the Strategic Petroleum Reserve.

The Strategic Petroleum Reserve is a national resource; careful thought must go into how we can enhance its usefulness. During the fall, the Subcommittee on Energy and Power will hold hearings on this subject. I welcome constructive criticism and improvements to these proposals.

SECTION BY SECTION FOR ENERGY POLICY AND CONSERVATION ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1989

Section 1. Short title—Energy Policy and Conservation Act Amendments of 1989

Section 2. Extension of Title I of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act

Title I of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act is extended from its current expiration date of April 1, 1990 to December 1, 1993.

Section 3. Additional Authority to Divert Oil Enroute to SPR Storage and To Drawdown the SPR

Section 159 of EPCA is amended to allow the President to divert and sell commercial oil which has been purchased for the SPR and is enroute to the SPR but which has not yet been injected into SPR storage facilities. The President may use this authority under three different circumstances. In the first circumstance three conditions must be met. These conditions are:

1. that a severe energy supply interruption may be imminent,

2. that the price of crude oil may increase because of the supply interruption, and

3. that diverting this oil directly to commercial use would assist in preventing or reducing the severity of the impact of such interruption.

The President may also use this authority if two requirements are met. These requirements are:

1. that conditions exist that constitute or are likely to become a national or regional energy emergency of significant scope or duration, and

2. that diverting this oil directly to commercial use would assist in preventing or reducing the severity of the impact of such interruption.

The third circumstance when the President may use this authority is if there has been a drawdown and distribution ordered under Section 161 of EPCA.

If authority is exercised under the first two circumstances, the diversion may not continue for more than ninety days. The Secretary is required to send a monthly report to the Congress containing an accounting and assessment of these diversion activities.

For the period of SPR oil diversion, the annual fill rate requirement is reduced proportionately.

ADDITIONAL AUTHORITY TO DRAWDOWN THE STRATEGIC PETROLEUM RESERVE

Section 161 of EPCA is modified to expand the circumstances under which the President can order a drawdown of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve.

If either of the first two circumstances under which the President can divert oil enroute to the SPR for commercial sale exist, the President can also order a drawdown of the SPR of not more than 50 million barrels. He may order this drawdown only if there are more than 500 million barrels stored in the SPR. A drawdown under this authority may not exceed 90 days duration.

This section ensures that the SPR may be used as a response to domestic oil shortages as well as imported oil shortages and clarifies that DOE does not have to go through a formal rule making process to modify the SPR distribution plan if modification is necessary during a drawdown.

Section 4. Enlargement of the SPR

The ultimate size of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve is expanded to one billion barrels from the current planned size of 750 million barrels.

Section 5. Refined Product Reserve

This section requires that starting in FY 1991, 5% of all oil acquisitions for the SPR will be refined products.

Section 6. Test Drawdown

This section clarifies that a test drawdown and sale of SPR oil does not constitute a drawdown of the SPR. The Department of Energy is required to conduct a test drawdown and sale of not more than 5 million barrels of oil within one year of enactment.

Section 7. Increased Authority for Establishing Regional Petroleum Reserves.

This section requires DOE to evaluate insular areas of the United States separate from the Petroleum Administration for Defense Districts (PADDs) in which these islands are located when considering the need for regional petroleum reserves. This section does not require regional storage for insular areas; it simply recognizes their unique resource and transportation problems for purposes of considering their need for a regional storage.

Section 8. Studies and Reports

This section contains studies and reports related to the SPR and crude oil imports and exports. These studies are:

1. Export of SPR Oil to Obtain Refined Products—A study by DOE concerning special circumstances when export of SPR oil may be in our national interest.

2. Regional Reserves—A study by DOE of ways in which the cost of regional petroleum reserves could be shared with various states.

3. California and Alaskan North Slope Crude Oil—A study by DOE of the effects of exports of crude oil from California and the Alaskan Northern Slope.

4. Exports Under Existing Law—A study by the Department of Commerce to review the extent under which export controls could be modified under existing law to provide for additional exportation of domestic petroleum.

5. Jones Act Waivers—A study of how Jones Act requirements will affect a drawdown of the SPR.

The first four reports are due within 120 days of enactment. The last report is due within 150 days of enactment.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Energy Policy and Conservation Act Amendments of 1989".

SEC. 2. EXTENSION.

Title I of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6211 et seq.) is amended—

(1) is section 171, by striking out "April 1, 1990" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "December 31, 1993"; and

(2) in section 104(b)(1), by striking out "April 1, 1990" and inserting in lieu thereof "December 31, 1993".

SEC. 3. ADDITIONAL AUTHORITY.

"(i)(1) If—

"(A) the President finds that—"(i) a severe energy supply interruption may be imminent;

"(ii) the price of crude oil may increase substantially as a result of the circumstances on which the finding in clause (i) is based; and

"(iii) action taken under this subsection would assist directly and significantly in preventing or reducing the adverse impact of such interruption;

"(B) the President finds that—

"(i) circumstances, other than those described in subparagraph (A) or section 161(d), exist that constitute, or are likely to become, a national or regional energy emergency of significant scope or duration; and

"(ii) action taken under this subsection would assist directly and significantly in preventing or reducing the adverse impact of such emergency; or the Secretary may, subject to paragraph (2), suspend or curtail acquiring petroleum product for the Reserve and may sell any petroleum product acquired for storage in and in transit to, but not injected into, the Reserve.

"(C) there is a drawdown and distribution in effect under section 161,

"(2)(A) For each finding made by the President with respect to circumstances comprising any imminent interruption or any emergency under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (1), the Secretary may carry out this subsection for a period not to exceed 30 days.

"(B) The President may not make more than three findings under such subparagraphs with respect to the circumstances comprising any one imminent interruption or emergency, as the case may be.

"(3)(A) During any period in which there is activity carried out under this subsection, the Secretary shall transmit a monthly report to the Congress containing an account of such activities and an assessment of their effects.

"(B) The Secretary also shall transmit to the Congress a final report on such activities as part of the appropriate annual report made under section 165.".

(2) Section 167(b)(3) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 6247(b)(3)) is amended by inserting after "(g) of such section" the following: ", and from the sale of petroleum product under section 159(i)".

(4) Section 160(d) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 6240(d)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(4) For any fiscal year in which purchases of petroleum product are suspended or curtailed, or the sale of petroleum product is carried out, under section 159(i), the fill-rate requirements of paragraph (1)(B) shall be reduced by—

"(A) the amount of petroleum product not acquired for such fiscal year as a result of such suspension or curtailment; plus

"(B) the amount of petroleum product sold under such section during such fiscal year.".

(b) DRAWDOWN.—(1) Section 161 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 6241) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(h)(1) If the President makes a finding described in subparagraph (A) or (B) of section 159(i)(1), the Secretary may, subject to paragraph (2), draw down and distribute the Strategic Petroleum Reserve.

"(2) In no case may the Reserve be drawn down under this subsection—

"(A) in excess of 50,000,000 barrels with respect to any emergency or imminent interruption;

"(B) for more than 90 days with respect to any emergency or imminent interruption;

"(C) if there are fewer than 500,000,000 barrels of petroleum product stored in the Reserve; or

"(D) below the level of 500,000,000 barrels of petroleum product in the Reserve.

"(3) During any period in which there is a drawdown and distribution of the Reserve in effect under this subsection or subsection (c), the Secretary shall transmit a monthly report to the Congress containing an account of the drawdown and distribution and an assessment of its effect.".

(2) Section 3(8)(C) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 6202(8)(C)) is amended by striking out "imported".

(c) DISTRIBUTION IMPLEMENTATION—(1) Section 159(d) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 6239(d)) is amended by inserting the following before the period at the end of the first sentence: ", and in the case of implementing the Distribution Plan, such amendments may be prepared without regard to the requirements of section 553 of title 5, United States Code, section 501 of the Department of Energy Organization Act (42 U.S.C. 7191), and section 523 of this Act".

(2) Section 159(f)(A) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 6239(f)(A)) is amended by inserting before the semicolon the following: ", and in the case of implementing the Distribution Plan or carrying out section 159(i), without regard to the requirements of section 553 of title 5, United States Code, section 501 of the Department of Energy Organization Act (42 U.S.C. 7191), and section 523 of this Act".

(3) Section 161(e) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 6241(e)) is amended by inserting after "by rule" the following: "but without regard to the requirements of section 553 of title 5, United States Code, section 501 of the Department of Energy Organization Act (42 U.S.C. 7191), and section 523 of this Act".

(d) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—(1) section 159(e) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 6239(e)) is amended by inserting the following before the period at the end thereof: "or any action carried out as a result of a finding described in subparagraph (A) or (B) of subsection (i)(1)".

(2) Section 161(d) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 6241(d)) is amended by inserting before the period the following: "or by a drawdown and distribution under subsection (h)".

SEC. 4. ENLARGEMENT OF RESERVE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 159 of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6239), as amended by section 3(a) of this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(j) The Secretary shall, by January 30, 1991, amend the Strategic Petroleum Reserve Plan to provide plans for completion of storage of 1,000,000,000 barrels of petroleum products in the Reserve. Such amendment shall comply with the provisions of this section and shall contain the Secretary's detailed plans for the design, construction, leasing, or other acquisition, and for the fill of, storage and related facilities of the Reserve to achieve such storage. In assessing alternatives in the development of such plans, the Secretary shall consider leasing privately owned storage facilities.".

(b) IMPLEMENTATION.—Section 160 of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6240) is amended—

(1) in subsection (c)(3)—

(A) by striking out "fiscal years 1988 and 1989" and inserting in lieu thereof "fiscal year 1995"; an

(B) by striking out "at least 750,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "1,000,000,000"; and (2) in subsection (d)(1)—

(A) by striking out "750,000,000" in subparagraph (A) and inserting in lieu thereof "1,000,000,000";

(B) by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (B) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or"; and

(C) by adding at the end the following:

"(C) as of January 30, 1991, the Secretary has amended the Strategic Petroleum Reserve Plan as required by section 159 (j).".

SEC. 5. REFINED PRODUCT RESERVE.

Section 160 of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6240) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(f)(1) Using funds appropriated for fiscal year 1991 for the planning, administration, and acquisition and construction of storage and related facilities, the Secretary shall—

"(A) acquire and develop interim storage facilities to the extent necessary to carry out paragraph (2)(A) in fiscal year 1992; and

"(B) amend the Strategic Petroleum Reserve Plan to the extent necessary to carry out this subsection.

"(2) Beginning with fiscal year 1992, the Secretary shall—

"(A) provide that not less than 5 percent of the total volume of petroleum product acquired for the Reserve in each fiscal year is refined petroleum product; and

"(B) develop and acquire (with funds available for the planning, administration, and acquisition and construction of storage and related facilities for the Reserve) interim and permanent storage facilities necessary to carry out this subsection.".

SEC. 6. TEST DRAWDOWN.

U.S.C. 6241(g)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

"(g)(1) To provide a continuing evaluation of the implementation of the Distribution Plan, the Secretary may carry out test drawdowns and distributions under this subsection through the sale or exchange of not more than 5,000,000 barrels of crude oil from the Reserve during each such drawdown and distribution.".

(2)(A) Section 161(g)(7) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 6241(g)(7)) is amended—

(i) by striking out "such title or" and inserting in lieu thereof "such title,"; and

(ii) by inserting before the period the following: ", or section 501 of the Department of Energy Organization Act".

(B) Section 161(g)(8) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 6241(g)(8)) is amended by striking out "the drawdown" in the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "any drawdown".

(C) Section 167(d) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 6247(d)) is amended by striking out "out subsection (g)" and inserting in lieu thereof "out under subsection (g)".

(b) MANDATED TEST DRAWDOWN.—(1) The Secretary of Energy shall, commencing within one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, carry out a test drawdown and distribution under section 161(g) of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act.

(2) In carrying out paragraph (1) the Secretary shall utilize, to the maximum extent practicable, electronic communication devices and services to expedite the transmission of documents so that the Secretary may make findings and conclusions with respect to the feasibility, benefits, disadvantages, and costs of utilizing such devices and services during a drawdown and distribution of the Reserve. The Secretary shall include such findings and conclusions in the report required by paragraph (8) of such section 161(g).

(3) The requirement of this subsection shall not apply if the President determines—

(A) that implementation of the Distribution Plan is required for any reason other than compliance with this subsection; or

(B) that such test drawdown and distribution would have a significant negative economic effect.

SEC. 7. INCREASED AUTHORITY FOR ESTABLISHING REGIONAL PETROLEUM RESERVES.

Section 157(a) of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6237(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "The" in the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "(1) the"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph: "(2) For purposes of carrying out this section—

"(A) any State that is an island shall be considered to be a separate Federal Energy Administration Region, as defined in title 10, Code of Federal Regulations in effect on November 1, 1975;

"(B) determinations made with respect to Regions other than States that are islands shall be made as if such islands were not a part of the Regions; and

"(C) with respect to determinations made for any State that is an island, the term 'refined petroleum product' shall include crude oil.".

SEC. 8. STUDIES AND REPORTS.

(a) EXPORT OF SPR OIL TO OBTAIN REFINED PRODUCT.—(1) The Secretary of Energy shall carry out a study to determine the feasibility and desirability of exporting crude oil from the Strategic Petroleum Reserve—

(A) in exchange for foreign refined petroleum product; or during a drawdown or a diversion under section 161 or 159(i), respectively, of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act.

(B) for the purpose of having it refined outside the United States for consumption of the resulting product in the United States.

(2) In carrying out such study, the Secretary shall determine the changes in existing law or regulation that would be necessary to carry out such exportation.

(3) The Secretary of Commerce shall provide the Secretary of Energy with information and other similar assistance necessary to carry out this subsection.

(b) REGIONAL RESERVES.—The Secretary of Energy shall carry out a study to determine—

(1) the feasibility, desirability, and costs of establishing regional petroleum reserves with Federal and non-Federal funding; and

(2) incentives necessary to obtain participation by States in establishing such reserves.

(c) CALIFORNIA AND ALASKAN NORTH SLOPE CRUDE OIL.—The Secretary of Energy shall carry out a study to determine—

(1) whether exports of crude oil from California and the Alaskan North Slope would raise or lower wellhead prices, and the total production, of such crude oil;

(2) whether the effects of such exportation on prices and production would benefit or harm consumers in the United States;

(3) whether the construction of a new export oil refinery in Alaska would benefit or harm consumers of refined oil product in the United States; and

(4) whether exports of crude oil from the Alaskan North Slope or elsewhere in the United States would increase or decrease the prices and production of crude oil, and the prices of refined petroleum products, on the West Coast or in any other region of the United States.

(d) EXPORTS UNDER EXISTING LAW.—The Secretary of Commerce shall, in consultation with the Department of Justice, carry out a study to determine the extent to which export controls could be expanded under existing law to provide for additional exportation of domestic petroleum.

(e) JONES ACT WAIVERS.—(1) The Secretary of Energy shall carry out a study, with the cooperation of other Federal agencies, to determine the need for a general waiver of the requirements of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920 (commonly known as the "Jones Act") to assure the availability of a sufficient supply of tankers to distribute crude oil from the Strategic Petroleum Reserve at the onset of a severe energy supply interruption involving a disruption in supplies of imported crude oil.

(2) To assist the Secretary in carrying out this subection, the following shall be provided to the Secretary within 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act:

(A) The Secretary of the Treasury shall provide a legal opinion, concurred in by the Attorney General, on whether and under what circumstances a Presidential finding of a severe energy supply interruption, as defined in section 3(8) of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6262(8)), is a sufficient basis for a general waiver of the requirements of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920.

(B) The Secretary of Transportation shall provide a description and analysis of the number, capacity, ownership, and employment status of tankers eligible for the United States coastwise trade—

(i) that meet both environmental requirements for the transportation of crude oil and the size and loading restrictions of Strategic Petroleum Reserve marine terminals and marine terminals at United States discharge ports; and

(ii) that (I) would be available on June 30, 1989, and (II) are projected to be available on January 1, 1995, to distribute crude oil from the Strategic Petroleum Reserve at the onset of a severe energy supply interruption involving a disruption in supplies of imported crude oil.

(C) The Secretary of Defense shall provide an analysis of the Department of Defense requirements, in a military crisis concurrent with a disruption in supplies of crude oil from the Middle East, for tankers which otherwise might be available to distribute crude oil from the Strategic Petroleum Reserve.

(f) REPORTS.—(1) The Secretary of Energy, and the Secretary of Commerce with respect to subsection (d), shall, within 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, transmit to the Congress reports containing the findings and conclusions of the studies carried out under subsections (a) through (d) of this section.

(2) The Secretary of Energy shall, within 150 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, transmit to the Congress the report containing the findings and conclusions of the study carried out under subsection (e).

THE POWER SQUADRONS REACH 75-YEAR MILESTONE

HON. CONSTANCE A. MORELLA

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the 75th anniversary of the United States Power Squadrons [USPS]. Formed on February 2, 1914, and incorporated about 1 year later, USPS has grown from its initial membership of 477 members in 15 squadrons to a remarkable 66,022 members in 454 squadrons operating in the continental United States, Hawaii, the Panama Canal Zone, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Japan. Initially, the primary focus of USPS was on safe boat handling. But as World War I approached, USPS opened classes for the study of seamanship, signaling, navigation, and naval procedures. More than 5,000 persons who attended the classes later entered the armed forces, many receiving naval commissions on the basis of their training with USPS. As peace came and went with the start of World War II, USPS opened navigational classes and many graduates were again commissioned by the Navy based on their USPS training.

With the return of peace, USPS experienced significant growth in popularity as well as expansion into Canada. On October 27, 1947, the Canadian Sail and Power Squadrons was chartered, with USPS figuring heavily into its inception. In July 1962, USPS signed an agreement with the National Ocean Service to provide information concerning discrepancies between information on nautical charts and what USPS members observe. On the occasion of its 60th anniversary in 1974, USPS constructed a new headquarters building. USPS is a nonprofit organization and does not receive funding from Federal, State, or local governments and agencies. I congratulate the United States Power Squadrons on their 75th anniversary and thank them for their continued excellent awareness in the boating world.

RUTH JACOBSON CELEBRATES HER 90TH BIRTHDAY

HON. BERNARD J. DWYER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. DWYER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to pay tribute to Mrs. Ruth Jacobson of Perth Amboy, NJ, on the occasion of her 90th birthday.

Ruth Jacobson's life has been marked by a sincere and deep interest in serving others. She has spent more than 60 years giving of herself to her community and has demonstrated compassion and genuine feeling for people less fortunate than herself. She has touched the lives of many, always manifesting ability, sincerity, courage, and love.

Ruth has not sought honors, although she has often been honored. She is that rare combination of a leader and a worker—a person whose reason for being is tied to community service. When her late husband, Isadore Jacobson, passed on, Ruth valiantly pressed forward reflecting both her own dedication to her community as well as his.

Mrs. Jacobson has served with distinction in a wide variety of community organizations. She has been on the board of directors of the Kiddie Keep Well Camp for underprivileged children for 58 years and has been a member of the Perth Amboy Local Assistance Board for more than 50 years. In addition she has been a supporter of the Jewish Family Service; the Jewish Community Council of Perth Amboy; the American Red Cross; the Perth Amboy YM-YWJA; the Jewish Federation of Greater Middlesex County; Hadassah; Deborah Hospital; Shaarey Tefiloh Synagogue in Perth Amboy; Beth Mordecai Temple in Perth Amboy; the National Council of Jewish Women; the Central New Jersey Jewish Home for the Aged—where she was founder; Brandeis Women; Red Feather United Fund—now United Way; the Jewish Community Center in Edison; Hillel Academy; Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society; Solomon Brody Hebrew School; and many, many others.

Ruth Jacobson's commitment to her community transcends the limits of race, creed, color and national origin. Her commitment, enthusiasm, interest, support and effort is worthy of particular note because on this, her 90th birthday, she continues to participate on a variety of boards, committees, and functions that serve has a role mcdel to potential young leaders who are interested in community volunteer work.

I feel privileged, Mr. Speaker, to have known and benefited from Ruth Jacobson's dedication and am honored to represent her in the U.S. Congress. She has touched so many with her love and her willingness to share that the gala birthday party on the occasion of her 90th birthday is an outpouring of thanks from all who have served with her and from those whom she has served.

NURSING HOME VIEWERS' RIGHTS ACT

HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

OF MARYLAND

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing, along with my colleague Senator ROTH, the Nursing Home Viewers' Rights Act. Nursing homes work long and hard attempting to provide a home-like environment for their elderly residents. Recreational activity is just one important element contributing to a high quality of life in a nursing home. The viewing of video cassette films, often included in the activity program of a nursing home, is an activity that brings happiness and enjoyment to elderly residents. This recreational activity is now being threatened.

Nursing homes rent video cassettes to show their residents in common living areas. Residents are not charged for the movie and it is not open to the public. Many nursing homes in my district, and others throughout the country, have received letters asserting that they may be sued for copyright infringement if they do not pay yearly fees to a licensing organization for the privilege of showing video cassettes.

The controlling section of copyright law is, unfortunately, anything but clear. Let me explain. When the Supreme Court, in 1984, wrote its decision in Sony Corp. v. Universal City Studios, Inc., 464 U.S. 417 (1984), it created the "home use" exception. As Douglas Reid Weimer, legislative attorney, writes in a CRS report entitled Videocassette Recorders: Legal Analysis of Home Use, "the initial consideration in the application of copyright law to the home use of VCR's is a determination of what constitutes a home for the purposes of copyright law and the application of the home use doctrine." Unfortunately, copyright law does not explicitly define what a home is.

It seems logical to infer that the opposite of a home performance would constitute a public performance. Under clause (1), section 101 of Title 17, "to perform or display a work 'publicly' means to perform or display it at a place open to the public or at any place where a substantial number of persons outside of a normal circle of a family and its social acquaintances is gathered." By this definition, the viewing of a videocassette in a nursing home does not qualify a public performance. It remains unclear whether or not a nursing home would qualify for a home use exception. We believe it should.

I invite my colleagues to join me in making it explicit in law that individuals in nursing homes and similar facilities providing long-term health care, be exempt from copyright infringement if they use a television and a video cassette recorder to display and do not directly charge for the performance.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the elderly and the ailing should have the same opportunity to enjoy great films on videocassette as individuals healthy and wealthy enough to stay in private homes. Nursing homes have no intention of becoming public movie houses. They have no commercial interest in showing videos. It is not too much to ask that nursing home residents be able to gather in a common area, really a living room, of the facility to watch a movie. For many elderly people, a nursing home is home in the fullest sense of the word. While it may not conjure up the traditional idea of home, this Nation's 1.5 million nursing home residents have a right to the same conditions of in-house entertainment as the non-nursing home community.

This is a small bill that could make a big difference in the lives of many. I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring the Nursing Home Viewers' Rights Act.

OLDER WORKERS BENEFIT PROTECTION ACT

HON. WILLIAM (BILL) CLAY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of H.R. 3200, the Older Workers Benefit Protection Act. This bill reaffirms the original intent of Congress when it passed the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 [ADEA]: To preclude employers from discriminating against older workers with respect to all types of employee benefits. It also reaffirms the limited exception to that broad principle: If an age-based differential in benefits under a bona fide employee benefit plan is justified by significant cost considerations, observance of the terms of that plan may protect the employer from what would otherwise be a violation of ADEA.

Recently the Supreme Court, in Public Employees Retirement System of Ohio v. Betts, —— U.S. ——, 109 S.Ct. 256 (1989), upset nearly 20 years of settled interpretation of ADEA by the courts and two Federal agencies by ruling that employers have nearly unfettered authority to structure employee benefit plans in ways that clearly discriminate against older workers.

Justice Anthony Kennedy, writing for the majority of the Court, turned aside the plain language of the statute and the ample legislative history on this issue to hold that the only way that an employer could violate section 4(f)(2) of ADEA—the exemption for bona fide employee benefit plans that are not a subterfuge to evade the purposes of the law—was if the employer also discriminated in some other nonfringe benefit aspect of the employment relationship.

In addition, the Court reversed the decisions of every appellate court that had ruled on the issue by requiring employees to bear the burden of proving that the employee benefit plan was a subterfuge to evade the act. Prior to Betts, under both Court and Federal agency precedents, the employer had the burden of providing that its plan was not a subterfuge.

Finally, the Court shielded plans that were established prior to the enactment of ADEA—except for subsequent substantive amendments to those plans—from the reach of ADEA. In other words, unlike the legal treatment given to infractions of civil rights laws generally, the Court would permit employers that established discriminatory plans prior to ADEA's enactment in 1967 to continue to discriminate in ways that would clearly violate ADEA were the plan to be adopted today.

As Justice Thurgood Marshall points out in his dissent:

The majority today immunizes virtually all employee benefit programs from liability under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967. * * * Henceforth, liability will not attach under the ADEA even if an employer is unable to put forth any justification for denying older workers the benefits younger ones receive, and indeed, even if his only reason for discriminating against older workers in benefits is his abject hostility to, or his unfounded stereotypes of them. In reaching this surprising result, the majority casts aside the estimable wisdom of all five Courts of Appeals to consider the ADEA's applicability to benefit programs, of the two federal agencies which have administered the Act, and of the Solicitor General as amicus curiae, all of whom have concluded that it contravenes the text and history of the Act to immunize discrimination against older workers in benefit plans which is not justified by any business purpose. * * *

The Court's outrageous departure from well-settled law under ADEA cannot stand. The Older Workers Benefit Protection Act restores the law to what it was before the Court's decision in Betts. It reaffirms Congress' original intent in enacting the Age Discrimination in Employment Act and clarifies and codifies the traditional interpretation of the statue by the executive branch agencies responsbile for administering the act from its inception.

Congress must move swiftly to correct the tremendous injustice done to the millions of older workers in this country by the Supreme Court. In Betts, the Court gave employers an unsolicited gift they never imagined possible even in their wildest dreams: virtual immunity for their employee benefit plans from ADEA violations. Congress must rescind this gift before employers' dreams become older workers' nightmares.

EXPLANATION OF "NO" VOTE ON FSLIC BAILOUT

HON. PAUL B. HENRY

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, in all likelihood—depending on the exigencies of the legislative process as it unfolds today—I shall be voting against the S&L recapitalization proposal on final passage. I would like to take a moment to explain my reasons for doing so.

Let me say that I am strongly supportive of the regulatory reforms imposed on the thrift industry in the legislation. When President Bush originally submitted his proposals to the Congress at the beginning of the year, much of the public and the media speculated that Congress would not have the fortitude to enact substantive regulatory reform of the industry. It was generally assumed that special interests would overwhelm the public good in our efforts to end the speculation within the thrift industry which created this massive problem.

The critics, however, were surprised. For at every step of the way, the regulatory reforms adopted by the Congress were in fact tougher and more substantive than even those originally unveiled in the President's proposal. The Senate measure was tougher than the President's proposal. The House measure was tougher than the Senate proposal. In addition, the House stripped out the special provisions the Banking Committee had included to give favored treatment to a few lenders.

By and large, the regulatory reforms were real and meaningful. They will do much to protect the American people against this sort of problem developing again. And the record will show that I voted for the toughest of regulatory reforms: Increased capitalization standards, reforming administrative "good will" practices, toughened criminal sanctions, disallowing speculative investments, et cetera. Why then am I opposing this legislation?

I oppose the legislation, Mr. Speaker, because of the capitalization procedures being utilized—not because of the regulatory reforms. I support the effort of Representative LAFALCE to put the entire recapitalization on budget and on Gramm-Rudman. Roughly 75 percent of the costs of the recapitalization being passed on to taxpayers can be attributed to the debt financing provisions of this recapitalization. I oppose circumventing the budget disciplines we agreed to as a Congress with the adoption of Gramm-Rudman, and I believe that true cash financing of the recapitalization is far preferable in terms of public policy than the long-term debt financing in the current legislation.

The second reason I oppose the bill is that the capitalization distribution is not equitably distributed. When the Northeast-Midwest coalition sought an opportunity to present to the Congress amendatory language which would at least allocate a portion of the recapitalization costs for FSLIC based on assigning costs to those most responsible for the current crisis in the FSLIC system, we were not even afforded the courtesy of presenting our case by the Rules Committee which refused to allow consideration of the issue. We have before us one of the largest capital transfers, on a regional basis, from one region of the country to another in the history of our Nation. Why should each Michigan citizen, for example, be assessed upwards of possibly $1,000 per capita to atone for the sins of the speculators in Texas?

Yes, we have a major problem which cries for immediate relief as costs escalate with each day of debate. But refusal to allocate the fiscal burdensharing on a more equitable distribution basis, as well as the senseless added costs of debt financing, are matters which I must oppose on principle.

THE SCIENCE MUSEUM ASSISTANCE ACT

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, along with 11 consponsors from the Science, Space, and Technolgy Committee, I am today introducing a bill entitled the "Science Museum Assistance Act."

This legislation would create mechanisms at the National Science Foundation to facilitate the exchange of education programs from one museum to another. It would also create a program of grants at the NFS to encourage science museums to develop innovative approaches to dealing with the problem of science illiteracy in our country. By fostering both formal and informal science education, this legislation would help increase science and technology literacy in America.

Mr. Speaker, science museums are no longer mere collections of scientific and technological memorabilia. They are excellent interpreters of scientific and technological information for the general public. In recent testimony before the House Committee on Science, Space, and Technology, Dr. Charles Howarth of the New Jersey Science and Technology Center spoke of the influence of science museums in local communities. Dr. Howarth stated that "* * * science museums have redefined their relationship to the schools and the community . . . today's museums are powerhouses of education."

These nonprofit institutions provide interactive exhibits, demonstrations, and a range of education programs designed to further public understanding of science and technolgy. Interdisciplinary in nature, with an emphasis on all the sciences and technology and the ways these disciplines interact with society, these institutions are open for use by the general public.

Science museums increase scientific literacy in two ways. One is through informal programs within the museum. Because these programs are voluntary and recreational in nature, they can informally and indirectly communicate vital scientific and technological concepts to a variety of people. These programs frequently involve a "hands on," interactive learning experience. For example, an exhibit on fiber optics at the Franklin Institute in Philadelphia illustrates the variety of exciting ways this technology can be used to transmit information. Participants are able to directly interact with a variety of fiber optic circuits, thereby learning in a first-hand manner the power of this technology to carry sound, light, computer, or television information.

Science museums play an even more direct role in science education by acting in partnership with local school systems. Museum staff members are often involved in traditional formal science education by developing programs and working in close association with teachers and students either in the museum or in the local classroom. Museum staffs often provide assistance in helping teachers develop new scientific concepts for use in their classrooms. Many science museums have developed curricular material and teaching kits for science teachers to use at all age levels.

Despite the important role they play in science education, these institutions face two major problems today. One has to do with the dissemination of excellent education programs for use by other museums. The second has to do with the problem of funding new museum projects. Both of these problems are addressed in this legislation.

One type of award to be made under this legislation would assist established science museums, with well developed and highly sophisticated educational programs, with replicating and disseminating their best programs to institutions which are less well established. Awards made under this program are designed to facilitate the transfer of educational programs from one institution to others, on a regional or national basis.

A second type of award would be available to assist new science museums to work with established science museums either to acquire the educational programs described above or to develop new educational programs appropriate to their local situation.

Both of these award programs require an involvement in and lasting commitment to development of the museum program by members of the local community, including school authorities, community groups, industries, and local businesses.

Mr. Speaker, the science and technology literacy of our citizens is vital to the continued cultural and economic growth of our Nation. Achieving this literacy can be accomplished through a multitude of paths, and it is vital that we utilize every path available. Science museums are an important path to science and technology literacy, and we should do everything possible to foster their development.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would like to briefly summarize the salient features of this bill:

SUMMARY

Section 1. Short Title.—This Act may be cited as the "Science Museum Assistance Act."

Section 2. Findings.—The Congress finds that: (1) science museums play an important role in increasing the scientific literacy of the American people through both informal and formal science education; (2) despite the vital role these museums can play in fostering scientific literacy, they face major problems with the dissemination of excellent educational programs for use by other museums with funding of new museum projects.

Section 3. Purposes.—The purposes of this legislation are to: (1) foster general science literacy in our Nation; (2) encourage science museums to function as liaisons of scientific and technological information between scientific professionals and members of the general public; (3) enable science museums to develop programs which will enhance both formal and informal science education in their regional areas; (4) foster the involvement of the total community, incliding science museums, school authority, academic institutions, industries, and local businesses, in the processes of formal and informal science education.

Section 5. Establishment of Program.—A competitive, merit based, program will be established by the National Science Foundation (NSF) in order to make the services of science museums more widely available and to foster their involvement in local science and technology education. These awards will be made for two purposes:

(1) One type of award would facilitate the dissemination of model educational programs. These awards would assist established science museums, with well developed educational programs, to replicate and disseminate their best programs to institutions which are less well established.

(2) A second type of award would encourage the development of new science museum programs. These grants would be available to assist developing new science museums to work with established science museums either to acquire the educational programs described above or to develop new educational programs appropriate to their local situation.

Section 6. Selection Criteria.—The NSF will establish a peer review process for recipients of these awards.

(1) Selection criteria for the program to disseminate model programs should include, but not be limited to the following: (a) the potential impact of for the educational program on formal or informal science education outside of the immediate region of the developing institution; (b) the capability of the institution to provide wide based dissemination of the material to other institutions; (c) the capability of recipient institutions to properly and effectively utilize the educational program, and to incorporate this into a coherent development pattern, so as to enhance formal and informal science education in the region; (d) the overall excellence of the proposed program.

(2) Selection criteria for grants to encourage development of new science museum programs should include, but not be limited to the following: (a) the involvement and commitment by members of the local community, including museum staff, school authorities, community groups, industries, and local businesses to development of a new museum program; (b) the extent of matching funds provided by the new museum program; (c) the experience and qualifications of staff of the museum program; (d) the overall excellence of the proposed program.

Section 7. Program Management.—Because the intent of this legislation is to have a widespread impact on science education, it should be managed through the Science and Engineering Education (SEE), activity at NSF in close collaboration with the various disciplinary research activities.

Section 8. Authorization of Appropriations.—This bill calls for an appropriation to the NSF of $10 million for fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary for subsequent fiscal years.

H.R. 3072, DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS, FISCAL 1990

HON. WALTER B. JONES

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, on the Transportation appropriations bill, we debated a $64 million restoration for Coast Guard funding. Eventually, the House voted in favor of that move.

During yesterday's debate, it was made clear that the Defense appropriations bill provides the key to proper funding of the Coast Guard.

This bill contains $300 million for the Coast Guard. JOHN MURTHA, JOE MCDADE, SILVIO CONTE, and others are responsible for this, and they are to be highly commended.

It would be better for all Coast Guard funding to be in the Transportation appropriations, but given the constraints of 302(b) budget allocations, this is the next best thing. There is rationale for the national defense function of the budget to provide Coast Guard funding. The Coast Guard becomes part of the Navy in wartime. It is in charge of port security and the maritime defense zones off our shores. It is a military force in every sense of the word.

How crucial is this $300 million to the Coast Guard?

Without this money, the House would have voted for essentially level funding for the Coast Guard. It would be approving a mere $7 million increase over fiscal 1989 money. Effectively no increase. No increase for inflation. No increase for cost-of-living pay raises. No increase for expanded drug interdiction. No increase to cope with oilspills.

Without this $300 million, we would see curtailed patrols, unfilled billets, closed search and rescue stations, deferred maintenance, and delayed replacement of boats, planes, and equipment.

Without this $300 million, the House would be approving a budget for the Coast Guard of $560 million below President Bush's budget request.

So this $300 million is absolutely crucial. And those on the Appropriations Committee who have brought it to us are to be congratulated.

But this is not the end of the process. It is just as vital that the Senate also commit $300 million in Defense appropriations to the Coast Guard. Every dollar that the Senate drops will curtail Coast Guard effectiveness in some way.

So as I congratulate Mr. WHITTEN and Mr. CONTE and Mr. MURTHA and MR. MCDADE, I urge our appropriators to keep fighting. Be vigilant and strong in conference. Let's make sure the Senate is as responsive as you have been. Let's keep this $300 million in the final bill we send to the President.

CLEAN AIR

HON. SANDER M. LEVIN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the recent transmittal to Congress of the President's Clean Air Act legislation was a welcome and overdue development in the effort to improve the Nation's air. I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of this legislation.

The debate on overhauling the Clean Air Act has been stalled for more than a decade. The Reagan administration's manifest indifference to clean air legislation, combined with clean air gridlock in Congress, has left this issue dead in the water for too many years. During this time, acid rain, air toxics and urban smog have been devastating our Nation's lakes and forests and endangering the health of millions of Americans.

Mr. Speaker, we can delay no longer. President Bush's clean air package, while imperfect, has broken the stalemate on this issue. Although I do not agree with every aspect of the President's package, this legislation serves as a starting point for reauthorization of an environmentally strong Clean Air Act. I look forward to working to improve this legislation, particularly in the area of air toxics.

Even as the President's package is being introduced in Congress, some are saying that it doesn't go far enough or fast enough. They say there can be no compromise of any kind on clean air issues. The indifference of the Reagan years suffocated action on clean air. It would be tragic if inflexibility on any side prevented reauthorization legislation from reaching the floor during the 101st Congress. After 13 years of delay, we have an opportunity to end the deadlock and move forward on cleaning up the Nation's air. We can work to improve the bill, but we cannot afford further delay.

FIFTEEN YEARS AGO: NIXON KNEW HIS DAYS WERE NUMBERED

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow is the 15th anniversary of the day that Nixon officially knew that his days as President were numbered. Fifteen years ago tomorrow Nixon revealed that he had in fact ordered the Federal Bureau of Investigation to halt its investigation of the break-in of the Democratic Party Headquarters in the Watergate Building.

Transcripts of tapes released on August 5 demonstrate that during conversations with H.R. Haldeman, Nixon had knowingly interfered with the FBI's investigations as early as June 23, 1972, 6 days after the Watergate break-in. In addition Nixon also stated that he had kept his portion of the record hidden from investigating organizations, his own attorneys as well as the public.

This revelation vaporized what little was remaining of Nixon's backing in Congress, which had steadily been dwindling since the House Judiciary Committee approved three strongly bipartisan articles of impeachment to be considered on the floor of the House.

"I cannot in good conscience, turn away from the evidence of evil that is, to me, so clear and compelling," stated Republican Representative Lawrence Hogan. This comment set the mood for other undecided members of the House Judiciary Committee who joined the rest of the committee in resolving that the President should be impeached.

Inside of 2 days after making his statement of collusion, which he remarked did not in his mind warrant "the extreme step of impeachment," the 10 members who had originally voted against impeachment reversed their opinions and stated that based upon the new evidence they would all vote for impeachment. Now the vote for impeachment was essentially unanimous.

At about the time of Nixon's admission of complicity there were major defections from the Republican party leadership and acknowledgement from both parties that a House vote of impeachment was now a predestined conclusion and conviction by the Senate was assured. This evaluation was delivered to Nixon by Republican congressional leaders and soon after Nixon decided to resign.

TIME FOR A SETTLEMENT IN EL SALVADOR

HON. GEO. W. CROCKETT, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. CROCKETT. Mr. Speaker, in a recent article in Commonweal magazine, Robert E. White, former U.S. Ambassador to El Salvador, argues that now is the time for "a United States-backed compromise" in El Salvador, which "offers the only hope for El Salvador to find a framework for political peace and economic development."

As Ambassador White argues, "Any Salvadoran leader who tries to impose a military solution on the country will weaken not only his party, but the forces that party represents."

The guerrillas have publicly committed themselves to a political settlement of the conflict, including free elections. The previous administration steadfastly resisted this outcome. The Bush administration must reverse this policy and take the lead in seeking to broker such a settlement.

I include Ambassador White's article for the information of my colleagues:

COMPROMISE OR LOSE—SETTLING FOR A SETTLEMENT

(By Robert E. White)

Seldom is foreign policy made. First it accumulates; then all too often disintegrates. United States policy toward Central America has moved into the advanced stages of decomposition by the time President George Bush entered the White House this last January.

In concert with Congress and the democratic leaders of Latin America, the new administration has moved to work out political solutions to the crises in Nicaragua and Panama. Even the hawkish ex-Assistant Secretary of State Elliot Abrams has expressed qualified approval. Blessed are the distant for they shall gain perspective.

It is in El Salvador, however, that the Bush administration's commitment to negotiation and compromise will meet its toughest test. The near-total breakdown of the centrist, ruling Christian Democratic party has dealt another shock to a policy that already lacked both coherence and direction. Yet the news is not all bad. The collapse of the center has had the unlooked-for effect of driving the extremist movements toward moderation. Both the Nationalist Republican Alliance (ARENA) and the Farabundo Marti Liberation Front (the FMLN), now profess to believe in negotiation as the preferred means to end the decade-old civil war. In a recent speech, Secretary of State James Baker stated his support for dialogue "between the government of El Salvador and the Marxist guerrillas to end the conflict. . . ."

The one indisputable result of the more than $4 billion of overt and covert assistance we have thrown at the Salvadoran conflict has been the emergence of the most capable, resilient, and resourceful guerrilla movement the Western hemisphere has ever seen. The revoluntionaries have not only survived the high-tech war directed by the U.S., they have extended their military power and political cadres into every province of the country.

Time works against the government. The revolutionaries and the rich collaborate in the destruction of the economic base of the country. The guerrillas blow up bridges and burn warehouses while the wealthy export into their foreign bank accounts every dollar of hard currency they can lay their hands on. Although El Salvador has the most highly trained, best equipped military force in the region, morale is low and confidence eroding. High ranking officers admit privately that the war is unwinnable.

Last month, Alfredo Cristiani took the oath as president of El Salvador. Cristiani won the election under the banner of ARENA, an extreme right-wing party which represents the interests of the industrialists and large landowners. Yet, in his visit to this country, Cristiani came across as a decent, responsible leader committed to human rights and to a peaceful solution to the conflict.

Cristiani, however, may find little tolerance inside his own party for moderation and conciliation. Ex-Major Roberto D'Aubuisson founded ARENA in the image of fascism. In an attempt to justify death squads during the early days of the civil war, D'Aubuisson told European reporters. "You Germans were very intelligent; you realized the Jews were responsible for the spread of communism and you began to kill them." The sick minds that seek a final solution through military massacres and death squads still wield great power. The ARENA campaign chant tells the story: "Cristiani to the presidency, D'Aubuisson to power."

ARENA won the election because President José Napoleon Duarte and his ruling centrist Christian Democratic party simply collapsed under the conflicting pressures of attempting to govern a country torn apart by war. In the eyes of the Salvadoran voters, Duarte had abandoned nationalist imperatives and had adopted a policy of genuflection toward the United States. The party had as its broad base of support, the professional class, small businessmen, landholding peasants, and the working poor.

An experienced, bold, and instinctive politician, President Duarte was the one leader in the country with the skill and credentials to bridge the gap between the center and the left; Duarte was elected in 1984 on a platform calling for dialogue and reconciliation with the revolutionary forces. The refusal of the Reagan administration to back realistic negotiations turned Duarte from a president with an overwhelming mandate to end the war, into a hapless figure whose chief role was to lobby Congress for ever-increasing military assistance.

If there is a leftover cue card in the oval office desk, President Bush might do well to jot down this fundamental fact: Any Salvadoran leader who tries to impose a military solution on the country will weaken not only his party, but the forces that party represents. Unless the Bush administration turns away from the Reagan emphasis on military victory, the failure of the centrist Christian Democrats will be followed by the progressive weakening of the right-wing ARENA party, leaving the military of El Salvador bereft of any plausible political partner. With these two political movements disabled the revolutionaries would become the strongest organized political force in the country.

Just before leaving office, Secretary of State George Shultz set out the reasons why he believed the U.S. must continue to assist the government of El Salvador in its struggle. Shultz's main points hit at the guerrillas' refusal "to test their support at the polls" and their insistence "on power-sharing in a transitional government formed outside the electoral process."

In what appeared to be a direct response to United States concerns, the revolutionaries offered to participate in the electoral process and to abide by the outcome in exchange for a six-month postponement of the election. They also gave up any request for power-sharing as described by Shultz. The Bush administration was impressed enough with the proposals to declare them "serious and worthy of substantive consideration."

In April, a group of concerned American citizens held conversations in Mexico City with the Political-Diplomatic Commission of the revolutionary movement. The commission put in writing its readiness to negotiate a political solution to the conflict and its commitment "to the establishment of a pluralistic and democratic system in both the political and economic spheres."

The commitment of both President Cristiani and the revolutionaries to a political solution remains to be tested. The Bush administration should waste no time in encouraging the parties to move to the negotiating table. This may turn out to be a long and frustrating wrangle. Yet it will prove far more frustrating and expensive to continue to prop up a government that lacks the base to exercise effective power.

In the end, any settlement will require a willingness on the part of the U.S. to accept an outcome that reflects, to some degree, the balance of forces that exists. Such an arrangement will not satisfy those Americans of either the right or the left who seek military victory over the forces of evil. Yet a United States-backed compromise offers the only hope for El Salvador to find a framework for political peace and economic development.

AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE HONORS KENNETH C. JENNE II

HON. LAWRENCE J. SMITH

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, on August 15, 1989, the Institute of Human Relations of the American Jewish Committee will honor Kenneth C. Jenne II, with the Learned Hand Award for superior contribution to the betterment of society and the legal profession.

I have had the pleasure of calling Ken Jenne my personal friend for many years. For a part of that time, I also called him my colleague. We entered the Florida State Legislature together in 1978: He to serve in the Florida Senate while I took a seat in the House. During the 10 years that he served in the senate, he was the recipient of the Allen Morris Award for Most Effective Member of the senate on three occasions as well as the recipient of the Legislator of the Year Award in 1982 from the Human Services Advocates of Broward County.

Ken also held office on the local level. He has served the community in numerous capacities and continues to play an active role today. He has served as director of the Broward County Charter Commission as well as a member and later chairman of the Broward County Commission. He is currently a senior partner in the law firm of Atkinson, Jenne, Diner, Stone & Cohen in Hollywood, FL. He also serves on the boards of many community and professional organizations.

The many contributions to public service that Ken Jenne has made over the years has earned him the highest respect of the people of South Florida. He continues to be an inspiration to our future leaders. Ken exemplifies the qualities of integrity and commitment by which he has lived his life on a personal, professional and political level. His community work extends to being actively involved in the church and school.

His outstanding leadership and tireless commitment to serving the people of the State of Florida has earned him many well-deserved accolades. He is truly worthy of this latest recognition.

I share the pride of his lovely wife, Caroline, and their two children, Evan and Sarah, in the accomplishments of this extraordinary individual. I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating Ken Jenne on receiving this prestigious honor.

THE NEW PHYSICIAN—PAYMENT PLAN

HON. C. THOMAS McMILLEN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my concern about the proposal to establish expenditure targets for payments to physicians as contained in the House Ways and Means Committee's sweeping overhaul of part B of Medicare.

Proponents of the House Ways and Means new physician-payment plan insist that it represents an important step in getting a handle on the spiraling costs of Medicare part B. Part B spending, although slowing recently, has grown at a rate of more than 15 percent per year throughout the 1980's, reaching an estimated $26.7 billion in fiscal year 1989.

Under this new plan, physicians would be paid according to a fee schedule based on a resource-based relative value scale [RBRVS] that takes into account the time, training, and skill required to perform a particular service.

To prevent physicians whose fees would decrease—compared with current charges—from making up the shortfall by increasing what they charge their patients, the new Ways and Means plan would limit what physicians may charge over and above the Government-approved fee.

Finally, to prevent physicians from making up the shortfall by increasing the volume of services they perform, Ways and Means has proposed expenditure targets, that is, annual goals for overall Medicare spending on physician services. These expenditure targets would be adjusted each year for inflation, increases in the number and age of beneficiaries, and what policymakers consider an appropriate increase in the volume of services provided. If one year's expenditure target is exceeded, fee increases for the following year would be reduced accordingly.

I understand the necessity for controlling Medicare part B costs. However, I have two concerns about the expenditure targets proposal.

First, I am concerned that expenditure targets could endanger the health of our older Americans who may be denied proper medical treatment due to the economic restraints placed upon physicians. While expenditure targets are intended to be a mechanism to keep physicians from increasing the volume of services in reaction to the RBRVS-based fee scale, they could cause physicians to reduce the amount of services they currently are providing.

I am hopeful this health-care rationing will not occur. But if it does, Ways and Means should quickly rethink and restructure the expenditure targets portion of its new plan.

Second, I am concerned that expenditure targets could be extremely unfair to those "good" physicians who do not increase their volume of services in reaction to the RBRVS-based fee scale. If the targets are breeched, a reduction in the fee increases for the following year would reduce payments to all physicians—including those who acted appropriately. I think this would be very unfair and is a very unfortunate aspect of the new expenditure targets proposal.

The Physician Payment Review Commission, an independent commission established to advise Congress on physician payment reforms, has made several recommendations for reducing physician costs. Many of these recommendations—such as increased effectiveness research and the development of physician practice guidelines—have been included in the Ways and Means physician-payment plan. However, I think it would have been more prudent to explore the efficacy of these options by themselves before imposing expenditure targets on the medical community.

Mr. Speaker, I—like many of my colleagues in the House—have been concerned about rapid growth in Medicare part B spending costs since 1980. I, therefore, am generally supportive of Ways and Means new physician-payment plan. But this Nation must not walk away from its health-care commitment to our elderly. And we must not penalize those who provide our citizens with quality health care.

I will be monitoring the effect of the new physician-payment plan on the providers and receivers of Medicare part B health-care, and will not hesitate to become actively involved if either of these two groups are adversely affected by that plan.

DECEPTIVE MAILINGS PREVENTION ACT OF 1989

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, I supported passage of H.R. 2331, the Deceptive Mailings Prevention Act of 1989, introduced by Representive MCCLOSKEY. This legislation would require private organizations to put disclaimers on any direct mailing carrying insignia that implies a connection to the Federal Government. The bill would also require disclaimers to be placed on mailings that solicit services or products offered at no cost by the Federal Government.

This legislation is especially important because many times the targets of deceptive mailings are senior citizens. Knowing the importance of Social Security and Medicare to the elderly, companies will solicit donations to save these programs. The use of official looking seals adds legitimacy to the companies' solicitations, and entices seniors into making donations. These mailings are misleading and deceptive.

It is my hope that this legislation will deter companies from using deceptive mailing practices. Regardless, I will continue to advise my constituents to check with the Better Business Bureau before they contribute to any organization with which they are not familiar.

SCHOOL COMPLETION AND INCENTIVES ACT

HON. RONALD D. COLEMAN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a modified version of Congressman Claude Pepper's H.R. 670, the School Completion and Incentives Act.

It has been estimated that each year's class of dropouts costs the Nation more than $240 billion in lost earnings and foregone taxes over their lifetimes. This is shocking enough in itself but consider it in terms of its ultimate effect on the rest of our society. What happens to our democratic ideals when a third of our Nation is trapped within a permanent economic underclass? The success of programs such as Social Security depend on the contributions of well-educated workers, but the growing numbers of the undereducated will make the guarantee of secure retirement an unattainable luxury.

Schools and communities are the front line of defense against the dropout problem. They are the institutions who can best combine a knowledge of the local conditions that worsen the dropout rate with strategies to reduce the problem. Coalitions of educators, businessmen, and parents have the tools to make solutions happen.

I am delighted to see such a community response taking root in El Paso. The El Paso Education Alliance has designed a comprehensive program to address the dropout problem. A partnership between local schools, community groups, the business community, and institutions of higher learning will provide a key ingredient missing in the lives of many at-risk children—access. Access to a good job after graduation can be a powerful incentive for staying in school. Access to postsecondary education where before there was none can make a real difference in a student's decision to finish high school.

I salute this effort and support its goals. At the Federal level I have developed a proposal to complement and encourage efforts such as this one. Students all over America have suffered from a severe contraction in educational opportunities over the past decade. Sharp reductions in the Federal commitment to education have created an environment where State and local governments are being forced to make up the difference while they are being exhorted to set ever higher standards for themselves and their students. Education reform—from a stronger emphasis on the maths and sciences, to effective bilingual education and effective support programs for at-risk children—depends on a strong Federal-State-local partnership. I am afraid, however, that despite rhetoric to the contrary, the Federal Government has fallen down on its side of the deal.

It has been this growing gap between promise and performance that has put education on the defensive. Since the publication of "A Nation at Risk" in the early 1980's, the Federal Government has taken the position that education reform should take place at the local level and the Federal involvement should be restricted.

I believe that the Federal Government plays an essential role in ensuring that a quality education is available to all of our children. The dropout problem exists on such a huge scale that Federal support is essential to solve it. Yet, during the 1980's the Federal commitment to education declined in real dollars by 23.3 percent. This provides support for 1 out of every 5 low-income children in need of preschool education, 2 out of every 5 children in need of remedial education, 1 out of every 4 children in need of bilingual education, and 1 out of every 20 youths in need of job training. These are all components of the dropout problem.

This is not enough. We must renew our Nation's commitment to education at the Federal level. Without this, the sheer number of at-risk youth will inevitably overwhelm fragmented efforts to address the problem seen in individual communities. As a result, I have modified Congressman Pepper's legislation to address the dropout problem to allow for legislation already passed by Congressman HAYES and to bring authorization levels into line with other education programs. In addition, I have included a provision requiring the Department of Education to create a data base on dropout prevention programs for use by schools and educational organizations in the creation or refinement of their own programs.

This legislation creates a national policy on dropouts. It could make an enormous difference to the futures of our growing population of at-risk children. By ensuring that our children have the support necessary to complete a basic education we are ensuring a better future for the entire Nation.

THE MARCHING 100 TAKES PARIS BY STORM

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, before we adjourn for the August recess, I want to acknowledge the fine accomplishments of "the Marching 100" from Florida A&M State University [FAMU], during last month's Bastille Day celebrations in France. As a graduate of a historically black land grant university, North Carolina A&T State University, I am particularly proud of the fact that a sister institution's band, the FAMU Rattlers, were chosen to represent America's marching bands in the Bastille Day parade.

FAMU band members took "Paris by Storm" with their participation in the 200th anniversary Bastille Day celebration. The Rattler Band, which is known for its distinctive marching style, was chosen for the Bastille celebration in a national competition by the French Bastille Day committee.

As we approach the centennial for 1890 land-grant institutions, the performance by the FAMU Rattlers demonstrates the kind of quality performance that these colleges and universities are capable of producing. My congratulations to the marching 100 and their director, Dr. William Foster, on representing the United States, FAMU and the 1890 land-grant tradition in such fine style.

THE PREVENTION OF THE FURTHER DEGRADATION OF THE COASTAL AND ESTUARINE WATERS OF THE UNITED STATES

HON. THOMAS J. MANTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. MANTON. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, along with my colleague and good friend from New York, Mr. LENT, I introduced a comprehensive measure to prevent the further degradation of our Nation's coastal and estuarine waters. This legislation also should serve to mitigate past environmental harm to these most valuable waters. We must take effective action now to tighten the regulation of discharges into our near coastal waters, and we must act swiftly to begin to address the pollution problems presented by the overflows from combined sewer systems.

Earlier this summer the Federal Environmental Protection Agency announced that hundreds of factories across our country are violating water quality standards, and that all but a handful of States have at least some waterways which are contaminated. Therefore, we must take effective action to strengthen past efforts to cleanup our waters and look toward new, more stringent regulation of discharges into our waterways. Our Nation's near coastal and estuarine waters, while being the most valuable in the development of marine life, are, unfortunately, also the most sensitive to the adverse effects of pollution. These waters need our protection now, not later.

Mr. Speaker, the summer beach season is almost over. So far we have been lucky. The weather has been grand; the surf has been unsullied and free of floating debris; and, our Nation's beaches—with a few unfortunate exceptions— have not suffered from the washup of trash and medical waste which they experienced over the past two beach seasons. I fear, however, that our luck may not hold. The Nation continues to discharge large volumes of poorly regulated municipal and industrial wastes into our marine waters. CSO's remain as a low priority for most municipalities which are allowing raw sewage and vast amounts of solid waste to enter our marine waters every time there is a heavy rain.

During the last session of the 100th Congress, we took effective action with the passage of the Ocean Dumping Ban Act to address both real and perceived pollution problems. However, because of expressed public concern and press coverage over very visible pollution problems, we did not take action that necessarily addressed the most pressing causes of environmental degradation. Unfortunately, as a result, these real problems continue to persist, while the general public is under the misimpression that all is well.

Many experts repeatedly testified before the Congress that the ocean disposal of treated municipal sewage sludge over 100 miles from our shores is unrelated to many of the problems facing our near coastal waters, such as high levels of bacteria and floating debris. These problems, however, are directly related to permitted discharges and combined sewer overflows into our marine waters.

Mr. Speaker, according to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration [NOAA], pollutant discharges to coastal areas are significant and will increase as population and industry continue to concentrate along our coasts. We are already witness to the systematic deterioration of the quality of our coastal environment from chronic discharges of pollution into coastal waters and the loss of important coastal habitats. Furthermore, while only about 10 percent of the Nation's 66,000 point sources of discharge are located in coastal areas, they contribute more than one-third of the total annual wastewater discharges throughout the country. Simply stated, human development of the coastline with the associated discharge of pollutants and alteration of fishery and wildlife habitats is the major reason for the decline of our coastal waters. We must act now to correct past abuses and limit any further degradation.

Combined sewer overflows [CSO's] present a particularly tenacious problem which will take many years and substantial resources to address. Ten of this Nation's fourteen largest cities will need to expend $500 million or more to correct their CSO problems, and it is estimated $17 to $109 billion will have to be spent in the years ahead to correct CSO's for the 1,200 smaller cities throughout our country. The city of New York has already established a plan for addressing their CSO needs which envisions the expenditure of $1.5 billion over a 10-year period. These cities and towns where CSO's are a problem have many other significant environmental problems to address, and CSO mitigation efforts will impose significant new costs for them. However, we can no longer ignore this pressing problem.

Mr. Speaker, a recent report by the Center for Marine Conservation, entitled "Trash on America's Beaches: A National Assessment," found that in 1988 New York and New Jersey beaches contained the highest percentage of sewage-associated wastes of any area in the country. The report found that the primary source of these wastes was the overflows of combined stormwater and sanitary sewer systems—CSO's. The beaches of Rhode Island and Massachusetts followed closely behind New York and New Jersey.

This report is the result of a first-ever effort to establish a national Marine Debris Data Base. The report's conclusions are the culmination of a massive effort on the part of more than 47,500 citizens in 25 States who canvassed more than 3,500 miles of the U.S. coastline, including the shores of the Great Lakes, and collected nearly 1,000 tons of debris. While plastic tampon applicators were one of the most reported type of pollution and most directly related to CSO's the volunteers found everything from cars to kitchen sinks on our beaches.

Mr. Speaker, now is the time for Congress to take comprehensive action to cleanup our Nation's waters. We must ensure our waters remain productive and safe for human health. I believe this measure is a step in the right direction for addressing the pressing pollution problems presented by marine discharges and CSO's.

DON'T BLAME ISRAEL

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, the brutal execution of Col. William Higgins was a sinister and cruel act by an Iranian-backed terrorist group, the so-called Organization of the Oppressed on Earth.

Such brutality, graphically depicted and delivered to the homes of millions of Americans, cries out for some sort of response.

The choice of what type of response leaves President Bush with perhaps the most frustrating and most challenging questions that he has faced since his election.

One issue should be crystal clear. Republicans and Democrats are wholly united when it comes to the protection of American lives abroad. These terrorist acts are abhorred by all of us, across party lines and ideological shadings. And we are prepared to support the President and the decisions he makes in the next few days.

At the heart of this matter lie some very fundamental questions about how a civilized nation responds to uncivilized acts. Some have criticized Israel for seeking to fight terrorism by seizing the Hezbollah terrorist leader, Sheik Obeid. I don't join in that criticism.

Israel's action was not only justified, but responsible, and well within the accepted norms of international law. These terrorists are at war with Israel. They have sworn to drive Israel into the sea. They have seized Israeli soldiers and have held them hostage, along with our own American hostages.

Israel responded first by seeking to negotiate the release of these hostages. When those negotiations failed, Israel responded with an act that was directly proportional to the wrong committed against them, and directed their action against the very person responsible for the kidnaping of their countrymen.

News reports tell us that the only options that we have are bad ones. I say that rather than criticizing the Israelis, we should stand by our ally and work with Israel to exploit every possible avenue available to us for freeing our hostages. After all, the Israelis are the leading fighters against terrorism on the planet. There is a great deal they can teach us. We should be intensifying our intelligence efforts to locate and identify the seven Americans still held captive. And we should be calling on the United Nations to activate any diplomatic channels it may have for responding to the Higgins execution, for Colonel Higgins was fulfilling a U.N. peacekeeping role when he was seized.

I mourn the loss of Colonel Higgins. And my heart goes out to the families of the other hostages still held captive in Lebanon. I hope that the President's decisions over the next few days will give them the hope and the strength to hold out for their families still held captive.

TRIBUTE TO THE INDUSTRIAL BANK OF WASHINGTON ON THE OCCASION OF ITS 55TH ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATIONS

HON. RONALD V. DELLUMS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, I once again rise to enthusiastically salute the excellent services provided by the Industrial Bank of Washington and its illustrious president and chairman of the board, Mr. B. Doyle Mitchell, Sr. On Sunday, August 20, 1989, the Industrial Bank of Washington in the District of Columbia will observe its 55th year of service to the community in the Nation's Capital.

The Industrial Bank of Washington under the guidance and leadership of my good friend, Mr. B. Doyle Mitchell, has emerged a beacon of hope for the common man of this mighty city. The bank has become a pleasant financial oasis for the small, struggling businessmen, and a boon to the many churches and other institutions that nourish the growth and well-being of the citizenry of the District of Columbia.

I am particularly impressed with the stable growth of this bank, founded in 1934 at the height of the Great Depression by the late Jesse H. Mitchell, first president of the bank.

His son, Benson Doyle Mitchell, has been on the bank's staff from day one of its beginning.

Starting as a bookkeeper and member of the board of directors, Doyle assumed the presidency of the bank in December 1954 upon the retirement of his father. A graduate of Howard University, Mitchell also studied at the Wharton School of Finance, University of Pennsylvania. Under Doyle's leadership the Bank has expanded to four offices with assets of $117 million. No wonder Mr. Mitchell was elected in 1959 as president of the National Banker's Association, the trade association of minority banks. He served in that position for the next 7 years, because of his financial wizardry and leadership qualities.

Naturally, we need to view the 55th anniversary as a twofold celebration for the bank as well as for Mr. Mitchell.

In his most recent annual message to shareholders, Mr. Mitchell precisely and concisely described the mission of a minority bank when he said, "Because we believe that a bank is more than figures and charts, we would like to share with you some of the concerns, challenges and decisions we faced—as well as the achievements."

The achievements are too many to list. However, I would like to invite your attention to the few characteristics that make the Industrial Bank of Washington a unique minority bank.

Since the inception of the bank, it has been very active in mortgage lending to the inner city of Washington, DC, particularly to the churches. As of December 31, 1988, the bank's real estate portfolio included 69 mortgage loans to the churches in the inner city, totaling several million dollars. That alone is a remarkable feat, I think, for a minority owned bank to perform in the commerce canyon of corporate Washington, DC.

Included in this real estate portfolio of the bank are some of the largest and influential local churches, such as the Metropolitan Baptist Church, Shiloh Baptist Church, Florida Avenue Baptist Church, Vermont Avenue Baptist Church, 19th Street Baptist Church, Scripture Church of Christ, Lincoln Temple Congregational Church, Zion Baptist Church, Greater Mount Zion Baptist Church, Church of Jesus Christ, Galilee Baptist Church, Galbraith AME Zion Church, Ashbury United Methodist Church, Walker Memorial Baptist Church, and the Council of Churches of Greater Washington, to name a few among the 69.

I am proud of this unique involvement of a black financial institution with the local churches that provide a haven for many of our destitute and desolute citizens, devastated by poverty, unemployment, drugs, and alcohol, not too far from the shadow of the resplendent dome of the Capitol. The black churches have been historically the last resort of the oppressed among our race. And the Industrial Bank of Washington has played a pivotal role in preserving the spiritual heritage of our past via its bold, farsighted, innovative lending policies and practices.

According to Mr. Mitchell, the Industrial Bank of Washington is a community bank. Its strength comes from the little depositors. The annual mortgage disclosure statement of the bank, revealing the placement of certain residential mortgage loans by census track, reflects the following two significant factors: More than 80 percent of the loans made are concentrated in the District of Columbia; heavy concentration of real estate loans in the inner city of Washington, DC.

The Industrial Bank is truly in partnership with the people, institutions, and businesses of Washington, DC. The bank as well as Mr. Mitchell have left their indelible imprints on this city. For the edification of this august body, may I quote the bank's corporate statement which reads as follows:

INDUSTRIAL BANK OF WASHINGTON,
WASHINGTON, DC

The Industrial Bank of Washington dedicates its resources to improving the quality of life of the citizens of Washington, DC. It is our intention to provide a full range of quality banking and financial services to all people located within the service areas of our offices. We are dedicated to upholding the traditions of the Bank which has been a contributor to the growth and welfare of a significant segment of people of our nation's capital for nearly 55 years. We intend to follow this dedication with increased zeal during the next half century.

We will use to the fullest extent our resources of people, capital and banking facilities to provide quality banking services to the individuals, businesses and organizations living and doing business within our trading areas. We will do this by being aware of the changing needs of our customers and by utilizing our resources to meet these needs. We are particularly dedicated and funded, a competitively priced source of real estate funds is one of the most important components in assuring the continued development and revitalization of our neighborhoods. It is our intention to continue offering these and other types of loans, deposit accounts and investment certificates and other special services to meet the needs of our customers so long as such services are consistent with the financial health of this institution.

We are dedicated to making our bank a pleasant place of employment for our staff and to providing a fair and equitable return to our shareholders. We intend to maintain and strengthen our position as the principal financial institution serving the inner-city neighborhoods of our nation's capital, utilizing the experience, knowledge and expertise acquired during our first half century in banking and applying these capabilities to the present and future needs of our community.

TRIBUTE TO HYMAN J. CARNE

HON. TONY P. HALL

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to Hyman J. "Mitzi" Carne, who will be 70 years old on August 24, 1989. His birthday will be marked by a special Sabbath service on August 26, 1989, at Beth Abraham Synagogue of Dayton, OH, within my district.

Mitzi has given 37 years of loyal service to our Government as an Army soldier during World War II and later as a civilian employee of the Air Force. He has also made numerous contributions to the community, including volunteer service to Miami Valley Hospital's senior care program, Dayton's Hillel Academy, and a senior citizens food program. He serves on the board of directors of Beth Abraham Synagogue, and chairs its honors committee.

I join Mitzi's many friends and family members—especially his nieces and nephews—in wishing him a happy birthday and many more years of happiness and good health.

RADIATION AND TOXIC SUBSTANCES RESEARCH REORGANIZATION ACT

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, today, with Mr. EVANS, Mr. SKAGGS, and several other of my colleagues, I am introducing a bill to bring openness and credibility to the health research activities at our Federal nuclear facilities.

For decades, the health research at Department of Energy [DOE] facilities has been marked by secrecy and inbreeding—the very hallmarks that have lead to such colossal foulups in the Department's safety and environmental efforts.

Let me give an example of how the Department has treated health-related data in the past. In 1987, Congressman SWIFT, Senator HATFIELD and I asked the General Accounting Office to investigate how the Department handled information showing the presence of Iodine-129, a radioactive material, in deep aquifers beneath the Hanford Reservation.

The GAO reported that DOE's handling of information on iodine–129 detected in Hanford groundwater was dominated by a pattern of activity that generally discouraged disseminating the information within and outside the agency. Even DOE contractors with a legitimate need to know were not told of the information. And even though the information was not classified, only people with security clearances could get access to a catalog or data base that mentioned the study.

The GAO concluded that the reasons the data were so closely held included concerns about the public's reaction to information that might be perceived to impact the environment and/or public health.

With a mindset like that at DOE, is it any wonder that workers and people living nearby distrust pronouncements on how its operations affect public health?

The only way to restore trust is to move the health research functions of the agency to an independent body with appropriate expertise. This bill does exactly that.

The bill transfers the responsibility for epidemiological research on the health effects of exposure to radiation and toxics at DOE facilities to the Department of Health and Human Services [HHS].

HHS will undertake a comprehensive research program to identify the nature and magnitude of the health risk to the public and to DOE's workforce from DOE's activities.

HHS will have access to and will catalog existing health data and records compiled by DOE and its predecessors and make such data public, subject to confidentiality and security limits.

Besides pursuing its own research, HHS will review the health assessments previously performed by DOE and others, with an eye toward setting priorities for future research.

The bill establishes an advisory panel, made up of representatives from workers, DOE, public interest groups, and the States, to help steer the HHS programs in this area.

Finally, the bill requires DOE to transfer funds to HHS for the programs in the bill.

This bill owes much to the work of our former colleague, Mr. WIRTH, who actively pursued these goals while a Member of the House, and who continues his commitment to this worthy end. I would like to thank him for his advice and support.

I would also like to specially acknowledge the work of Mr. EVANS, who has spearheaded this effort from within the Armed Services Committee, and who has particular concern for the workers and public near those DOE facilities involved in national defense efforts.

And I would note that Mr. SKAGGS has put forth similar proposals in his legislation.

Mr. Speaker, this bill has received strong support from both labor and environmental groups concerned with these facilities. I invite my colleagues to study it closely, and I urge their support.

MEDICARE CATASTROPHIC HEALTH CARE ACT OF 1988

HON. DOUGLAS H. BOSCO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. BOSCO. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to address the continuing crisis over the Medicare Catastrophic Health Care Act of 1988. Seniors in my district and around the country are demanding that we change this act. Yet Congress has not addressed the very real concerns of our elderly community on this issue.

The purpose in passing the catastrophic program was to ease the burden on the elderly, not increase it. We need to change this program so that it is acceptable to the elderly, or we need to repeal it and start over.

I recently sent a survey to every household in my district, and found that there is broad-based concern about this issue. While catastrophic health care is often approached as a "seniors only" issue, individuals of all ages feel that the surtax should either be broadened or that the Catastrophic Health Care Act should be immediately repealed. Individuals who know what their parents, relatives or friends are experiencing, and what they may be facing in 10 or 15 years, need to know how the Congress will address this crucial issue.

The Ways and Means Committee recently passed a proposal that would cut the surtax and allow seniors to opt out of the catastrophic health care program altogether. In choosing to opt out seniors would be forced to give up their Medicare Part B benefits, and idea I find completely unacceptable.

I hope that the House can save this legislation that was designed to help seniors, and give those approaching retirement some security. I want to be able to tell my constituents that there is hope, that the Congress will ensure that they receive responsible health care benefits in their later years at a fair price.

Right now, however, it seems that this may not be possible. Mr. Speaker, if we cannot resolve the problems associated with catastrophic health care, how will we address long-term health care, and other needs of our seniors? Seniors have been waiting all year for some decisive action on this issue and it's past time to give them some honest answers.

THE FARM DEBT TAX REFORM ACT OF 1989

HON. BYRON L. DORGAN

OF NORTH DAKOTA

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of myself and 17 cosponsors, I am today introducing legislation that would provide relief for those family farmers who are in desperate need of assistance. It would allow those farmers who have been most severely affected by decreasing commodity prices and rising costs to restructure their debt without suffering devastating tax consequences.

Our Nation's family farmers have suffered through a painful period of sustained economic decline. Our farmers are leaving their farms and rural communities in unprecedented numbers. Mired in debt, many have been forced to deed back their land to creditors in return for forgiveness of the debt to learn that they now owe a massive tax bill. The sad irony is that those families who can no longer afford to farm also cannot afford the tax liabilities attributable to starting over.

Under current law, a farmer in serious economic trouble who conveys his land to a creditor in satisfaction of an outstanding loan may be liable for two separate taxes on the transaction. First, the farmer is liable for a capital gains tax on the difference between his basis—purchase price—in the land and its fair market value. Second, the farmer must pay the ordinary income tax on the difference between the property's fair market value and the amount of the outstanding loan. While section 108 of the Internal Revenue Code currently allows farmers to reduce their taxable income by the taxpayer's outstanding attributes and the basis of the property, this provision is drawn too narrowly and too few farmers are able to take advantage of it. As a result, the farmer who is forced to give up his farm, and who must, without choice, begin a new life for his family, finds himself saddled with such an enormous tax debt that he has no realistic hope for recovery.

My legislation addresses both of these inequities. It provides an exclusion for capital gains income that arises when farm property is conveyed back to the mortgage lender in exchange for forgiveness of the debt. It also broadens the applicability of the section 108 provisions to allow more family farmers to reduce their debt forgiveness income by the amount of their outstanding tax attributes and the basis of the property. Both of these provisions, though, include substantial limitations designed to prevent abuses by taxpayers who do not really need assistance.

Specifically, this legislation would allow qualifying farmers to exclude from gross income up to $350,000 of either gain realized from the transfer of farm property in satisfaction of qualified farm indebtedness, or income that arises from the discharge of indebtedness.

Those in Congress who represent rural communities have seen the decline in the agricultural economy and the havoc it has played on our communities. It is essential that we do all that we can to ease the strain on our farm families who are not only losing their means of making a living, but also their way of life. It is simply wrong to add a large tax liability that is virtually uncollectible on these families that have suffered through a terrible economic crisis.

As many of my colleagues are aware, the 1986 Tax Reform Act included a special "solvent farmer" provision relating to the discharge of farm indebtedness. This provision allows income arising from the discharge of indebtedness owed by a qualifying farmer to an unrelated lender to be treated as income realized by an insolvent taxpayer, if the debt was incurred in the trade or business of farming or is farm debt secured by farm property used in such trade or business.

It is my understanding that a controversy has arisen concerning the solvent farmer provision due to the passage of the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 [TAMRA]. Within TAMRA, a technical correction limited the tax free discharge of indebtedness under the solvent farmer provision to the amount the basis and tax attributes remaining in the farm property. Any write-down in excess of that amount is treated as income. As noted above, this so-called technical correction runs contrary to the congressional intent of the 1986 act. Not surprisingly, there has been movement to repeal the objectionable technical correction.

Although this move to repeal has merit given the legislative history, let me emphasize that passage of the bill I have introduced today not only resolves this issue but addresses the entire farming crisis in a far more meaningful manner. Clearly, if Congress were simply to repeal the technical correction, it would ignore other insurmountable shortfalls that remain unanswered in the 1986 provisions.

First, the provisions adopted in 1986 were not targeted to those most clearly in need. By contrast, my bill includes an amendment to section 108(g) to assure that the relief I have requested is targeted solely at low- and moderate-income and equity farmers.

Second, section 108(g) currently provides relief for only those taxpayers who derive at least 50 percent of their average annual gross receipts for the proceeding 3 years from farming. Thus, present law precludes relief for farmers who are forced to sell assets to satisfy farm debts, denied crop financing, or are otherwise forced to scale down their farm operations. In other words, the current provisions provide little relief for the very people who most need help. My legislation rectifies this problem by redefining gross receipts as to include receipts attributable to both the trade or business of farming or the sale or lease of assets used in such trade or business. Therefore, if a farmer cash rents his farmland during the time it takes to negotiate a debt restructuring agreement with FmHA, or if he is forced to sell off machinery or real property, such income would be included in the gross receipts test.

Third, the existing language in I.R.C. section 108 does not require that the taxpayer materially participate in the farming business, and thus is susceptible to abuse by outside investors. My bill would limit relief only to true farmers who have suffered substantial economic hardship by requiring that they materially participate in farming at the time the debt was incurred.

Finally, this legislation forgives discharge of indebtedness income after the property's basis and remaining tax attributes have been reduced. Consequently, it resolves the problems associated with the technical correction, but only in the context of this bill's narrowly drawn alternative to the existing provisions in I.R.C section 108. I believe that my approach is a sounder and more comprehensive alternative to simple repeal of the technical correction which was unfortunately adopted last year.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation which is critical to the survival of the family farmer. A severely distressed farm economy has forced thousands of farmers who risk losing their businesses to restructure their existing farm debt as provided in the Agricultural Credit Act of 1987. Unfortunately many restructuring agreements are being held up due to unintended tax impediments. We must act quickly to remove these impediments and allow our farmers to begin the process of rebuilding shattered families, businesses, and rural communities.

Again, I urge you to cosponsor this legislation which targets its relief to those farmers without the ability to pay paper income gains. It allows them equitable relief and the opportunity to make a new start.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Farm Debt Tax Reform Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. CAPITAL GAIN REALIZED FROM TRANSFER OF FARM PROPERTY IN COMPLETE OR PARTIAL SATISFACTION OF QUALIFIED FARM INDEBTEDNESS EXCLUDED FROM GROSS INCOME.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part III of subchapter B of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to items specifically excluded from gross income) is amended by redesignating section 135 as section 136 and by inserting after section 134 the following new section:

SEC. 135. CAPITAL GAIN REALIZED FROM TRANSFER OF FARM PROPERTY IN COMPLETE OR PARTIAL SATISFACTION OF QUALIFIED FARM INDEBTEDNESS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Gross income of any taxpayer described in subsection (d) does not include so much of the gain from the transfer of farm property in complete or partial satisfaction of qualified farm indebtedness as does not exceed $350,000.

"(b) PRIOR GAINS AND DISCHARGES OF INDEBTEDNESS TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If for any prior year—

"(A) gain from the transfer of farm property in complete or partial satisfaction of qualified farm indebtedness, or

"(B) a discharge of such indebtedness, is excluded from the taxpayer's gross income under subsection (a) of this section or section 108(g), respectively, subsection (a) of this section shall be applied for the taxable year with respect to such gain by reducing the dollar amount contained in such subsection by the such excluded prior year gains and discharges.

"(2) CURRENT YEAR COORDINATION WITH SECTION 108.—Subsection (a) of this section shall be applied for the taxable year with respect to any gain by reducing the dollar amount contained in such subsection (after any reduction under paragraph (1)) by any amount excluded from gross income under section 108 for such year.

"(c) REDUCTION OF TAX ATTRIBUTES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount excluded from gross income under subsection (a) shall be applied to reduce the tax attributes described under section 108(b)(2).

"(2) COORDINATION WITH SECTION 108.—For purposes of this subsection, the amount of tax attributes shall be determined after any reduction under section 108(b) by reason of amounts excluded from gross income under section 108(a)(1).

"(d) TAXPAYER DESCRIBED IN THIS SUBSECTION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A taxpayer is described in this subsection if—

"(A) the average of such taxpayer's modified adjusted gross income for any 3 taxable years of the 5-taxable year period ending with the taxable year in which the transfer of farm property in complete or partial satisfaction of qualified farm indebtedness occurs is less than 100 percent of the average of the national median adjusted gross income for such 3 taxable years,

"(B) more than 50 percent of the gross receipts of the taxpayer for 3 of the 5 taxable years preceding the taxable year in which the transfer of farm property in complete or partial satisfaction of qualified farm indebtedness occurs are attributable to—

"(i) the trade or business of farming (within the meaning of section 2032A(e)(5)), or

"(ii) the sale or lease of assets used in such trade or business, or

"(iii) both, and

"(C) the equity of the taxpayer after such transfer is less than the greater of—

"(i) $25,000, or

"(ii) 150 percent of the excess (if any) of—

"(I) the tax imposed by this chapter determined as if this section and section 108 did not apply to the transfer, over

"(II) the tax imposed by this chapter determined with regard to this section and section 108 (if applicable).

"(2) MODIFIED ADJUSTED GROSS INCOME.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'modified adjusted gross income' means adjusted gross income—

"(A) determined with regard to this section and section 108, and

"(B) increased by the amount of interest received or accrued by the taxpayer during the taxable year which is exempt from tax.

"(3) EQUITY.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'equity' means an amount equal to—

"(A) the aggregate fair market value of farm property held by the taxpayer, minus

"(B) the aggregate qualified farm indebtedness of the taxpayer.

"(e) FARM PROPERTY.—For purposes of this section, the term 'farm property' means real and personal property used by the taxpayer in the trade or business of farming (within the meaning of section 2032A(e)(5)).

"(f) QUALIFIED FARM INDEBTEDNESS.—For purposes of this section, indebtedness of a taxpayer shall be treated as qualified farm indebtedness if such indebtedness was incurred—

"(1) directly in connection with the operation by the taxpayer of the trade or business of farming (within the meaning of section 2032A(e)(5)), and

"(2) at a time when such taxpayer materially participated (within the meaning of section 2032A(e)(6)) in such trade or business.

"(g) APPLICATION WITH RECAPTURE PROVISIONS.—In the case of gain which under section 1245, 1250, 1252, or 1255 is treated as ordinary income, this section shall apply first to exclude such gain to the extent thereof and then to other gain."

"(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for part III of subchapter B of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by striking out the item relating to section 135 and inserting in lieu thereof the following new items:

"SEC. 135. Capital gain realized from transfer of farm property in complete or partial satisfaction of qualified farm indebtedness.

"SEC. 136. Cross references to other Acts.".

"(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to transfers occurring after December 31, 1986, in taxable years ending after such date.

SEC. 3. EXCLUSION OF DISCHARGE OF QUALIFIED FARM INDEBTEDNESS FROM GROSS INCOME INCREASED FOR CERTAIN SOLVENT FARMERS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 108(g) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to special rules for discharge of qualified farm indebtedness) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) SPECIAL LIMITATIONS FOR CERTAIN FARMERS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—With respect to qualified farm indebtedness which was incurred by a taxpayer described in subparagraph (C) of this paragraph at a time when such taxpayer materially participated (within the meaning of section 2032A(e)(6)) in the trade or business described in clause (ii)(I)—

"(i) the amount excluded under subparagraph (C) of subsection (a)(1) shall not exceed $350,000, and

"(ii) paragraph (2) of this subsection shall be applied without regard to subparagraph (B) thereof.

"(B) PRIOR DISCHARGES OF INDEBTEDNESS AND GAINS TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT.—If for any prior year—

"(i) a discharge of qualified farm indebtedness, or

"(ii) gain from the transfer of farm property in complete or partial satisfaction of such indebtedness, is excluded from the taxpayer's gross income under this subsection or section 135, respectively, subparagraph (A) shall be applied for the taxable year with respect to such discharge by reducing the dollar amount contained in such subparagraph by the such excluded prior year discharges and gains.

"(C) TAXPAYER DESCRIBED IN THIS SUBPARAGRAPH.—A taxpayer is described in this subparagraph if—

"(i) the average of such taxpayer's modified adjusted gross income for any 3 taxable years of the 5-taxable year period ending with the taxable year in which the discharge of qualified farm indebtedness occurs is less than 100 percent of the average of the national median adjusted gross income for such 3 taxable years,

"(ii) more than 50 percent of the gross receipts of the taxpayer for 3 of the 5 taxable years preceding the taxable year in which the discharge of qualified farm indebtedness occurs are attributable to—

"(I) the trade or business of farming (within the meaning of section 2032A(e)(5)), or

"(II) the sale or lease of assets used in such trade or business, or

"(III) both,

"(iii) the indebtedness of the taxpayer both before and after such discharge is equal to 70 percent or more of the equity in all property held by such taxpayer,

"(iv) the equity of the taxpayer after such discharge is less than the greater of—

"(I) $25,000, or

"(II) 150 percent of the excess (if any) of the tax imposed by this chapter determined as if this section and section 135 did not apply to the transfer, over the tax imposed by this chapter determined with regard to this section and section 135 (if applicable), and

"(v) such taxpayer, in transferring property in connection with the discharge of qualified farm indebtedness, transfers only farm property or other property acquired, produced, or held in connection with the taxpayer's trade or business of farming.

"(D) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this paragraph—

"(i) FARM PROPERTY.—The term 'farm property' means real and personal property used by the taxpayer in the trade or business of farming (within the meaning of section 2032A(e)(5)).

"(ii) MODIFIED ADJUSTED GROSS INCOME.—The term 'modified adjusted gross income' means adjusted gross income—

"(I) determined with regard to this section and section 135, and

"(II) increased by the amount of interest received or accrued by the taxpayer during the taxable year which is exempt from tax.

"(iii) EQUITY.—The term 'equity' means an amount equal to—

"(I) the aggregate fair market value of farm property held by the taxpayer, minus

"(II) the aggregate qualified farm indebtedness of the taxpayer."

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Subparagraph (A) of section 108(g)(3) of such Code is amended by striking out "The amount" and inserting in lieu thereof "Except as provided in paragraph (4), the amount".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to discharge of indebtedness occurring after December 31, 1986 in taxable years ending after such date.

SUPREME COURT FLAG DECISION INSPIRES PATRIOTISM

HON. CLIFF STEARNS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, whether or not an individual agrees with last month's Supreme Court decision regarding flag-burning and the legislation introduced as a result, it is obvious that recent events have inspired an increasing amount of patriotism in this country.

Since the Supreme Court's decision on July 3, 1989, I have received an abundance of touching and patriotic correspondence from constituents. One of the most memorable is a song, written by Rick Williams of Marion County, FL, entitled "Don't Burn My Flag." Mr. Williams, a Florida native who learned to play guitar at the age of 12, released this song on Independence Day and it has been receiving airplay on radio stations throughout Florida since.

I would like to take this opportunity to share the lyrics of "Don't Burn My Flag" with my colleagues in the House of Representatives by placing the lyrics in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD along with a note from Mr. Williams.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure you and my colleagues will find this song quite inspiring:

DEAR CONGRESSMAN STEARNS: Thank you for the support. I hope this song will help all Americans remember that our freedom was not given to us free, but was earned with the blood and lives of our friends and loved ones. Thanks so much.

RICK WILLIAMS.

DON'T BURN MY FLAG

CHORUS

She is an old friend, that waves in the wind,
She's been through the good times and bad.
She stands for the freedom that we all have,
So don't you dare burn my flag.

VERSE 1

The red white and blue, she's for me and you,
And for those who gave their lives.
To make sure that we, all could be free,
And celebrate on the fourth of July.
From the west Texas skies, to the New England shores,
And to the sands of the Florida keys,
She still stands proud, so say it out loud,
We all love our liberty.

CHORUS (REPEAT)

VERSE 2

He sits in a chair and watches them play,
A game at Yankee field.
He'd sure like to play, but can't today,
You see his chair has wheels.
And there are those even though it don't show,
With scars deep in their souls.
They gave their all, so we wouldn't fall,
The love for their country it shows.

CHORUS (REPEAT)

TERRORISM THREATENS OUR SOCIETY

HON. JAMES T. WALSH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today, an angry and frustrated American who is reminded again that terrorism does not threaten people living in troubled lands. It threatens our society.

The apparent murder of Lt. Col. William R. Higgins by terrorists does not accomplish one thing to further the cause of peace or the rights of any group of human beings. Colonel Higgins, as an American working on a U.N. peacekeeping mission, represented the highest ideals and values. The people who murdered him only proved what many have accused them of. That they do not value life, and should not be recognized as representative of any ethnic or cultural group.

As Americans, we are reminded once again that we cannot turn our backs on problem solving. We must take an active interest in what happens in the Middle East, or in any other part of the world where terrorism reigns, because we are leaders in the world.

At the same time, this savagery should only strengthen our resolve. We must recommit ourselves to peace. We must promise the rest of the world, and ourselves, that we will not negotiate with terrorists and that we will never compromise our principles.

I offer condolences to the family of Colonel Higgins. I pray that we will all gather strength from this tragedy, and that God will not abandon the world to the likes of those who executed a man whose mission was peace.

UAW LOCAL 599—50TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. DALE E. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a great honor and a pleasure for me to bring to the attention of my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives the 50th anniversary of the chartering of the United Auto Workers Local 599. On August 19 and 20, 1989, in my home town of Flint, MI, this great union local will celebrate 50 years of tireless work on behalf of the labor movement. Being able to honor local 599, which was my father's local, is a very special privilege for me.

I know from firsthand experience that the quality of life for auto workers improved greatly in the late 1930's because of the union my father belonged to—UAW Local 599. I recall the situation in the factories of Flint before this union was finally recognized, and what it was like after. I remember my father helping one of his coworkers, Jack James, walk down the street. Mr. James had suffered a stroke in the Buick factory. Mr. James was afraid he would be fired if his boss found out and he asked by father to keep his stroke a secret. The very next day following his stroke, Jack James reported back to work at the factory. My father and his friends had to assist him so that the foreman would not notice James' disability. He had no savings, no health insurance, and no retirement benefits. Jack James had to work until he dropped. The UAW changed that.

During the past 50 years, UAW Local 599 and its members have demonstrated the spirit of solidarity in my community and have been in the forefront of progress for civil rights and human dignity. In numerous ways, the members of local 599 exemplify the ideals that unions have always championed. In addition to actively improving working conditions in manufacturing facilities and working diligently to secure the well-being of its membership, the union has skillfully bargained for decent wages, cost of living increases, health benefits, holiday and vacation pay, insurance, workers' compensation, and unemployment compensation. UAW Local 599 prides itself on its collective bargaining for supplemental unemployment benefits, educational opportunities, and various training programs for its members.

It is for this deep commitment to improving and protecting human dignity for its workers that we pay tribute to this organization. The members have spent years making our city a better place to work and live through their involvement and support of civic programs promoting the welfare of the community. We in Flint are indeed fortunate to have such fine people among us.

Mr. Speaker, during the past 50 years, the United Auto Workers Local 599 of Flint and its members have displayed exceptional leadership and responsiveness to their communities and our Nation. Recently, UAW Local 599 members working at Buick city were honored by J.P. Powers & Associates for building the best American automobile in the United States—the Buick LeSabre. I am confident that the great successes of this organization over the past 50 years will only be surpassed by actions and accomplishments still to come. I would ask my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives to join me in paying tribute to the United Auto Workers Local 599, upon the occasion of its 50th anniversary.

ARBITRAGE REBATE

HON. BERYL ANTHONY, JR.

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, today, I introduce legislation offering a two-pronged attack on the problem of arbitrage rebate which I hope will enjoy the immediate support of my colleagues. This legislation attacks the problem from both sides, from encouraging good behavior and eliminating undesirable behavior. It offers a reward to issuers who do not seek to take advantage of the system—a means of avoiding the complexity of rebate—and it responds to those who are enaging in questionable hedge bond transactions.

The areas of arbitrage rebate is one of the most complex areas of the tax law. Although simple in concept, it has taken the Treasury Department 2½ years to develop 243 pages of regulations which cover only part of the material required to calculate the amount that must be rebated to the Federal Government. Arbitrage rebate became part of the law with the enactment of the 1986 Tax Reform Act. This restriction was enacted because too many tax-exempt bonds were being issued for the purpose of earning arbitrage, not for the purpose of using the proceeds to build legitimate public projects. To eliminate arbitrage motivated transactions Congress took away the arbitrage incentive by requiring that any arbitrage profit earned must be rebated to the Federal Government.

Last year as I began to learn about the complexities of arbitrage rebate, I inserted report language in the Technical and Miscellaneous Tax Act of 1988 instructing Treasury to develop arbitrage rebate regulations which are "workable and understandable to the governmental units that must comply with them." Having seen the regulations, it is clear to me that they are not workable and understandable to the average governmental unit, unless they retain accountants, lawyers, or financial specialists to interpret the regulations and assist with their compliance. Congress' intent in 1986 was to discourage the issuance of bonds for the purpose of earning arbitrage, not to impose further complexity and administrative burden on State and local governments.

The first part of my legislation provides an alternative to the complexities created by the rebate requirement. I want to stress that it does not eliminate the rebate requirement, but is merely an elective alternative for financings that meet certain criteria. The issuer will be allowed to apply investment earnings to the cost of the project if the following spendout test is met. The spendout test requires the issuer to actually spend 25 percent of the proceeds in the first year, an additional 25 percent in the second year, and an additional 45 percent of the proceeds in the third year. If the test is met, the issuer will not have to pay the rebate, track the funds, or calculate the yield on the bonds.

This alternative is based upon the issuer's reasonable expectation that it will meet each of the 3-year requirements at the time the bonds are issued. Rather than complying with the usual tracking and rebate requirements for failure to meet the reasonable expectations test, failure to meet the spend out requirement will result in a penalty equaling 3 percent per annum of the unspent proceeds. The penalty applies to each year the issuer fails to comply.

I think this system is a fair alternative to the complexities created by the rebate law. From the Federal standpoint, it discourages arbitrage motivated transactions and helps to keep the number of bonds outstanding to a minimum. From the perspective of State and local governments, this legislation allows them a less complicated and costly method of complying with Congress' intent. Most importantly, this legislation will reduce the overall borrowing costs of State and local governments.

The second part of my legislation deals with the interest rate hedge bond. A hedge bond is a bond issued today at the current tax-exempt interest rate, the proceeds of which are invested in a guaranteed investment contract at the yield on the bonds so that no arbitrage is earned. The issuer is essentially only at risk for the costs of issuance, which in some cases are put off until the proceeds are actually spent on the project. The issuer locks in today's rates and if interest rates rise then the issuer has cheaper money available at the time it proceeds to build the project. However, if interest rates go down, the bonds will be paid off by the guaranteed investment contract and the issuer will issue another set of bonds at the current lower interest rate to build the project. While it is understandable that issuers would like this flexibility and the possible access to lower interest rate money, it is not understandable that this waiting game be played at the expense of Federal revenues. Issuers of municipal bonds should know by now that one of the abusive practices most offensive to Members of Congress is the issuance of bonds that do not produce a public project.

My proposal would eliminate this practice by requiring issuers to reasonably expect to spend at least 15 percent of the proceeds of an issue during each of its first 4 years and an additional 35 percent by the end of the fifth year. If the reasonable expectation test is not met, the bonds would be characterized as arbitrage bonds under the Internal Revenue Code.

Taken together, these two proposals embody the goals of the Anthony Commission on Public Finance by making existing rules more responsive to the needs of State and local governments and ensuring that the law does not permit questionable transactions.

PROGRAM SPENDING

HON. WILLIAM F. CLINGER, JR.

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, earlier this year I asked my constituents to give me their views on a number of the issues that we will debate in this, the 101st, Congress.

More than 10,000 people responded, and I would like to share the results of this information exchange with my colleagues.

Given the current constraints on the Federal budget, we must reevaluate our spending priorities. Therefore I asked my constituents whether spending for certain program areas should be cut, maintained at current levels or increased.

The war on drugs clearly emerged as the top spending priority, with more than 60 percent expressing support for increased funding. But the fact that we have limited financial resources also came across quite clearly, and I am encouraged that my constituents are prepared to support the tough decisions that we will have to make.

It is often frustrating to be forced to make decisions on complicated questions with just a "yes" or "no". I was gratified that so many of my constituents were willing to do just that. What follows is a series of questions and the tabulated answers. I believe that my colleagues will find it interesting:

Q1: Do you believe that the federal government should require employers to give all employees specific benefits, such as maternity leave, health insurance, so forth?

A1: 48 percent responded yes

52 percent responded no

Q2: Should rural health care be one of my top priorities in the 101st Congress?

A2: 52 percent responded yes

48 percent responded no

Q3: Long-term health care is of great concern to many Americans. Do you think Congress should enact legislation to expand the Medicare program to include long-term care even though such legislation might increase your costs?

THE SHORTCHANGING OF WILDLIFE

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, fish and wildlife resources in California are declining rapidly. The losses are staggering. Salmon and steelhead populations have dropped by 90 percent on some rivers, forcing State officials to classify them as "endangered." Waterfowl populations are at their lowest numbers ever.

There is an urgent need to take immediate corrective action.

The Central Valley of California is critically important to the preservation of what is left of the Pacific Flyway's waterfowl. Some 60 percent of the flyway's waterfowl population winters in the Central Valley. Unfortunately, over 90 percent of the Central Valley's wetlands—the habitat for the waterfowl—have been destroyed over the years. The few remaining wetlands are vital for the survival of the Pacific Flyway. Yet, these very wetlands—some of which are part of the National Wildlife Refuge system—are jeopardized.

The key culprit behind the loss of fish, waterfowl, and their habitat is the Bureau of Reclamation's Central Valley project. The Bureau has never mitigated these losses. Instead, it continues to take action after action which will lead to additional losses.

Not only have the fish and wildlife in the Central Valley been shortchanged, but so have the people who enjoy the fish, the wildlife and our waters. The hunters, the people who fish, for a living and for pleasure, the boaters, and the casual visitors to our wildlife refuges are shortchanged as well. Projects, such as the Central Valley project, should be operated for a variety of uses—one of which should be to protect and restore fish and wildlife. But, over the years, fish and wildlife have been at the bottom of the Bureau of Reclamation's list—and that means the people who hunt, fish, boat, and birdwatch are at the bottom of the Bureau's list as well.

One of the more disturbing chapters in this tragic story deals with the National Wildlife Refuges in the Central Valley. Besides the well-known catastrophe at Kesterson, eight other refuges do not have firm water supplies. What this means is that the National Wildlife Refuges—and the waterfowl dependent upon them—do not get the water they need. Biologists estimate the refuges only get about 7 percent of the water they need.

The shortchanging of the wildlife refuges in California is the subject of an excellent article in the most current issue of the Defenders of Wildlife magazine. This compelling article clearly delineates the need for corrective action.

I commend this article to my colleagues:

MORE WATER FOR WILDLIFE?

(By Tom Harris)

Over the years, the wetlands providing winter habitat for North America's millions of waterfowl and many other birds have steadily dwindled under the pressure of agricultural and urban development. No more striking example of this shrinkage can be found than in the sprawling Central Valley of California, where dam and canal building, flood-control projects and agricultural development have reduced once vast marshes, sloughs and seasonally wet floodplains, with their associated uplands, to a meager remnant totaling approximately 280,000 acres. A small chain of nine federal wildlife refuges, four state wildlife management areas and one private wetland area—altogether some 129,000 acres—is a vital part of this remnant.

The Department of the Interior's Bureau of Reclamation is one of the prime agencies involved in water management in the Central Valley. BuRec determines the destinations of much of the water in the two great valley watersheds, those of the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers, for it is the manager of the Central Valley Project. A huge undertaking, CVP and a similar state project in the last 50 or 60 years have transformed several million acres, stretching for 400 miles between Red Bluff in the north and Bakersfield in the south, from wetland to cropland.

Eighty-five percent of the water diverted by dams, pumping stations and canals from the two river systems goes to agriculture—the corporate and large family farms that supply nearly half of the nation's fresh fruit, vegetables and nuts and much of its rice, cotton and hay. Most of the rest of the water goes to municipal and industrial use in a state where the human population is now soaring toward 30 million. And BuRec has ranked refuges at the bottom of a list of potential customers in a proposed sale of what the agency is calling a "surplus" 1.5 million acre-feet of water. (Each acre-foot contains 325,829 gallons, enough to cover an acre with one foot of water.)

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, however, also under the Interior Department, is manager of the federal refuges. And FWS is responsible for migratory bird management under international treaties and administers the Endangered Species Act and other wildlife statutes. FWS maintains among other things that BuRec is not meeting a requirement of the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA) that it avert or mitigate the adverse environmental impacts of CVP water diversions. With conservation, commercial fishing and sportsmen's groups, FWS charges that the bureau is undermining the functioning of the refuges and protected wetlands. With reference to the proposed "surplus" sale, some have questioned the bureau's estimate of available water supplies. On the last count, BuRec officials concede that their figures may be 30 percent too high.

Shortchanging the refuges and other protected wetland areas will speed up the already serious depletion of North America's waterfowl. FWS estimates that waterfowl in the Pacific Flyway last January numbered only about 3.4 million, the lowest figure on record and a 46 percent drop since the service began its counts 33 years ago. Persistent droughts in the Central Valley, which winters 60 percent of the flyway's waterfowl, have contributed to this severe decline. Drought and destruction of upland breeding habitat in Canada are other factors. But the biggest culprit is loss of wetlands. In the Central Valley alone, only six percent of the original wetlands remains.

Wildlife biologists estimate that for the 14 valley refuges dependent upon a stable water supply, the need is 505,650 acre-feet. Included in the list are these national wildlife refuges: Sacramento, Delevan, Colusa, Sutter, Merced, Kesterson, San Luis, Kern and Pixley. The other affected areas are Gray Lodge, Los Banos, Volta and Mendota state wildlife management areas and the private Grassland Resource Conservation District.

Under BuRec's proposed marketing system, there are four classifications of water availability: firm (secure and permanent, available in all but the driest years and guaranteed by existing delivery systems), conditional (available, but needing delivery systems built by others), interim (the "firm" water of others, available only until secured customers need it) and intermittent (available only in unusually wet or flood years when there is a surplus beyond all other needs). Most of the water that the bureau has proposed for the refuges is in the intermittent category.

Intermittent flows would be delivered only in those wet years when low-lying refuges would be well watered in any case, which is 60 percent of the time. In drought years, refuges would be entitled to none. Together, the Central Valley refuges now have only 7.6 percent of the water biologists say is needed by the migrating waterfowl for successful wintering. The state has done a relatively better job in securing firm water rights for its wildlife areas. Eight of the nine affected national wildlife refuges totally lack firm water rights. Kesterson National Wildlife Refuge has 3,500 acre-feet of existing firm water, but 10,000 are needed to provide optimally for waterfowl.

The CVP's initial 40-year water contracts negotiated in the 1940s, long before NEPA was enacted in 1969, are now coming up for renewal. In response, the Environmental Protection Agency, conservationists, sportsmen and commercial fishermen all are insisting that before any individual contracts are negotiated, the cumulative impacts of the entire project must be addressed in relation to present wildlife needs.

In March, EPA requested help on the issue from the President's Council on Environmental Quality, and CEQ has held two hearings. In the meantime, Secretary of the Interior Manuel Lujan, Jr., signed the first renegotiated water rights contract in the Friant Unit—for the tiny Orange Cove Irrigation District 25 miles south west of Fresno. The precedent is immense. If dozens of larger contracts are signed before any assessment of the system's overall impact, it will be too late to cause and correct the damage to the environment.

The Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC) has sued BuRec over the Orange Cove action. But the Interior solicitor's office says a 1956 law gave CVP customers a permanent right to renew contracts when they expire, without any loss of water. Unless NRDC prevails in court, that will be the pattern for 60 agricultural contracts coming up for renewal by 1995 and 206 others for farm and city users by the year 2004. In all, CVP has contracted 7.2 million acre-feet of water in its northern system. That includes the holdings of the Shasta, Trinity, Folsom and San Luis reservoirs. Friant Dam, a separate part of the system, holds another 1.4 million acre-feet.

Until late spring, Secretary Lujan had not agreed to reconsider the current CVP plan. But on May 25 he announced that he was directing BuRec to revise and reissue draft environmental impact statements for public review. "To date, we have received over 2,000 comments on the existing draft EISs from water users, state and federal agencies, environmental organizations and concerned citizens. Many have raised concerns about the technical adequacy of these documents," he explained. The secretary also noted the Interior Department's need to fulfill its obligations "in an environmentally sound manner."

"The future of more than just the Pacific Flyway is at stake here," said Richard Spotts, Defenders' California representative. "What happens in this battle will be a precedent, good or bad, for the refuge system nationwide. It is critical for people in other parts of the country who value waterfowl to get involved in the California issue and press their own congressional representatives to speak up before it is too late.

According to the California Fish and Game Commission, more than half of the 250-plus species listed as endangered, threatened or rare in the state are wetlands-dependent. In the Central Valley, remaining wetland fragments are vital to many imperiled species, including the western yellow-billed cuckoo, southern bald eagle, peregrine falcon, giant garter snake, Swainson's hawk, valley elderberry longhorn beetle and California hibiscus.

When BuRec sought potential contractors for its claimed 1.5 million acre-foot CVP surplus, it received requests for two and a half times that amount. So it pared the so-called "needs" number back to 3 million and then came up with a controversial idea for meeting the remaining gap between demand and supply. Called conjunctive use, the plan proposes that customers with rights and access to underlying groundwater pump that supply up in drought years to ease the shortage burden on those with no access to such subterranean supplies. Surplus water in wet years could be stored in underground aquifers for this dry-year pumping.

But this would force customers to put in dual systems, an expensive proposition, and would sharply increase operating costs because of the electricity required to run the pumps. "We tried to do an imaginative job that is a departure from past Reclamation practices," said John Budd of the bureau's contract repayment office in Sacramento. "In the EIS we told those who wanted the water that we would sell them enough so they would have a full supply all the time but would have to use 100 percent groundwater in critically dry years. The basic premise," he continued, "was that groundwater is a resource that can't be ignored. We can't allow someone to walk away from the resource simply because the alternative—surface water—is cheaper."

But FWS does not have any such groundwater pumping capability now. Neither does it have the funds to drill the wells or pay the huge electricity bills that the pumping would run up. Some 60 percent—more than $80,000—of the 1988-89 electricity and water budget at the state's Gray Lodge Wildlife Management Area was earmarked for pumping groundwater to flood marshlands for waterfowl and nongame wildlife. But the water table is higher and the amount of rainfall is greater at Gray Lodge than at refuges farther south, in the San Joaquin river valley. "We pump from a water table of 20 to 100 feet," said Gray Lodge manager R.B. Reno. The southern refuges would need to go down 200 to 300 feet for water. "They also pay $20 an acre-foot for surface water, when they can get it," Reno added. "We pay $3." If the federal refuges are forced to pump such groundwater, Spotts said, "taxpayers will bear the higher costs."

Budd agrees that the question of who will pay for the refuge water is "one of the big problems we will run into—soon. We have no authority to give it away," he said. "But the important thing to stress is that everyone will get a water supply that is usable and firm, depending on his willingness to participate in the costs. Mother Nature didn't treat the refuges any differently than we are. She didn't supply them in critical dry years, either." But neither did she destroy 3 million acres of wetland habitat that once tided the waterfowl over in such critical periods.

Nevertheless, the California Waterfowl Association and other groups are encouraging the bureau in its recently expressed desire to put more emphasis on projects that benefit rather than damage the environment. "Frankly, we don't care whether the water comes from a hole in the ground, or whether they plant a rain cloud over the refuges, or whether they build another dam, as long as the water is provided," said Dan Chapin, chair of the waterfowl association's resources committee. "What we're seeking is a firm water supply of suitable quality and adequate quantities, delivered to the refuges at the appropriate times of year." Chapin expects the bureau "primarily to get it from uncontracted intermittent water and groundwater in a conjunctive-use program."

But some remain skeptical about the viability of heavy reliance on groundwater as a dry-year bank account. "What concerns me is that the Fish and Wildlife Service doesn't have the wells, the recharge zones, the power sources or the money to operate such a system," said Bill Sweeney, former FWS California supervisor who coordinated several waterfowl habitat studies completed in 1983. "The national and state refuge areas both should be supplied with firm water from the existing CVP yield before more water is sold to anyone else," he added. "The justification for firm water first is the enormous loss of habitat from the construction and operation of the project all these years. Without signed agreements, it is just another staff recommendation. And I have spent my entire adult life watching the bureau back away from things it promised to do, and didn't. So I am skeptical. I have heard it all before."

Unless current water assignments change, the Central Valley's wetlands will have to get by on far less than they need. Even though Kesterson has some firm water, irrigation drainage in its supply has killed off fish, thousands of waterfowl and other birds, and deformed their young with high levels of poisonous selenium, a natural soil element washed into the refuge in agricultural drainage. Ironically, 1,250 acres of ponds at Kesterson have been dewatered to keep waterfowl from using them.

Conservationists predict that BuRec's new environmental impact statements may be a long time in coming. Not only does the bureau need to start from square one in researching CVP's impacts on the environment, but it also must do extended groundwater studies to establish whether a conjunctive-use program is feasible. And those studies are "neither cheap nor quick," said CWA's Chapin. "If they do this right, it could be a long time before they come back with the results," he predicted. In the meantime, without assured additional water in the refuges, there isn't much chance for California to play a significant role in the recently launched North American Waterfowl Management Plan, a 15-year, $1.5 billion effort to restore the continent's wetlands. After decades of assurances that someday, somehow, permanent water rights will be secured before the rest of the Central Valley's wetlands dry up and virtually blow away, conservationists fear that wildlife is destined to be bypassed again.

For much of the nation, the water rights issue is an unseen tragedy far off in the West. But for waterfowl, and for those fighting to uphold their rights, it is reality—a grim threat to the future of one of the nation's four main migratory corridors. If such a threat can't be stopped in a state with the record of California's environmental sophistication and activism, conservationists fear that it can't be stopped anywhere.

AAA AWARDS SCHOOL SAFETY PATROL LIFESAVING MEDALS

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, this month the American Automobile Association is presenting six young people the highest award given to members of school safety patrols throughout the United States, the AAA School Safety Patrol Lifesaving Medal.

The Lifesaving Medal Program was initiated in 1949 by the American Automobile Association to recognize and honor selected school patrol members for their heroic lifesaving contribution to their communities. These awards are presented annually to selected members of the school safety patrol who, while on duty, have saved the lives of persons in imminent danger.

Since its inception, more than 280 boys and girls from 30 states and the District of Columbia have been honored with the lifesaving medal.

An award review board composed of representatives from active national organizations in the fields of education, law enforcement, and safety selects deserving medal recipients from those candidates who have been officially nominated for consideration.

The 1989 recipients of the AAA School Safety Patrol Lifesaving Medal are: Edward R. Curiel, age 10, Rose Park Elementary, Salt Lake City, UT; Christopher B. Garner, age 10, Tremont Elementary, Medford, NY; Jason G. Hincka, age 11, Durant Tuuri Mott Community, Flint, MI; Angelique J. Lausch, age 11, Riverside Elementary, Alexandria, VA; Paul M. Smith, age 10, Homewood Elementary, Lorain, OH, and Ian K. Tope, Age 11, Shawnee Elementary, Xenia, OH.

AHMADI VILLAGE ATTACK

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the House's attention an attack that took place in Punjab Province in Pakistan July 16 and 17. The attack was on an Ahmadi village and from what I can gather, it was unprovoked and involved Muslim fundamentatlists and may have been condoned by the local government and police. Four people were killed and at least 33 out of about 100 houses were burned. Women and children were taken from the village during the attack and have been prevented from returning. The men of the village were removed and are still being detained without charge. It has also been reported that the village is surrounded by hundreds of police who are preventing anyone from entering the village. The information on this incident is still very sketchy, but this is not the first time members of the Ahmadiyya community have been attacked.

A similar attack took place in mid-April on another Ahmadi village in Punjab Province. This time 15 Ahmadi homes were burned. Again, there were reports that the local authorities did not intervene and may have actually supported the attack. If the Punjab Government is turning a blind eye at best, and endorses these actions at worst, a very grave pattern of abuses is developing.

These are aggressive and cruel acts on a religious minority that has lived far too long under the cloud of prejudice. The Ahmadi sect, one of 70 Muslim sects in Pakistan, was founded in northern India in 1889 by Hazrat Mirza Ghulam Ahmad whom some Ahmadis believe was the last prophet or a reformer of Islam. For this reason, they are abhorred in Pakistan. Ahmadis cannot practice their religion, use Islamic terminology, call themselves Muslims, refer to their faith as Islam, call prayers, preach or propagate their faith by words written, spoken or by using gestures.

Freedom of religious expression is a fundamental human right which should not be denied anyone. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights spells out that everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, either alone or with others and in public or private. Under the declaration a person can manifest their religion or belief in teaching, practice, worship and observance. Ahmadis, however, are charged an unlimited fine and imprisonment of up to 3 years if they express their form of Islam. The bias against Ahmadis is codified in Pakistan's constitution and in their Code of Criminal Procedures. Pakistan's Ahmadiyya community has been singled out for this type of intolerance, where Hindus, Sikhs, and Christians can perform their religious rites without transgressing the law.

There are 10 million Ahmadi Muslims throughout the world who live in 120 different countries of which 3 million live in Pakistan. These people are not violent and have not imposed their beliefs on others. They have not brought this upon themselves. I hope that the Pakistani Government in making its new strides toward democracy would guarantee the right of all its citizens to pursue their religious beliefs.

TRIBUTE TO MICHAEL AND GENEVIEVE MURRAY

HON. JIM SAXTON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor two fine members of my community on the occasion of their 50th wedding anniversary. On August 26, 1989 Michael and Genevieve Murray will celebrate a half of a century of loving dedication to each other. The Murray's are the parents of three sons, Damian, Michael, and Terrence. In additioin, the Murray's are the proud grandparents of 11 grandchildren. They currently live in Mystics Shores which is a part of Little Egg Harbor Township and have lived in New Jersey for the last 34 years.

Michael Murray, now retired, worked in the Government Corp of Engineers while Genevieve worked as a secretary. In addition to their dedication to their respective jobs, the Murray's have found time to involve themselves in numerous community and civic organizations. Mr. Murray is a member of the Holy Name Society and the Knights of Columbus. Both Michael and Genevieve are members of the Mystic Shores Homeowner's Association. The Murrays dedication to their community through their years of service in their occupations and their civic activities is in and of itself commendable.

Mr. Speaker, the Murrays demonstrate to all members of the community their commitment to each other as well as their neighborhood. It is for this reason that I ask my colleagues to join with me in recognizing this wonderful milestone in the lives of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Murray.

TRIBUTE TO DONALD LAKE—PRESIDENT OF PETER PAN TOURS

HON. RICHARD E. NEAL

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize a long-time figure in the business community of my congressional district, Donald Lake.

As president of Peter Pan Tours, Don has been a leader in the travel and tourism industry both in my hometown of Springfield, MA, and across the country for 27 years. In 1964, the then 2-year-old company, Peter Pan World Travel, decided to branch into the motorcoach tour industry, and thus Peter Pan Tours was established under the capable leadership of Don Lake.

A quarter century later, his vision of developing a topnotch tour company has been fulfilled. One can see Peter Pan buses literally anywhere in the United States and Canada. I would like to point out that it gives me great satisfaction and pride when I see a Peter Pan bus in Washington, which, incidentally, is nearly every time I am here. Don Lake's company has brought the city of Springfield to the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, Don Lake's accomplishments are worthy of mention in and of themselves. I am bringing them to my colleagues' attention today, however, because of his impending retirement after 27 years of service. Over those years, Don has become instrumental to the Peter Pan Co. and to the motorcoach tour industry, and I know that his leadership will be sorely missed. I want to extend my best wishes to him as he prepares to meet the new challenges which his future will hold.

H.R. 3030, CLEAN AIR ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1989

HON. JOHN J. RHODES III

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, last week I joined 145 of my colleagues in cosponsoring bipartisan legislation (H.R. 3030) incorporating the President's proposed amendments to the Clean Air Act.

The so-called Dingell-Lent bill proposes major efforts through imposition of deadlines and violation sanctions to reduce health problems created by urban smog (including a significant alternative fuels programs); as well as forthrightly setting a schedule for an enforcement of reduced hazardous air emissions from stationary sources; and would set in law the President's program to achieve a 10-million-ton reduction in sulfur dioxide emissions by the year 2000, to significantly reduce problems caused by acid rain. Tough new penalties would be set in law to enforce these provisions.

While I generally support this sincere effort to address in a comprehensive manner the significant air quality problems that plague many parts of America and impact on our environment and our citizens at large, I do have some significant reservations which need to be addressed as the bill moves through the legislation process.

First and foremost, as I have insisted since coming to Congress, and as a member of the 92 Group Informal Working Group on Acid Rain, there must be no general nationwide utility fee or ratepayers tax which would subsidize the cleanup in eastern states. It simply is not equitable to force utilities in the west, which have spent hundreds of millions of dollars on new facilities, and retrofit of older facilities and who burn low-sulpher coal, to foot the bill to cleanup of older, dirtier facilities in the east.

The legislation recognizes the use of low NO_x burners to meet the President's tonnage reduction goal. These provisions must be maintained. I certainly reserve the right to support amendments that would amend the cap on emissions contained in title 5, in an effort to provide fairness and credit for companies that have already cleaned up their facilities and have maintained low emissions averages.

Also of concern to me is the apparently unbridled discretion the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency [EPA] will have to promulgate regulations which may be onerous to western utilities, and the veto power a governor may use to restrict the use of alternative fuels to meet a statewide emissions goal. Flexibility and market drive solutions must be the focus of effort to attain the goals set in the legislation.

It is with these reservations that I cosponsor this legislation. My hope is the forthcoming deliberations and actions in the House Energy and Commerce Committee will be in concert with these concerns, and that when the Committee work is complete, I will be in a position to continue my support for much needed clean air/acid rain legislation when it comes to the House floor.

THE LIBRARY SERVICES IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1989

HON. WILLIAM F. GOODLING

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the administration, I am introducing today the Library Services Improvement Act of 1989, a legislative proposal designed to restructure Federal support for our Nation's public libraries. This administrative proposal is similar to legislation that was introduced on the administration's behalf in the last Congress.

The Library Services Improvement Act contains three titles. Titles I would authorize $91 million for "Services for the Disadvantaged" to assist States in providing new or expanded library services to economically disadvantaged and physically disabled individuals. Through a State formula grant, State would support local programs, such as literacy training and English instruction in the local public library; summer reading programs; expansion of library collections in rural areas; and the purchase of special materials and equipment for use by handicapped persons.

Title II would authorize $45 million for "Resource Sharing," providing $30 million to the States, as "seed money" for the development of interstate and intrastate networks or for the expansion of existing resource-sharing networks. Funds may be used for the acquisition and maintenance of computer hardware, software, and communications lines. The remaining $15 million would be earmarked for discretionary grants for the development of networks across State lines, thus providing a nationwide sharing of resources.

Finally, title III, "Research and Assessment," would support field initiated research, evaluation, and policy studies needed to improve and strengthen all types of libraries. To date, such data and accountability has been lacking. Nevertheless, the conduct of research and assessment in the field of library and information science is an important Federal role. Accountability will ensure that the Federal dollars spent on library programs are well targeted and effectively used.

Mr. Speaker, this legislative proposal clearly redefines the Federal role with regard to our Nation's libraries. While there is much in the administration proposal which deserves our close attention and consideration, I feel that a major restructuring of the Federal Government's support of public library programs should await the recommendations of the White House Conference on Libraries, which Congress has authorized and partially funded. Such a national conference of librarians, to be held before September 1991, will provide the basis for congressional policymaking for libraries as our Nation prepares to enter the 21st century. I believe, however, that the administration should be able to go on record with its legislative proposal at this time, and I am pleased to introduce this bill on its behalf.

FLORIDA A&M UNIVERSITY'S "MARCHING 100": AMERICA'S BAND

HON. WILLIAM H. GRAY III

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Florida A&M University's marching band, the "Marching 100," which recently participated in the bicentennial celebration of the French Revolution.

On July 14, 1989, France held The Bastille Day Parade as part of the events commemorating its 200th birthday. The "Marching 100", 1 of 16 bands to perform in the spectacle, was the only group from the United States. The 223-member band was invited to represent our country in the parade by the Government of France because, according to bicentennial celebration Director Jean-Claude Goude:

> FAMU was my choice to represent American culture. They combine extraordinary talent, dance talent as well as music skills. They're fresh, they're very young and they represent American culture to me.

The "Marching 100" treated Parisians and a worldwide television audience to the sounds of the "Godfather of Soul", James Brown, and to orchestrated dances such as the moonwalk, made famous by Michael Jackson.

The honor bestowed upon the FAMU band represents years of growth and is the result of a long tradition of musical excellence and showmanship. Founded in 1892 under the guidance of P.A. Van Weller, the group began as an ensemble of 16 instruments. The band has risen to its current level of notoriety under the 43-year leadership of Dr. William P. Foster, director of bands. It was Foster's vision of ". . . 100 bandsmen; proud, uniformed, marching like drum-majors or a crack drill-team—and playing to the highest musical standards anywhere," that has given the band its name and its commitment to excellence. In 1985, the band received the coveted "Sudler Trophy for Collegiate Marching Bands" from The John Philip Sousa Foundation, the highest award an American band can receive. They have also appeared on more than 30 television programs and have been seen by more than 3 billion people worldwide.

The high standards of the "Marching 100" is deeply embedded in its motto, "highest quality of character, achievement in academics, attainment in leadership, perfection of musicianship, precision in marching and dedication to service." The fact that this musical institution was invited to represent the United States of America is indicative not only of striving for such high standards, but achieving them as well.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will join me today in congratulating the Florida A&M University band, Dr. William P. Foster and the band's diligent staff on their performance in The Bastille Day Parade. With such an achievement it is no wonder they have been called the best in America. I am proud to stand today in recognition of this great accomplishment and to wish continued success to Florida A&M's "Marching 100", America's Band.

TRIBUTE TO DOROTHY MELVILLE

HON. GEORGE J. HOCHBRUECKNER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. HOCHBRUECKNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my heartfelt sorrow at the passing of a dear friend of many years, Mrs. Dorothy Melville. Mrs. Melville, the widow of philanthropist, Ward Melville, died at her home in Old Field, Long Island, on August 1 at the age of 95.

I would like to take this opportunity to share with my colleagues the lifelong dedication and philanthropy of Mr. and Mrs. Ward Melville. For over half a century, The Museums at Stony Brook and the communities of the Three Villages—Old Field, Setauket and Stony Brook—were beneficiaries of the vision, leadership and support of this extraordinary couple. My wife, Carol Ann, and I have been active with The Museums at Stony Brook. We will greatly miss Mrs. Melville's friendship.

Dorothy and Ward Melville married in 1930, the same year that Ward Melville took over the Melville Shoe Corp. from his father, who founded the company in 1892. As president and chairman of the board from 1930 until his death in 1977, Ward Melville guided the growth of the Melville Corp. to become a major retailing company.

With a deep sense of caring for the community in which they lived, Mr. and Mrs. Ward Melville became involved in supporting a wide variety of organizations and projects in health, education, environmental and historic preservation and the arts. In 1939, Mrs. Melville assisted in incorporating and finding a home for the fledgling Suffolk Museum. In 1942, the museum was chartered by the University of New York Education Department, with Mrs. Melville named as president of the board of trustees. She was elected chairperson of the Suffolk Museum in 1983.

Under Mrs. Melville's leadership and philanthropy, the institution and its collections grew. The museum reflected the Melvilles' interest in preserving Long Island history, art, and the vanished era of the horse-drawn transportation. Mr. Melville's collections of the art and writings of the Stony Brook native and noted genre painter, Wiliam Sidney Mount, and of horse-drawn vehicles, for which he built the Carraige House display facility in 1951, were incorporated into the museum's collections over a period of time, attracting other donations and collections. In time, The Museums at Stony Brook, by which name the museum is now known, achieved professioanl stature with collections of national and international importance.

Since the early 1940's Mrs. Melville also served on the board of trustees of the Stony Brook Community Fund, a trust established and led by her husband, that was responsible for the welfare of the Stony Brook Village Center and numerous historic properties which were acquired and restored by Mr. Melville for the public. Mrs. Melville was elected by the fund's directors to succeed Mr. Melville as president upon his death in 1977. As president of the Frank Melville Jr. Memorial Foundation and president of the Three Village Garden Club, Mrs. Melville was actively involved in community beautification efforts, including the establishment of the mill pond and park in Setauket. She was also an active supporter of the restoration of the historic Caroline Church in Setauket.

In 1972, Mr. and Mrs. Ward Melville were inducted into the Long Island Association's Hall of Fame; in December 1979 she was named "Woman of the Decade" by the Village Times newspaper. In 1982, she was the recipient of the Ward Melville Community award from the Three Village Historical Society, and in 1984, she received the Garden Club of America's Zone III award for historic preservation. In 1986, the New York State Legislature adopted a resolution recognizing Mrs. Melville's many contributions to her community and to the preservation of Long Island's history, and commending her for "unremitting concern for the people of the Empire State."

Mrs. Melville's unselfish concerns and lifelong efforts on behalf of the welfare of the Three Vilages were exemplary. The institutions she nurtured, such as The Museums at Stony Brook, the Stony Brook Village Center, the Caroline Church, and the Frank Melville Pond serve to preserve important segments of Long Island's rich heritage for succeeding generations of its citizens. These institutions, as well as Ward Melville High School in Setauket and the Frank Melville Jr. Memorial Library at the State University of New York at Stony Brook, will serve as living memorials to the Melvilles.

Carol Ann and I were honored to call Mrs. Melville our friend.

CONGRESSIONAL REFORM

HON. JAN MEYERS

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mrs. MEYERS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to discuss two of the most serious problems of the committee system in the House, scheduling conflicts and proxy voting. The way committee meetings are scheduled here is arbitrary, capricious, inefficient, and aggravating. It diminishes this House, and defeats the purpose of having committees. Members frequently have to be in two or even three committee meetings at once. We dash from hearing to markup, missing the substance of the testimony and content of the legislation, simply because the House of Representatives will not establish a formal committee schedule. I believe that a rational schedule could be developed that would minimize overlap. In most legislatures, there is a standard schedule. Very active committees meet for an hour every day. Other committees meet only twice a week. The schedule is set up so that a committee knows well in advance when it is to meet.

We should try that in the House. Surely the chairmen and vice chairmen can get together at the beginning of a Congress and put together a schedule that would bring to a minimum these conflicts. Both the Democrats and Republicans have restrictions on how many and what kind of committees members can serve on. Work out a schedule so that committees don't all meet at the same time. An important part of scheduling reform would be time limits for the end of committee meetings, especially hearings. The purpose of hearings is to receive testimony and question the witnesses, not to orate for the benefit of the TV cameras. Fixed times for the completion of hearings would do much to limit this abuse. Maybe it can't be done, but it should be seriously looked at.

Ending scheduling conflicts would also eliminate the prime excuse for the practice of proxy voting. The civics books and Capitol tour guides all say, "the real work of Congress is done in the committees." If this is so, how can this practice be tolerated? We would never accept a proposal to allow the floor leader to vote for absent Members on a floor vote, why are committee votes any different?

Mr. Speaker, this is a quality of life issue as well. Improved committee scheduling would allow Members to organize their own schedules more effectively as well. No longer would we have to cancel appointments with constituents to attend committee meetings set on a day or two's notice. No longer would we have to feel the aggravation of having to be in two places at once. We could all represent the people better, which is after all, what we're here for.

IN HONOR OF HAMBURG, NY, THE BIRTHPLACE OF THE HAMBURGER

HON. BILL PAXON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. PAXON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the town of Hamburg, NY, as the "Birthplace of the Hamburger."

Each year, the town of Hamburg in Erie County, NY, founded in 1812 and known as "The Town That Friendship Built," celebrates a historic occasion—the invention of the ground-beef sandwich which all of us, across the country and around the world, now recognize as America's famous hamburger.

It was over 100 years ago in 1885 at the Hamburg Fair, present site of the famous Erie County Fair and one of the Nation's largest, that the hamburger was created. Two concessionaires, Frank Menches and his brother Charles, came to the fair to cook their specialty, the pork sausage sandwich.

As the day went on, the Menches brothers unexpectedly ran out of pork sausage. When Frank went to the local butcher, his good friend Andrew Stein; the meat market was out of pork sausage too, and so Frank returned to the fair with chopped beef. Charles pressed the beef into patties while Frank prepared the stove which would cook their historic creation.

The brothers worried that the new sandwich would lack taste, so they tried adding a dash of salt, then some brown sugar, and even a little coffee. The first customer to taste the delicious new sandwich asked Frank what it was called. In honor of the town of Hamburg, NY, Frank named it the hamburger.

In the days that followed, Frank and Charles offered catsup and sliced onions with their hamburgers, along with wild spearmint leaves to freshen the mouths of hungry fairgoers. Word of the new hamburger spread throughout the town of Hamburg, and later to all parts of the country, to eventually become a famous symbol of our rich American culture.

This year, as in years past, the good people of Hamburg celebrate their namesake, the hamburger, with a 3-day summer festival called Burger Days, featuring the Bun Run Classic—a 5-mile race, the Meat Ball—a street dance with live music, and the Burgers, Buns, and Bed Race down the streets of Hamburg.

I am proud, Mr. Speaker, to join the people of Hamburg and especially all those who work so hard to make this wonderful community event possible, in saluting America's most famous food, the hamburger, and the town after which it was proudly named, Hamburg, NY.

THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF PUBLICATION OF THE RIDGEWOOD NEWS

HON. MARGE ROUKEMA

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, on September 14, 1989, a Bergen County institution will cross a significant milestone. That day will mark 100 years of distinguished service to northeastern New Jersey by the Ridgewood News and its predecessors.

William Tomkin first published the News in 1889, writing the news articles and the editorials as he commuted to and from his job in New York City. A few years later, the paper was sold for $1 to Leonard Taft, who transformed it into a weekly and gave the News its first home—above a village blacksmith shop. In 1894, Frank Baxter took over the News and operated it until he sold it to the Fishler family. Franklin Fishler, Bennett Fishler, and Bennett Fishler, Jr., provided far-sighted leadership to the paper from 1916 into contemporary time.

Walter Lippmann wrote in 1920 that the newspaper "is in all literalness the bible of democracy, the book out of which a people determines its conduct." If this is the measure of a newspaper, the Ridgewood News has indeed been a successful and critical instrument of Bergen County life. For decades, it has taken upon itself the important and sometimes difficult task of monitoring, studying, and covering the actions of our numerous local governmental bodies—bodies that sometimes escape the scrutiny of the other media. Bergen County is a better place for the vigilance of this journalistic watchdog.

But the Ridgewood News has also provided other valuable services. Through its pages, it has kept its editorial finger on the pulse of all facets of Bergen County life.

Today, the Ridgewood News and its various affiliated newspapers provide valuable biweekly service to the residents of Ridgewood, Allendale, Fair Lawn, Franklin Lakes, Glen Rock, Ho-Ho-Kus, Mahwah, Midland Park, Oakland, Ramsey, Saddle River, Upper Saddle River, Waldwick, and Wyckoff.

I urge my colleagues to join me in commending the Ridgewood News and its people, past and present, as they celebrate the 100th anniversary of their first publication.

A TRIBUTE TO JOYCE WILLIAMS

HON. MERVYN M. DYMALLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing Joyce Williams, a constituent in my district who has earned a special tribute by her outstanding civic and educational contributions.

The unusual element of this recognition is that since 1984 Joyce has been a functional quadriplegic who is confined to a wheelchair. She must rely on hospital-bed, hoyer lift, electric recliner, speaker phone and many other medical aids. She is totally dependent on others for feeding, dressing, and other personal care. These handicaps have failed to halt Joyce's remarkable accomplishments.

A resident of Harbor City, Joyce E. Doze-Williams is a single, disabled mother who is in the process of raising two highly gifted children, James and Celeste, ages 12 and 10.

Prior to becoming disabled, Joyce had been an elementary school teacher for Los Angeles Unified School District for approximately 16 years. In October 1984, she was diagnosed as having a very rare neurological disorder Arnold-Chiari Malformation of the Cerebellum and Hydromyelia of the spinal cord, both of which are congenital.

Neighbors, friends and acquaintances attest to Joyce's high intellect, knowledge and wit. A verbal give and take with her can be a very rewarding experience since she is always up-to-date on current affairs in government and school matters, and usually has a positive answer when queried about these matters.

Joyce has simply not allowed her handicap to be a detriment. She is a provider and role model for her two wonderfully disciplined children. James is studying at a university level and Celestes is following closely behind. The academic brilliance of her children is a prime example of her motto: "A mind is a terrible thing to waste."

In Harbor City, many of Joyce's former students are neighbors and often drop in just to visit, talk over problems or get help with homework. Being a good listener, Joyce has always had the ability to help others. She exudes confidence, which can change a person from being a failure into one of confidence who could and would do his best.

Joyce has the same positive attitude about her own life. She never dwells on the "whys" or "what ifs" and "what might have been," but is thankful everyday for the blessings she does possess. A truly remarkable woman.

Born in Lynwood, Joyce attended Washington High School and California State University at Los Angeles, where she received her B.A. degree in Sociology and her M.A. degree and Administrative Credentials in 1973. At California State University at Los Angeles, she joined Delta Sigma Theta and is a life member of the University Alumni Association, holding life elementary credentials as well as administration credentials. In addition, she is a member of United Teachers of Los Angeles, National Education Association, California Teachers Association, and Los Angeles, Music Teachers' Association.

Having been listed in outstanding young women of America in 1972 and Who's Who Among Black Women in California in 1981 and 1982, Joyce was an instructor at President Avenue Elementary School, only taking time out to have her two children. In December 1984 she was forced to take leave because of her illiness. This ailment later forced her into early retirement.

Joyce is very active in the church community, having represented her church, Lewis Metropolitan CME Church on several occasions at conferences and has worked many hours on the board of Christian education in that church. Joyce has received honors from Lewis Church and other organizations for her accomplishments. I am now adding my name to that list. Again, I am very honored to pay this tribute to Joyce Williams.

INTRODUCING THE PANAMA DEMOCRACY AND ECONOMIC RECOVERY ACT

HON. SAM GEJDENSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, this is a year in which the peoples of the world have given courageous new meaning to the struggle for democracy and freedom. One image that will be forever etched in our minds is the graphic photo of the brutal attack on Panama's democratic opposition in the aftermath of the May 1989 Panamanian elections. We saw the bloodied figures of the winning Panamanian opposition candidates being beaten by paramilitary battalions of the Noriega regime as members of the Panamanian Defense Forces looked on. What we saw in the faces of the opposition was the strength, courage, and conviction of the Panamanian people to use nonviolent means to bring democracy to their country.

Today, I am introducing the Panama Democracy and Economic Recovery Act that pledges United States support for the people of Panama in their efforts to regain democracy and freedom. It provides economic assistance to Panama when Noriega leaves power and when the country has taken concrete steps to restore democracy. The bill underscores the commitment of the United States to a multilateral initiative against the Noriega regime.

There can be no doubt that our past policy of economic sanctions in Panama has been counterproductive. Noriega is still in power. United States and Panamanian businesses have been seriously damaged. The economy of Panama is in a tailspin. With a decline in GDP of 20 percent in 1988, conditions there resemble those of our Great Depression. Bank lending, foreign and domestic investment, and economic activity in general have fallen dramatically and are continuing to decline. U.S. economic sanctions have contributed to that decline.

Economic sanctions have hurt the very people we want to help. Rather than emphasize the unsuccessful unilateral economic sanctions of the past, this legislation highlights the importance of a multilateral approach to the economic reconstruction and recovery of Panama that will be needed following a transition to democracy. The people of Panama must know that the United States will be ready to forge a multilateral economic recovery effort. Democracy can only thrive within the context of economic freedom.

The Noriega regime has run the Panamanian economy into the ground. The regime has ignored the maintenance of the physical infrastructure of the country and the Panama Canal. Noriega and his cronies have used the resources of the country for their own personal gain. Their actions have resulted in an upsurge in bankruptcies of both small- and medium-size businesses. They have driven out foreign investment, encouraged the departure of international banks, and created significant unemployment and underemployment.

This bill I am introducing today outlines a strategy for addressing the long-term political and economic concerns of the Panamanian people. It offers a practical set of guidelines for United States policy toward Panama and paves the way for an economic recovery in a post-Noriega Panama. The legislation builds on the conditions for aid that are outlined in current law. However, I have adapted current law to reflect today's political and economic realities. The bill requires the President to certify that: General Noreiga is no longer in power; progress has been made in assuring a separation of the civilian and military functions; freedom of the press, due process of law, and other constitutional guarantees have been restored in Panama; and the Government of Panama has agreed to take steps to prevent drug related money laundering.

The Panamanian people need and deserve the moral and economic support of their friends in the hemisphere. This bill begins to address that need.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS SERVICES FOR HEARING AND SPEECH IMPAIRED INDIVIDUALS

HON. STEVE GUNDERSON

OF WISCONSIN

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, not a day goes by, perhaps not an hour expires, when the majority of us does not pick up a telephone receiver and recreate the technological miracle that first took place as a result of Alexander Graham Bell's efforts. Technology and America have come a long way since then. Today some 200 million Americans enjoy the freedom and universal access assured under the Communications Act of 1934.

There are, however, Mr. Speaker, some 25 million Americans who do not enjoy the freedom and universal access that you and I have come to exercise at will. These neglected 25 million I speak of are the speech- and hearing-impaired of our country.

In the 100th Congress, the Senate and many of the Members of this House joined together in passing a companion bill Senator MCCAIN and I sponsored, the "Telecommunications Accessibility Enhancement Act of 1988." Signed into law on October 28, 1988, Public Law 100-542 has served to expand our national telecommunications systems by requiring that the Federal Telecommunications system be fully accessible to hearing-impaired and speech-impaired individuals. While this law is important in increasing access to the Federal Government, obstacles still remain.

For instance, Franky Ramont, a young deaf woman working in my office is restricted to communicating only with persons possessing and familiar with a TDD. Persons like Franky cannot directly place a reservation at a restaurant, call a business associate across State or contact a relative trans-America. We have the technology, it simply isn't being used. This must change.

Today I am introducing legislation that would amend the Communications Act of 1934 to ensure communication services are available to our speech- and hearing-impaired Americans. Under this bill, the Federal Communication Commission shall ensure that—no later than 2 years after the enactment date—interstate and intrastate telecommunications relay services are available, so far as possible and in the most efficient manner, to hearing-impaired individuals in the United States.

This legislation is a companion to the Senate legislation introduced by my friend, Senator JOHN MCCAIN and it extends optimum flexibility to the common carrier to provide "telecommunications relay services." In initiating this proposal in the private sector, we will ensure that technology and quality will continue to be improved and enhanced.

Furthermore, this bill compliments the American with Disabilities Act and I am pleased that it has become the whole of title IV in the Senate Labor Committee markup of the ADA. I would look favorably to the same inclusion of this bill in the House version of ADA, but will nonetheless pursue this bill if it is not.

While a number of States already have such a system and still others are moving toward a system, Federal legislation will assure similar standards and access. This legislation also provides for an exemption from MFJ regulations as well as an exemption for carriers who would experience undue burden in setting up such a system. Although I remain concerned about this bills effect upon the small carrier, I am pleased to hear that "mom and pop" operations have not been adversely effected.

Let me move quickly to continue to empower hearing and speech-impaired individuals and provide for them the universal access that has become an integral part of American life.

THE ELEPHANT BUTTE IRRIGATION DISTRICT

HON. JOE SKEEN

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. SKEEN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that will result in cost savings and more efficient management of an irrigation district in southern New Mexico. This will be accomplished by transferring certain rights-of-way from the Bureau of Reclamation to the Elephant Butte Irrigation District.

My legislation provides the Secretary of the Interior with the authority to transfer to the Elephant Butte Irrigation District in New Mexico, without cost to the district, title to easements, ditches, laterals, canals, drains and other rights-of-ways which the United States acquired on behalf of the project. The Secretary's authority extends to those rights-of-ways which are used solely for the purpose of serving the Elephant Butte Irrigation District. The transfer of rights-of-ways that are jointly used by the Elephant Butte Irrigation District and other water districts can only be transferred upon the agreement of all parties involved. Finally, any transfer authorized under this legislation is subject to the condition that the Elephant Butte Irrigation District assumes full responsibility for operating and maintaining the portion of the project to be transferred.

This transfer is made possible by the fact that the Elephant Butte Irrigation Districts has repaid in full to the Federal Government its portion of the Rio Grande project, which established the district. Since 1979, the Bureau of Reclamation has contracted with the Elephant Butte Irrigation District for the district to handle operation and maintenance of various parts of the project. This legislation would now transfer title to the district the areas which it has operated and maintained for 10 years.

This proposed transfer provides many advantages to both the Federal Government and the Elephant Butte Irrigation District. The United States reduces some of its administrative costs and potential management responsibilities as well as potential liabilities. The district gains title and a fuller measure of control of lands in which it has the sole remaining interest.

Specifically, the district will have greater ability to deal with encroachments that have been appearing on the rights-of-ways and easements which serve the project. Delays in processing and issuing permits for various utilities and water companies to cross these easements and rights-of-ways should be eliminated.

The Elephant Butte Irrigation District has done an admirable job in keeping operation and maintenance costs down. By taking full responsibility over functions currently performed by the Bureau, it is anticipated that additional savings can be attained. Over the past 10 years, the costs to the Elephant Butte irrigation for the annual operation and maintenance charges requested by the Bureau have increased 141 percent. This is during a time when the duties and responsibilities of the Bureau have decreased. Again, a consolidation of control and full responsibility of the easements and rights-of-ways should lead to further savings.

This proposal makes good sense and I hope my colleagues will offer their support in passing this legislation.

THE SENSELESS KILLING OF LIEUTENANT COLONEL HIGGINS

HON. RAYMOND J. McGRATH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join the citizens of New York's Fifth Congressional District and my colleagues here in the House of Representatives, to express my outrage at the brutal murder of Marine Lt. Col. William R. Higgins on Monday past.

The situation involving Lieutenant Colonel Higgins and the other American hostages in the Middle East is indeed sensitive. Our main problem in the region is indentifying the Islamic factions that are holding the Americans, and to develop serious negotiations with them. However, it is impossible to negotiate with nonsovereign groups who employ terrorism as a means of achieving worldwide recognition. Acknowledging these fanatics before they resolve to relinquish their terrorist behavior would be ill policy for the United States to adhere to.

Any U.S. response and action to terrorist violence will cost us, even if we pick and choose carefully from an expanded series of options. However, I believe that a nonexistent response will prove much more costly in the bloodshed of innocent victims and human life. I urge my colleagues to support the initiatives of President Bush in his most difficult task of the young administration. If we here in the Congress resort to harsh criticism and hindsight, we are playing right into the hands of the media hungry Middle East extremists.

Mr. Speaker, Lieutenant Colonel Higgins did not die in vain. He was proud of his position in Lebanon and his United Nation's mission. Regrettably, he is also proof that no one is immune to the wicked winds of terrorism. Until these winds subside, the United States must remain committed to abrogating terrorist activities worldwide.

REFORM IN COMMUNIST COUNTRIES

HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, the first half of 1989 has been witness to unparalleled political, social, and economic reforms in Hungary and Poland. In tandem with the changes that are underway in the Soviet Union under Mikhail Gorbachev, there is newfound hope and optimism that the other repressive Communist regimes which have dominated Eastern Europe for the past 45 years will follow the path of change which leads to openness, democracy, and respect for basic human rights.

We focus much attention on those nations for whose progress we have fought hard and which are now moving ahead. Yet we must also remain vigilant in our commitment to bring about the same advances in nations such as Czechoslovakia which lag far behind. Czechoslovakia has shown a serious decline in respect for human rights since the CSCE Vienna followup meeting last January. Czechoslovakian citizens, buoyed in part by the victories of their neighbors, have grown more vocal in publicly condemning the repressive policies of their government. Independent opposition activists, fighting for human rights since Czechoslovakia assumed participatory state status in the Helsinki agreement in 1975, have recently been joined in their protests by vast numbers of average citizens. They no longer grow silent in the face of intimidation. More and more often the Government has been forced to detain, arrest, and convict those who speak out against repression in order to quiet their voices.

August 21, 1989 will mark the 21st anniversary of the Soviet-led invasion of Czechoslovakia. We must use this occasion to demonstrate our solidarity with the growing numbers of Czechoslovakian activists and to promote the dialog which opposition activists have requested with the Czechoslovak Government. We must reinforce our commitment to the Helsinki accords by showing that amidst the dramatic improvements in some countries, we have not lost sight of those governments which maintain only a facade of compliance.

COMMEMORATING THE BICENTENNIAL OF NORTH BEND, OH

HON. THOMAS A. LUKEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. THOMAS A. LUKEN. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to recognize the bicentennial of the village of North Bend, OH. North Bend was founded by Judge John Cleves Symmes on February 2, 1789. Judge Symmes led the first pioneers down the mighty Ohio River to this area on flatboats, and named the area "North Bend" because of the big bend toward the north in the river.

Two of North Bend's most famous residents were Presidents William Henry Harrison and his grandson, Benjamin Harrison. Benjamin was born at North Bend in his grandfather's home, and William Henry Harrison is now buried in North Bend.

The village of North Bend has banded together to commemorate its bicentennial with a celebration on August 4, 1989. Over the weekend, 10 exhibitions have been planned, each of which will demonstrate the changes that have taken place in North Bend over the past 200 years. Visitors will be able to enjoy a wide-ranging view of life in this community, ranging from Indian teepees to a special preview of the year 2000.

Although the village of North Bend consists of only 564 people, each of them recognizes the value of coming together to celebrate a common history. North Bend is a unique example of a small community dedicated to preserving and honoring a special heritage that has endured for the past 200 years, and hopefully will exist for many hundreds of years into the future. I am pleased to be able to salute their efforts today, and to honor this important time in their history.

STUDENT DEMONSTRATIONS IN CHINA

HON. GEORGE J. HOCHBRUECKNER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. HOCHBRUECKNER. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Philip Goldstein, an outstanding citizen of my district, suggested that a Congressional Medal of Honor be awarded to a student demonstrator in Beijing, China. After researching his worthwhile idea, I have learned that the Congressional Medal of Honor cannot be given to foreign students. in the same spirit, I offer a short statement concerning the importance of the protests.

The recent student demonstrations in Beijing, China, have revealed the extent to which the Chinese people are monitored and controlled by their government. However, the events in Tiananmen Square prove that the desire for personal liberty is too strong to be completely repressed.

The television camera served to bring countless images back from the demonstrations in Beijing. I watched as the Chinese students made tremendous sacrifices for what they believed. Although I saw many images on the television one particular episode made an unforgettable impression, which inspired Mr. Goldstein's suggestion. A young man stood in front of a slow moving column of tanks and raised his hand signalling for the caravan to halt. In fact, the tanks nearly killed the student as they came to a stop right before the brave protestor.

This dramatic incident took place near the Beijing Hotel, home to foreign correspondents, insuring that the eyes of the world would be open. The results serves as a poignant reminder that freedom must be fought for and cherished. Many of the students and citizens who demonstrated are now dead; some died during the protest and others were later rounded up and executed. The protest reaffirmed the notion that one person can make a difference, in particular, the young man who stood up in front of the tank.

I support President Bush's actions toward China. In addition, I support providing all Chinese citizens in the United States the opportunity to extend their visas and stay in this country if necessary. Mr. Speaker, Philip Goldstein has recognized, as we must, that the young man who bravely blocked the tank was a signal that United States must heed in order to remain a beacon of freedom and democracy.

COLUMBUS SCHOOL FOR GIRLS AND PRAIRIE LINCOLN ELEMENTARY SCHOOL PARTICIPATE IN THE NEED PROJECT

HON. CHALMERS P. WYLIE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to recognize the Columbus School for Girls [CSG] and Prairie Lincoln Elementary School's participation in the National Energy Education Development [NEED] project. The Columbus School for Girls won the State of Ohio's junior level competition for NEED projects and Prairie Lincoln won the State's elementary level award.

NEED was first established in March 1980 by a joint congressional resolution with a 10-year goal to establish a national energy education networking organization. Presently 38 States have NEED committees and operate through approximately 140 regional committees to bring programs and services to a total school membership of 4,000.

The Columbus School for Girls and Prairie Lincoln Elementary School have become active participants in the NEED project. CSG undertook a variety of activities designed to promote energy education. Among these were: an energy scavenger hunt; energy carnival and a play titled "The Energy Mystery Files." The school's science club initiated a schoolwide recycling program and over 14,000 aluminum cans were collected which were donated to the Columbus Zoo.

At Prairie Lincoln Elementary School students decided the best way to accomplish their goal was to become energy educators. They developed a different energy lesson for each grade level. The lessons ranged from acid rain, recycling and various energy sources. A play about solar energy was created and fifth-graders played "Wheel of Energy."

At both schools students and faculty increased their knowledge of energy and its importance to our planet's future while furthering the goals of the NEED project. I want to commend all the students and teachers who participated in these activities for their parts in furthering energy education in our country.

THE 25TH ANNIVERSARY OF FERNWOOD

HON. FREDERICK S. UPTON

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, today, I rise in celebration of the 25th anniversary of the Fernwood Nature Center and Botanic Garden in Niles, MI. Coinciding with this silver anniversary event is the equally momentous grand opening of Mary Plym Visitors Center.

Fernwood is a special place where people can go to learn about their environment. It is a sanctuary on the banks of the St. Joseph River where families and individuals can discover and explore the secret beauties of our environs. One can stroll the winding pathways past nearby springs and ponds or attend special events and informational programs.

The completion of a new visitors center and educational facility on the 25th anniversary of the founding of this nature preserve gives cause for quite a celebration. These improvements will nurture the preservation and knowledge of the environment in southwestern Michigan for years to come.

The achievements of Fernwood Nature Center under its capable management is even more remarkable when one considers that Fernwood is supported almost entirely by private donations and patrons. The contributions of Fernwood to our environment, as well as the example it sets for similar voluntary organizations, should not go unnoticed by the Congress or the people of the United States.

NEUROSCIENCE CENTER IN DOD AUTHORIZATION—FISCAL YEAR 1990

HON. WILLIAM L. DICKINSON

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, during last week's consideration of the Defense authorization bill for fiscal year 1990 (H.R. 2461), an en bloc amendment was approved which contained numerous noncontroversial amendments.

Due to the fact that only 1 hour of total debate time was allowed for all amendments within the en bloc, an explanation of each amendment was impossible.

In order to lay out the legislative intent and an understanding of one amendment, in particular, the Fascell amendment, for a research and training facility for head, neck, and spinal cord injuries, I offer this explanation.

The Fascell amendment earmarks $18 million for a collaborative research and training facility for military medical personnel for head, neck, and spinal cord injuries. The financial contribution of the Federal Government to this collaborative center will not exceed 33 percent of the total cost of the project.

The Department of Defense expressed reservations about the amendment, because it earmarks funds from previously approved projects and did not incorporate recommendations from the Secretary of Defense. Another contributing factor to their reservation was the lack of language which specifies that this contract would be a fully competed bid.

Mr. FASCELL and I discussed these concerns, but in all the confusion on the floor, were unable to engage in an explanatory colloquy. We discussed the purpose of the center and the need for more research and training in the area of neuroscience, and we agreed that the contract or grant would be a fully competitive bid in terms of the site and the institution.

HONORING THE CALVIN COOLIDGE COMMEMORATIVE SOCIETY DISTINGUISHED CITIZEN AWARD RECIPIENT, ROBERT DEAN STETHEM

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Robert Stethem, a young man whose bravery, selflessness and determination deserve the respect and recognition of all of us. Every year the Calvin Coolidge Commemorative Society presents its Distinguished Citizen Award to "a distinguished American who most exemplifies and demonstrates the unselfish service and humanitarian principles upon which this Nation was founded." This year, the society has chosen to posthumously honor Robert Stethem.

I can think of no other person more appropriate to receive this award than Mr. Stethem. The 23-year-old Navy diver from Waldorf, MD bravely died at the hands of Shi'ite Moslem hijackers aboard TWA flight 847 out of Athens in 1985. His heroism and dedication to his country and his fellow travelers in those last perilous hours are an inspiration to us all and exemplifies the spirit of the award with which he is to be honored.

Robert Stethem graduated from the Thomas Stone High School in 1980, where he played defensive back on the football team and was active in student government. He is remembered by his classmates and teachers as a bright, open-minded and polite student. Six months after graduating, eager to serve his country, he enlisted in the U.S. Navy. He trained for several years and then joined an underwater construction team in Norfolk, VA. At the time of his death, he was a Navy steelworker 2d class and was rated as a diver.

The sixth annual Calvin Coolidge celebration is scheduled to begin on August 6. Richard and Patricia Stethem, Robert's parents, will accept the award during a dinner, the final event of the weeklong celebration, on August 12. The guest speaker at the dinner will be H. Lawrence Garrett III, the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. Speaker, Robert Dean Stethem is a hero in the highest tradition, and his memory, his courage and his heroism, will stay with us through the ages. I join my friends at the Calvin Coolidge Society in saluting him as he is posthumously awarded the Distinguished Citizen Award.

TRIBUTE TO THE CALIFORNIA HIGHWAY PATROL

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise today to recognize the leadership and dedication of the California Highway Patrol. On the occasion of the 60th anniversary of the CHP, I feel it is appropriate to commend those who have contributed to the growth and strength of this organization.

In 1929, legislation went into effect revolutionizing and reorganizing the traffic system by eliminating all the old county squads and putting all the men into a new organization to be known as the California Highway Patrol. Over the last 60 years, the CHP has made some significant, positive changes in their equipment, uniforms, training schools, and car specifications; and with these changes, it has managed to mature and grow professionally.

The dedication of the CHP is exemplified through the many accomplishments they have made in the community and throughout the State. The list of accomplishments that the patrol has achieved are endless, but I would be remiss if I did not highlight a few. [MISTER], the Management Information System of Terminal Evaluation Records, a computerized data base designed to monitor the overall safety performance of motor carriers; the reduction of accidents through the use of radar; the "Batmobile," a mobile blood alcohol testing van; and the growth of the Highway Patrol's Air Operations.

Mr. Speaker, it is a distinct honor to offer my commendations to all those who have dedicated themselves to the safety of the people in our community and the entire State. I salute them for a job well done and I ask that my colleagues join me in offering the California Highway Patrol congratulations on 60 years of outstanding service and best wishes in all of its future endeavors.

INTRODUCING THE WORLD UNIVERSITY GAMES COMMEMORATIVE COIN AND MEDAL ACTS

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE, M.C.

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation authorizing the Treasury to strike a coin or medal to commemorate the World University games, which will be held in Buffalo in July of 1993. The World University games are second in importance only to the Olympics in international amateur athletic competition, and are expected to draw the participation of 121 nations and over 7,000 athletes. This will be the first time that the games will be held in the United States.

Legislation to strike a coin or medal is important not only to commemorate this historic event, but also to raise money to support this kind of international amateur athletic competition. The proceeds from the coin or medal will go to support local or community amateur athletic programs, to erect facilities for the use of amateur athletes, and to underwrite the cost of sponsoring the World University games.

A CENTURY OF EXCELLENCE

HON. JOE KOLTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. KOLTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Slippery Rock University which is celebrating a Century of Excellence.

One hundred years ago, a small group of citizens in Centerville, PA, formed the Slippery Rock State Normal School Association with the expressed intent of raising funds to build a school of higher education for the youth of the region. They acquired land, erected buildings, appointed an administrator, approved a faculty and laid a foundation upon which the future development of the school would proceed. In March 1989, the doors of Slippery Rock Normal School were opened to 168 young men and women seeking an education.

To quote Slippery Rock University President Robert N. Aebersold:

From this well laid foundation the future of the school would proceed, bringing unparalleled changes and opportunities to thousands. In their wildest dreams, the founders could not have imagined that they would begin a tradition of excellence that would become known throughout the country and cherished in the hearts of thirty thousand alumni. What has not changed is the premise on which the university was founded and still stands * * * to furnish the means of acquiring knowledge. The university exists to generate ideas, to create new horizons and to apply our knowledge and insights to enhance the human spirit and improve the human condition.

March 29, 1989, officially marked the opening of Slippery Rock University's centennial year and the launching of a second century of excellence. That a university of this caliber exists within the Fourth Congressional District is a real source of pride to me and I very enthusiastically request that my colleagues join with me in extending to the Slippery Rock University faculty, students, alumni and towns people of Slippery Rock, PA, our congratulations and sincere best wishes for an outstanding second century.

RELIGIOUS LEADERSHIP AND DRUG ABUSE RECOGNITION WEEKEND

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, the National Household Survey, released this week by the National Institute on Drug Abuse, indicates that 72.4 million Americans, aged 12 and above have tried an illicit drug. The overall level of drug use continues at an alarming rate. Moreover, we hear of growing numbers of infants, suffering the effects of drugs used by their mother during her pregnancy. Every possible avenue must be employed to reach every man, woman, and child with the message that drug use is—plain and simple—dangerous.

For that reason I am intoducing the following resolution. It designates October 20 through October 22, 1989, as "Religious Leadership and Drug Abuse Recognition Weekend."

We need the active involvement of all segments of the community in our antidrug efforts. The participation of the religious community, as the moral backbone of society, is especially critical. Therefore, we are asking the President to call on religious leaders and their congregations to observe the weekend of October 20 through 22 by engaging in discussions and activities directed at increasing awareness of the dangers of abuse and preventing drug abusing behavior.

In introducing this resolution I have been joined by select committee members ORTIZ, FAUNTROY, GUARINI, SCHEUER, TOWNS, COLLINS, SHAYS, and PAXON. I would urge you to join us as cosponsors. We would welcome your support.

THE HUNTER PROTECTION ACT OF 1989

HON. RON MARLENEE

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Speaker, today 47 of my colleagues are joining with me in introducing the Hunter Protection Act of 1989 to prevent antihunting activists from disrupting lawful hunts on Federal lands.

America's cherished system of hunting, long admired by people throughout the world, is being seriously threatened by the tactics of a small, but well-organized group of increasingly militant antihunting activities.

From sabotaging desert bighorn sheep hunts on Federal lands in California to unrelenting efforts to disrupt deer hunting on Federal wildlife refuges in New Jersey, the antihunting activists have continued their assaults on the American tradition of hunting.

Because of the dramatic increase in the numbers and nature of these well orchestrated attacks against hunters, 34 States have enacted laws outlawing deliberate acts that disrupt lawful hunts.

Unfortunately, much more remains to be done to reverse these alarming trends. The Federal Government, which owns more than one-third of the land in the United States, needs to protect hunters on Federal lands from the harassment of antihunting saboteurs.

As a result, I am today introducing the Hunter Protection Act of 1989, which is modeled after the best features of similar laws in more than 34 States. This legislation will make it illegal to interfere with lawful hunts and harass hunters pursuing their sport on Federal lands.

The 18 million licensed hunters in the United States have been the major financial supporters of wildlife conservation. Over the last 50 years hunters have contributed over $2.5 billion toward wildlife conservation through excise taxes, duck stamps, and license fees. This legislation will continue this tradition by contributing all moneys collected as fines to the North America Waterfowl Management Plan and the Pittman-Robertson Act. Both these programs acquire lands to protect wildlife habitat.

If you are interested in stemming the tide of harassment tactics against hunters on Federal lands, I encourage you to cosponsor the Hunter Protection Act.

BRIAN MONAHAN: THE EMBODIMENT OF AMERICAN IDEALS

HON. BRIAN J. DONNELLY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay a special tribute to an individual from Massachusetts that I believe deserves special recognition. I had the opportunity to meet and speak with Brian Monahan from Waltham, who is a page in the U.S. Senate.

Brian, only 15, greatly impressed me with his historical knowledge of Massachusetts and of the complete legislative process which usually takes years to understand. He is an excellent role model for other youngsters that might have a notion to serve the public.

Brian is a special young man, who had to push one obstacle out of his way, and he has successfully done so. Brian was born with a congenital defect in his left leg which has affected his ability to walk.

Upon his arrival to Washington, the local newspaper in Waltham profiled Brian and described him as an "avid student of history who can discuss Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's policies as easy as he described Charlemagne's efforts to reform and unify the Holy Roman Empire."

Brian should be saluted for his efforts and determination. I believe his desire to serve the public some day as an elected official will be fulfilled. We definitely have not seen the last of Brian Monahan here in Washington.

TRIBUTE TO KRISTIN HUXHOLD, AMERICA'S OUTSTANDING YOUNG WOMAN OF 1989

HON. JACK BUECHNER

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. BUECHNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize a young woman who has achieved an honor which only a select few have accomplished. Miss Kristin Huxhold of Kirkwood, MO, was recently named America's Outstanding Young Woman of the Year in the competition formerly called America's Junior Miss. The idea of the competition is to select the one young lady who best encompasses all the finest traits of America's youth. To be named America's Outstanding Young Woman goes beyond the mere recognition of excellence; it is to achieve the standard by which excellence can and will be judged. In this Kristin was certainly deserving.

In her 4 years at Kirkwood High, Kristin compiled quite an impressive record. In addition to consistently being on the school's honor roll, she was a member of the National Honor Society, the pom-pom squad, and sang a cappella in the school choir. Kristin also played the lead in Kirkwood High's stellar production of West Side Story.

This coming fall, Kristin will be attending the University of Illinois on the partial scholarship of $30,000 she received from winning the Young Woman of the Year contest. During her study at Illinois, Kristin plans to pursue her ultimate dream—to become a professional vocal performer. In light of her past achievements, I am certain that she will prove successful in this and all future endeavors.

Aside from Kristin's personal achievements, I think that it is most fitting to examine what she truly symbolizes—the vitality, spirit, and hope of our country's younger generations. In a world filled with hatred, fear, and insecurity, it is refreshing to watch our youth—the future of this Nation—asserting the determination and leadership that will guide this country on the path to peace and prosperity into the 21st century. So Mr. Speaker, I ask this assembly to join me in saluting Kristin, who epitomizes the excellence that is American youth.

THE FISH AND FISH PRODUCTS SAFETY ACT OF 1989

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, today, together with my colleague, Congressman HENRY WAXMAN, I am introducing the Fish and Fish Products Safety Act of 1989, a bill to strengthen and increase the current authority of the Food and Drug Administration to inspect fish and fish products to ensure their wholesomeness and to protect the public from chemical and microbial contamination, toxins and parasites.

This bill responds to public concern over the perceived safety of fish and shellfish and to industry's needs for fair regulation which will protect their markets.

At a time when Americans look increasingly to fish in preference to meat and poultry, we need to know that the safety and quality of fish and fish products is ensured. This legislation will mean that fish and shellfish harvested from contaminated waters cannot be sold, and that once harvested, fish are handled in a sanitary fashion. U.S. producers will know that imported fish and fish products are inspected for safety and quality, and that their own products, produced in compliance with the provisions of this bill, will be increasingly acceptable to local and overseas consumers.

The FDA has always had authority over food safety in general, and over fish inspection in particular. The agency has recognized its increased responsibilities in this regard, and the Congress has increased the FDA appropriations for fiscal year 1990 by almost $13 million.

The Fish and Fish Products Safety Act provides the FDA with the authority and guidance the agency will need to implement an effective and efficient fish and fish products inspection program. The agency has a good working relationship with the National Marine Fisheries Service in this area, and I intend to work with my colleagues on the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries to ensure that this continues.

This is an important piece of legislation, and it will be a top priority for the Committee on Energy and Commerce. I look to my colleagues to join with me in support of this bill.

FISH AND FISH PRODUCTS SAFETY ACT

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with the distinguished chairman of the Energy and Commerce Committee, Mr. DINGELL, in introducing H.R. 3155, the Fish and Fish Products Safety Act of 1989. When implemented, this important legislation will provide much needed assurances to the American public that fish and fish products are safe to eat.

The bill requires the Food and Drug Administration [FDA] to establish standards for the regulation of chemical and microbiological contaminants, parasites and toxins which may occur in fish and fish products. These new standards will be set to assure that these potentially hazardous contaminants, parasites and toxins do not occur at levels which make fish and fish products unsafe to consume. The FDA also will set standards for sanitation and quality control for the processing of fish and fish products, and establish an official mark that would signify that the fish and fish products have been processed in accordance with government standards. To determine whether these standards are being met, the FDA will implement a regular monitoring program which will monitor fish and fish products at all stages of harvesting and processing.

In addition, the bill creates a registration and inspection program in the FDA for all processing facilities and importers of fish and fish products. Last, the bill would require all imported fish and fish products to be labeled with the country from which they are imported.

Mr. Speaker, the American public is not satisfied with our current level of enforcement regarding fish safety. There is good reason for their lack of confidence.

While FDA is currently responsible for regulating fish and fish products, including seizing adulterated fish and fish products when they are not safe to eat, and while FDA is currently charged with implementing a voluntary fish inspection program, FDA simply is not doing enough. Current law does not give FDA sufficient authority to guarantee that fish are safe to consume. This bill will restore consumer confidence by giving FDA a mandate and the regulatory muscle to back it up.

Other bills have been introduced to establish mandatory fish inspection programs in other agencies of government. There is no question that the FDA is the proper agency to carry out such a progrm.

The FDA currently is responsible for the safety of all food consumed in the United States with the exception of the meat and poultry inspection program administered by the Department of Agriculture. But even in the case of meat and poultry, the FDA plays a vital role. The FDA approves all animal drugs for use in animals and in animal feed and determines the residue levels of those animal drugs which may remain in edible animal tissue.

FDA has these important responsibilities for the safety of our food because they involve difficult and complex scientific questions. No other agency of government, including the USDA, has the capability to establish science based standards for fish.

Mr. Speaker, by some accounts including those of the National Fisheries Institute, as many as 15 percent of American consumers have stopped buying fish because of concerns over potential health effects. This bill, by establishing safety standards for contaminants and a rigorous and comprehensive inspection system, will restore the confidence of American consumers by assuring the safety of fish and fish products.

I urge all members to join us in cosponsoring this important legislation.

A CAPITOL RECYCLING PROGRAM

HON. JAMES A. HAYES

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. HAYES of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to present House Concurrent Resolution 188, to require the Architect of the Capitol to conduct a study, including a pilot program, for recycling materials disposed of in the Capitol.

Our Nation is currently faced with a critical solid waste disposal problem. For years, the United States had ample space to landfill nearly all its waste. But in the very near future, more than one-third of our landfills will have reached capacity, and others will close because of the severe environmental damage they pose. More efficient, environmentally sound options—like recycling—must be pursued.

Both the Environmental Protection Agency [EPA] and the Office of Technology Assessment [OTA] have established a solid waste hierarchy which includes recycling. Recycling is a positive and constructive answer to the solid waste dilemma. Recycling simultaneously improves utilization of existing resources while decreasing the demand for new materials. And it is environmentally sound.

There are currently a number of bills pending in Congress to reauthorize RCRA. Various solutions include increased reliance on recycling. But before Congress can credibly mandate waste separation and recycling, Congress itself needs to experiment with recycling mechanisms. Experience gained will give Members of Congress the knowledge needed to mandate comprehensive solutions to solid waste disposal problems.

It is time for the Capitol to be a leader for putting into practice what it has been endorsing. In addition to serving as an example for our constituencies to follow, the pilot project required under House Concurrent Resolution 188 could be a useful demonstration for other segments of the Federal Government.

In examining the solid waste situation, it is important to realize that blanket bans of specific packaging materials, which have been proposed in the Senate, can be counterproductive to solving solid waste management needs. When one material is prohibited, it is replaced with other materials that bring environmental and disposal problems of their own.

Recycling is a positive alternative. Communities of all sizes across the country are utilizing recycling with great success. With this resolution, my objective is to include participation of at least one of the House office buildings and one of the Senate office buildings in the demonstration project. Recycling can and will work, and it is time for Congress to take the lead in making it work. House Concurrent Resolution 188 takes the preliminary step toward making recycling a way of life on Capitol Hill. I urge my colleagues to support this important initiative.

MENTAL ILLNESS AWARENESS WEEK

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of over 230 of my colleagues and myself, I introduced House Joint Resolution 164, to authorize the President to designate the week of October 1–7, 1989, "Mental Illness Awareness Week."

The purpose of this joint resolution is to focus public attention on concerns surrounding, and the advances made in, the treatment of mental illness. A "Mental Illness Awareness Week" resolution has been introduced, passed, and proclaimed for the past 7 years. Its purpose has been and is to educate the public that no one needs to live with the problems such as debilitating anxiety, panic, phobias, depression, or schizophrenia.

In any 6 months period, 30 million adults and 2 to 10 million children suffer from mental disorders. This includes 1.5 million Americans suffering with schizophrenia, and 9 to 16 million diagnosed with manic-depression, depression, or other depressive disorders. Nearly one-fourth of the elderly who are diagnosed as "senile" actually suffer from a curable mental illness. Additionally, nearly two-thirds of the AIDS patients in the United States will show symptoms of dementia before they die.

Mental illness is an increasingly curable disease. The Institute of Medicine of the National Academy of Sciences states that the personal and social costs of mental illness, alcoholism, and substance abuse disorders are comparable to those of heart disease or cancer. Appropriate treatment of mental illness has been demonstrated to be cost-effective in terms of restored productivity, reduced utilization of health services, and lessened social dependence.

Recovery from mental illness is a reality. Nine of 10 patients suffering from major depression or anxiety can recover; 7 of 10 suffering from manic depression can return to normal lives; 5 of 10 with schizophrenia can improve and 1 in 4 can recover. Much of the progress in treatment can be attributed to major advances in clinical research in psychiatry. Research projects supported by the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration have made great strides in numerous areas.

The inspiration for "Mental Illness Awareness Week" comes from such groups as the American Psychiatric Association and the National Alliance for the Mentally Ill. The APA members conduct research and provide treatment necessary for those suffering from mental illnesses. The alliance, which was formed in 1979 for families with a mentally-ill member, supports education, advocacy, and research in the mental health field.

Few diseases have the potential which mental illness does to disrupt the lives of both its sufferers and their family and friends. And no other disease carries such a stigma. This nationwide effort was implemented to draw attention to the burden felt by the family and friends of those suffering from mental illness. Only through an increased understanding of the causes and the treatment programs available for this disease will the fear and ignorance surrounding mental illness be done away with.

"Mental Illness Awareness Week" provides us with the dual opportunity to reach out and help fellow Americans increase their understanding of this disease and help those afflicted with mental illness seek timely and appropriate care. Mental illness is worthy of our attention. I thank my colleagues for their support of this important resolution.

THE DISASTER ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1989

HON. BILL SCHUETTE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. SCHUETTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a few words about the disaster assistance bill. The House today agreed to a compromise version worked out between the House and Senate Agriculture Committees. This very important legislation comes none too soon. Too often during the 1980's Michigan's farmers have been hit with natural disaster. In 1986 it was flood, in 1988 it was drought, and now again in 1989 it's flood and related conditions from the excessive moisture that hit much of the State in early summer. Potato and cherry producers in some areas of Michigan have been especially hard hit by the heavy rains, and this bill offers assistance to those farmers.

It is not too much to ask that the Federal Government step in and give some assistance when producers are faced with devastating financial loss due to no fault of their own. I certainly support the 1989 disaster bill.

I am very pleased that the Senate Agriculture Committee agreed to accept the disaster bill passed by the House. I only hope that the Senate will act quickly now in order to have a bill ready for the President's signature before the congressional August recess.

The disaster assistance bill as written by the House and agreed to by the two Agriculture Committees will provide assistance to producers who suffer heavy yield losses as a result of damaging weather or related conditions. Both program and nonprogram crops are covered.

Producers of program crops who participate in the program and who have Federal crop insurance who suffer losses of 35 percent will be eligible for payments based on 65 percent of the target price for the crop. Program participants who do not have crop insurance will be eligible for payments equal to 65 percent of the target price for losses above 40 percent. Soybean and sunflower producers with losses over 45 percent will be eligible for disaster payments equal to 65 percent of the average market price during the previous 5 years.

Producers of nonprogram crops who suffer losses of at least 50 percent will be eligible for payments equal to 65 percent of the average market price during the previous 5 years for that commodity. Producers of program crops who do not participate in the program will be eligible for losses over 50 percent with a payment rate of 65 percent of loan. There are also provisions for loss of orchard trees and Christmas trees due to freeze.

Just as in the 1988 Disaster Act, producers who receive disaster assistance payments for losses over 65 percent will be required to buy Federal crop insurance for 1990, if available in their county. No producers may receive more than $50,000 in disaster payments for crop loss, and no more than $90,000 in crop loss and emergency livestock assistance payments.

ROBERT J. SMITH HONORED

HON. FRANK J. GUARINI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, on September 19, 1989, the United Way of Hudson County will hold a luncheon honoring Mr. Robert J. Smith for his 36 years of outstanding volunteer service.

Throughout his career with the Joseph T. Ryerson Steel Co., Bob has been a devoted community leader. Through his association with Ryerson Steel, the United Way, the Boys Club, the Woodbridge Township Council, and the Woodbridge Board of Education, Bob has worked tirelessly to help his neighbors, improve his community, and give less fortunate people a chance to succeed.

In 1972, Bob played a major role in uniting nine Hudson County communities into a single organization, the United Way of Hudson County.

As the organization grew, Bob developed plans for the facilities that house the United Way today. He was also instrumental in raising hundreds of thousands of dollars for the United Way, the Boys Club, and many other local community groups.

Bob dedicated himself to improving community services. He gave great support to the Red Cross Chapters of Hudson County and Bayonne, N.J. He also helped the Retired Senior Volunteer Program train hundreds of men and women who volunteered thousands of hours to community agencies, hospitals, and libraries.

One of Bob's most important contributions to Hudson County's United Way was his continued effort to expand its membership. With his assistance, North Hudson Community Action, the Urban League, Franciscan Aids Initiative to Help, and the Alzheimers Adult Day Care Program of the Jewish Home and Rehabilitation Center all joined under the United Way umbrella.

Bob was born and raised in Jersey City. He attended Sacred Heart Grammar School and Henry Snyder High School. He then studied at St. Peter's College and Seton Hall University. Bob served in the U.S. Army Infantry in the South Pacific from 1943–46.

Bob was married in 1949 to Theresa Donohue. He and his wife have 7 children and 15 grandchildren.

Some of the many community leaders who serve with Bob Smith include:

COMMUNITY LEADERS

President, Charles Hawkins, Sec./Treas. Ret. Colgate Union; Vice Presidents, Robert Burstein, Handler & Burstein; Archie Douglas, Deputy Director MOTBY; James Feely, President of Provident Savings Bank; Janet Haynes, Director of Central Service for Hudson County; Norman LaGueux, Director of Hudson Resident Service, NJ Bell; Gloria Esposito, President, Commerce Helpmates Emp. Ralph Stocker, Commanding Officer, MOTBY; Samuel Wolgemuth, General Manager, Murdoch Magazines; William Wolverton, EVP, UJB/Commercial Trust.

Bob Smith's tireless efforts touched the lives of thousands of New Jersey residents. I am certain that my colleagues here in the House of Representatives will join me in saluting Bob Smith and the United Way of Hudson County.

JUDGE LAURENCE RITTENBAND

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Judge Laurence Rittenband, who is retiring after 29 years on the bench. During his tenure as a superior court judge, he has earned the respect of both prosecutors and defense attorneys. Although he has a reputation for being tough on defendants, the attorneys who have come before him unfailingly recognize his ability to get at the truth. He is, as one attorney described him, "the type of judge they don't make anymore." Judge Rittenband is my friend and a very special and competent jurist and human being.

The Los Angeles Times recently carried an article about Judge Rittenband's distinguished and fascinating years on the bench. I ask that it be reprinted at this point, and commend it to my colleagues' attention.

[From the Los Angeles Times, July 2, 1989]

THE JUDGE: RITTENBAND QUITS BENCH AT 83, BUT HIS LAST DAY IS ANYTHING BUT DULL

(By Mathis Chazanov)

Superior Court Judge Laurence J. Rittenband is leaving the bench at age 83, but not because he has lost any of his punch.

"What a lot of nonsense," he growled at a lawyer's inept defense the other day. "Put your client on the stand. I'll ask the questions. In 20 years on the bench that's the most laughable thing I've ever heard."

When the lawyer persisted, the white-haired Rittenband raised his voice. "You're wasting my time," he said.

"I wouldn't waste your time, your honor," said the lawyer.

"That's what you're doing!"

Prosecutors sing his praises; some defense attorneys have their doubts. But fans and detractors alike say that he is still one of the sharpest judges around.

OCCASIONAL TRIALS

The beetle-browed jurist is not hanging up his robe, despite his years. He will hear occasional trials at the busy Santa Monica Courthouse and decide other cases as a privately paid "rent-a-judge".

But for the first time in 28 years, the man known as "The Judge" since age 10 will no longer hold that job on a full-time basis.

"He's a man who doesn't pussyfoot around. He cuts through the b.s. with a quick rake," said Ronald H. Carroll, head of the district attorney's bureau at the Santa Monica Courthouse.

"One of the first trials I ever did before him was an embezzlement case," recalled Ed Gilmore, head of the public defender's office in the Santa Monica Courthouse.

"We had it won," Gilmore said. He said his client "told a good story" and survived the prosecutor's cross-examination. But then, "Judge Rittenband asked him three questions that had gotten by the prosecutor and it was all over. Things like that you don't forget easily."

"He was always respectful toward me even if he thought my client was guilty," said Ron Rose, a deputy public defender. "He . . . enjoyed the challenge of pushing the attorneys and seeing how they'd respond. He's the type of judge they don't make anymore."

Hooray for that, said other lawyers who declined to comment for publication. That reluctance "should let you know what kind of man he is," one said.

But Richard Chier, an attorney who tangled with the judge during the Billionaire Boys Club murder trial in 1987, called him a "gouty old bully."

"He scowled at your client when your client was testifying," he said. "He would say things like, 'Oh, I'd accept their testimony with a grain of salt.' "

Paul Fitzgerald, another defense attorney, called the judge "enormously bright" and credited him for loving his work.

But he said Rittenband would often "grimace and telegraph his emotions" if he thought testimony was preposterous.

"You started with three strikes against him [a defendant] and if you could just get struck out without getting hit in the head, you were lucky," Fitzgerald said.

Rittenband will have none of it. "I've had the reputation of being very tough on defendants," he said. "I will add that they deserved it. If they mean . . . that I don't coddle them, then its true.

"I always diligently try to be impartial and unprejudiced, but once they'd been convicted I was tough on them."

Born in New York on Christmas Day, Rittenband walked into the public library at age 10 and asked for help in reaching his goals—becoming a lawyer and then a judge.

The librarian recommended a reading list that started with the Code of Hammurabi, a set of Babylonian laws noted for their severity but also seen as an improvement over the barbarism of earlier antiquity.

It was "strict but fair," Rittenband recalls, adding that the 4,000-year-old code was "as apt then as it [would be] today."

Graduating from Stuyvesant High School at age 15, he took a job in a law firm and went to law school at New York University by night. He was on the law review and president of the senior class, graduating at 19 only to find that he was too young to practice.

"Then I got bitten by the intellectual bug. I decided to go to Harvard," he said.

It wasn't easy getting in; taking the entrance exam four years after leaving high school, he failed trigonometry, a subject he never studied.

"I was admitted on probation, but I got all A's so they took me off probation," Rittenband said.

QUOTED FROM SHAKESPEARE

He graduated magna cum laude in three years, winning admission to Phi Beta Kappa, an achievement that still makes him feel good 60 years later.

The Harvard diploma hangs on the wall of his chambers near a toy owl dressed in a miniature black robe.

"It was one of the greatest experiences of my life—so far," the judge said. Remembering his studies of English literature, he quoted from Shakespeare about "my salad days, when I was green," and identified the source ["Antony and Cleopatra," Act I, Scene 5].

Finally old enough to take the bar exam, he returned to his old firm, going on to become a federal prosecutor for bankruptcy and fraud cases. He eventually launched a private practice in New York, but interrupted it after the outbreak of World War II to join the Army Air Corps as an intelligence officer.

Commissioned a lieutenant, Rittenband was injured when he fell into a trench during a nighttime air raid on his base in Algeria. He was hospitalized in Massachusetts and reassigned to a supply base in California, where he was discharged in 1947 with the rank of major.

"It was very delightful," he said. "I liked the climate when I was here during the war and decided I would stay."

It was also in 1947 that the young lawyer joined the Hillcrest Country Club, a Westside enclave where he still goes for lunch every day.

"Hello, dearie," he greets old friends there, shaking hands with the likes of Marvin Davis and George Burns.

Burns hasn't forgotten the time Rittenband represented a former associate and cost him $40,000 in a dispute over royalties. Despite that, "if he's in trouble, I'd help him," the entertainer said.

SECOND HOME

Never married, Rittenband has made the club a second home. He lives around the corner in Century City. He played tennis there until his middle 70s and golf until last year.

Rittenband credits the Hillcrest connection for his introduction to Gov. Edmund G. (Pat) Brown, who appointed him to the Los Angeles Municipal Court in 1961 despite his Republican political affiliation.

He was named to the Superior Court bench in 1962 and moved to the West branch, which covers much of the Westside, in 1968. He has stayed there ever since.

My only regret is that I never married and had children," he said. "During the years I met a number of lovely women that I should have married, but I didn't feel myself worthy of them."

Then he laughed and added that he has been seeing at least one of those women for the last 40 years. "She doesn't want to marry me," he said. "She's very bright. We lead a much better life this way."

HIGH-PROFILE CASES

During the last 21 years in Santa Monica he has heard dozens of high-profile cases. He also won respect among attorneys and other judges because he did not restrict himself to criminal trials but also set aside Fridays to rule on often-thorny questions of civil law.

"He brooked no nonsense in his court," said Robert H. Philibosian, the former district attorney now in private practice. He was assigned to Rittenband's court as a young prosecutor.

The two were prominently featured in crime magazines because of a gruesome murder trial in 1972, when defendant Karl Lionel Kearney justified two killings by dismissing the victims as "just an old bag and an old bum."

"The defendant has exhibited no redeemable virtue which might inspire in anyone any compassion for him," the judge said when he pronounced the death sentence. "He himself showed none to his victims."

Philibosian also remembers the day that mass murderer Charles Manson appeared in Rittenband's courtroom.

"Manson came in and he turned his back on Judge Rittenband and said, 'I'm not going to face this court.'" Philibosian recalled. "He was there with his female followers, and Rittenband very calmly, very coolly but very firmly said, 'I will not proceed unless you face this court. You will turn around now.' And Manson turned around. It was almost as if he were hearing the word of a very much higher authority, and he did it."

In addition to the Billionaire Boys Club two years ago, his other famous trials included those of Frederick Jerome Thomas, the killer of newswoman Sarai Ribicoff, the niece of a U.S. senator; of Scottish drifter Arthur Richard Jackson, whose prison term for his attack on actress Theresa Saldana was recently extended, and of film director Roman Polanski, who fled the country rather than serve a jail term on a charge of illicit relations with a minor. He has also presided over a decade of litigation about rent control in Santa Monica.

"He's had a lot of interesting cases over the years," said Richard P. Byrne, presiding judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court. He said that some of those assignments were random, but that others were probably assigned to Rittenband because of his age and experience.

"Whenever you have a case that is complicated—and most of your high-publicity cases become complicated even if they're not, simply because everybody is looking at them—you want somebody who is experienced to do it, and he had the experience," Byrne said.

BEYOND RETIREMENT

Opting to stay on beyond the usual retirement age of 70 because "it would be difficult sitting at the country club playing bridge," Rittenband actually gave up his seat on Jan. 31, 1988.

But he stayed on until Friday under a provision for senior judges to help the overloaded courts deal with a flood of cases.

"I'd about had it," he said of his decision to give up his temporary position, known as "assignment" because such judges are assigned by the chief justice of the state Supreme Court.

"When you're on assignment you can't take vacation and get paid for it, so I would have to take time off without being paid for it, and I thought if that's going to happen, I might as well get paid," he said, referring to his pension.

But Rittenband did not go quietly. At a hearing Thursday morning, he listened to landlords' attorneys as they charged the city's Rent Control Board with violating an earlier order.

WITHHELD JUDGMENT

As Joel M. Levy, attorney for the board, began to make his case, Rittenband broke in and challenged him repeatedly, saying: "Didn't you understand this is precisely what I had in mind? . . . I don't care how you denominate it, the intent was that you not make determinations of excessive rent. We don't want you people to make these determinations and to penalize [property owners] . . . You have no business determining whether excess rent has been charged. That's for the courts. You are not supposed to do that."

Despite the firmness of his comments, however, the judge withheld judgment, giving both sides three weeks to come up with better arguments.

He said in an interview that he plans to hear as many cases as he can in the coming years.

"I've done all the traveling I want to do, and I've been active all my life," he said. "As long as I'm in good health, I'll keep it up."

AIDS AND THE HISPANIC COMMUNITY

HON. ALBERT G. BUSTAMANTE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. BUSTAMANTE. Mr. Speaker, the last few years have seen an alarming change in the demographics of acquired immune deficiency syndrome [AIDS] which should be of great concern to the Hispanic community. Whereas AIDS was once considered a disease of white homosexuals, Hispanics now account for more than 16 percent of all cases in the United States.

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome is an illness caused by the human immunodeficency virus [HIV] which attacks white blood cells, T lymphocytes. These cells protect our body against infection. The AIDS virus renders a person's body unable to fight illnesses which are usually not a threat to those whose immune systems are functioning normally. Individuals who are infected with the AIDS virus may or may not manifest any symptoms. However, all persons carrying HIV are capable of transmitting the virus to others. The virus is transferred sexually and by sharing needles with an infected person. In addition, an infected female may transmit the virus to her unborn child.

AIDS was first discovered in the United States in 1981. Since its diagnosis, approximately 85,000 AIDS cases have been reported with nearly 49,000 resulting in death. Some authorities predict that 450,000 people will be infected with the disease by the year 1993 and that this number will continue to increase. Furthermore, between 1 million and 1.5 million people are believed to be currently infected with HIV, although they have not developed AIDS.

Why are these facts particularly important to the Hispanic community? AIDS has disproportionately attacked Hispanics. According to the National Coalition of Hispanic Health and Human Services Organizations [COSSMHO], for every 100,000 Hispanics in the United States, 58.2 have AIDS compared to 21.5 of every 100,000 non-Hispanic individuals. Despite the fact that we compose only 8.1 percent of the U.S. population, Hispanics account for 16.5 percent of all AIDS cases. Moreover, Hispanic women make up 19 percent of all female AIDS cases. AIDS has also infected at least 300 teenagers of whom 17 percent are Hispanic, and of all infants with AIDS, 23 percent are Hispanic children.

Why has AIDS had a disproportionate impact upon the Hispanic community? According to Brenda Taylor-Hines, director of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, "there is a lot of resistance in the minority community to dealing with AIDS." Poverty, lack of education, machismo—that is hostility toward condoms, homophobia, and sexual taboos have contributed to the misunderstanding by much of the Hispanic community. Of all the Hispanic AIDS cases, 43 percent are linked to homosexual and bisexual behavior among men and 39 percent to intravenous [IV] drug use. Due to the large Hispanic population of IV heterosexual drug users, Hispanic women are 11 times more likely to be infected by HIV than non-Hispanic women. In States such as California, Florida, and Texas, nearly three out of every four Hispanic AIDS cases is related to homosexual and bisexual male behavior. Another important contributing factor is that some Hispanics perceive AIDS as the "I may get-if" disease; hence, they tend to ignore or deny the facts about AIDS.

What must we do to prevent this killer from further infesting our communities? The first step is to create an environment which promotes open discussion of AIDS between adults, parents and their children, and among the youth. Next, we must make the facts available and present them in a manner which does not raise inappropriate fears. We must also support Hispanic community-based organizations which promote education. Our strongest weapon against AIDS is understanding the disease and how it can be transmitted. We must encourage IV drug users to seek out rehabilitative treatment. We must also convince everyone to take a responsible and prudent approach to their sexual life. Our goal must be to let individuals know what places them at risk and to encourage them to change their behavior patterns accordingly.

The face of AIDS is changing. It is no longer white and male. It is becoming darker, less masculine, and younger. According to some authorities, AIDS may become a disease primarily among minorities unless we take appropriate action. We must teach our children about AIDS and about their sexuality. We must encourage them to be more responsible with their actions. We must acknowledge that AIDS is not a "white homosexual problem." It is very much our problem. We can save ourselves from the grip of this dreadful disease, but only if we are willing to educate ourselves and our children.

THE BICENTENNIAL OF THE U.S. COAST GUARD

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, today is a day to celebrate with fireworks, parades, pomp, and pageantry, for today begins the bicentennial year of the U.S. Coast Guard.

One hundred ninety-nine years ago, on a hot and muggy day much like today, the Congress created the Revenue Marine, which has developed into the modern Coast Guard. The Revenue Marine was the brainchild of Alexander Hamilton, a founding father of our country and the first Secretary of the Treasury.

Back then the mission was to prevent smuggling and enforce tariff laws. Smuggling had become a necessary and patriotic activity during the Revolutionary War, but it had no place in a newborn Nation struggling to cope with $80 million of debt. The country needed revenue, and Alexander Hamilton, as Secretary of the Treasury, knew that better than anyone.

He convinced the Congess to scrape up enough funds for "10 boats for the collection of revenue," and he set them up as a seagoing police force. Ten cutters on a 2,000-mile coast. Most men would shrink from those kind of odds, but Hamilton knew that the right crews would make it work. And because he didn't have sufficient funds to outfit the crews, he made it work by borrowing a little here and there.

The very first cutter set sail in 1791. It was built in Neburyport, MA, and was christened, most fittingly, the Massachusetts.

Lack of money made those early mariners a rag-tag bunch. They had no uniforms, they were outfitted with surplus weapons from the war, and they even had to make their own American flag. But they had gumption, and they were effective. In the face of tremendous adversity, they were remarkably successful.

Success in the face of adversity has been a hallmark of the Coast Guard ever since, and in that, today's Coast Guard doesn't differ from the Revenue Marine at all.

The difference today is in the breadth of the Coast Guard's mission. It's evolved into a dynamic, multi-mission service. There has been no lessening of the original law-enforcement mission, but to that mission has been added search and rescue, marine safety, icebreaking, aids to navigation, and a host of others that have been embraced with energy and dedication. The Coast Guard has also taken the lead in drug interdiction and oilspill response, the two foremost issues of the day.

We live in a world that is every bit as frightening, and more dangerous, than Alexander Hamilton's. Drugs are eating away at the soul of our country, our environment is abused by oilspills and ocean dumping, and political differences have increasingly made us the target of terrorist attack. The Coast Guard is the frontline of defense against all this. They're out patroling our shores, always ready to respond at a moment's notice to the latest threat.

I've heard some people call me the Godfather of the Coast Guard, and I take that to heart. I've been to every Coast Guard base around the world. I've probably talked to more admirals, officers, enlistees, reservists, and retirees than any Member of Congress, and I take great pride in the Coast Guard.

So I am happy to be able to share my pride in the Coast Guard, and I look forward to participating in the bicentennial celebrations over the upcoming year. I wish each and every Coast Guard member—past, present, and future, from the beaches of Alaska to the shores of the Gulf Coast—a happy 199th birthday, and a marvelous bicentennial year. Semper Paratus.

THE WAYS AND MEANS OF CAPITAL GAINS

HON. MICHAEL A. ANDREWS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, throughout most of the summer the congressional agenda has mirrored the Washington weather; long stretches of hot, muggy days punctuated by an occasional violent or spectacular storm. Capital gains taxation has taken the Committee on Ways and Means by storm and is at the eye of the most recent controversy swirling through Congress. The logic and powerful appeal of a capital gains rate in a free market economy is apparent from the fact that a majority of House Ways and Means members, 6 Democrats and 13 Republicans, supports the proposal of my colleague ED JENKINS for a temporary cut in the capital gains rate from 28 percent to 19.6 percent. Under the Jenkins proposal, when a taxpayer sells a family business, farm, corporate stock, timber, or real estate, he is taxed at a lower rate on the profit from that sale than under ordinary income rates.

The issue has been characterized by some in partisan terms. Opponents have charged that rate reduction would be unfair and would benefit only a small segment of taxpayers. As a Ways and Means Democrat, I believe a capital gains differential benefits all Americans. The real issues in the debate have nothing to do with privilege or partisanship.

The real issues are economic, and they are important: growth in America's productivity, strengthening our ability to compete for expanding world markets, and the creation of new jobs and opportunities for our workers.

For more than a generation Democrats and Republicans have understood that it makes good economic sense to provide incentives for those who place capital at risk as part of the effort to create a growing, dynamic, competitive American economy. In his 1963 message to Congress calling for a monumental tax reduction bill, President Kennedy asked for a maximum tax on capital gains of 19.6 percent on individuals and 22 percent on corporations. In words that ring true today, President Kennedy pointed out that the existing higher tax on capital gains was "both inequitable and a barrier to economic growth."

Over the years capital gains initiatives in Congress have benefited from strong bipartisan support. For example, in 1978 when the exclusion of capital gains from taxable income was raised from 50 percent to 60 percent, the initiative was not viewed as partisan. In fact it was led in the Senate by Democrats Russell Long and Alan Cranston as well as many Republicans.

Reduced taxation of capital gains has a proven record of success in helping to build a stronger, healthier American economy. Lower capital rates help encourage entrepreneurs to commit their resources to the newer, risky ventures that may fail, but, when successful, can produce the jobs and exports of the future. They will also provide a powerful incentive for savings and investment at precisely the time our economy most needs it. Countries that save less invest less—and gradually lose their ability to compete. Net United States savings averaged only 5.3 percent gross domestic product over the 1973–86 period compared to 10.3 percent in West Germany and 18.6 percent in Japan.

The capital cost of investment in new equipment is an important factor in any country's ability to compete, and restoration of a capital gains tax rate can help bring that cost down in America. Capital costs in this country are currently twice as high as in Japan and substantially higher than those in most other industrial nations.

Our foreign competitors have long recognized the important link between low capital gains taxation, economic growth, and international competitiveness. Most either do not tax capital gains at all or tax them only lightly. In our own country, the potential positive impact of reduced capital gains taxation can be enormous; one recent study suggests that a permanent reduction of the capital gains tax rate to 15 percent would lower the capital cost of investing in new equipment by 14 percent.

For 25 years Republicans and Democrats, in Congress and in the White House, have generally supported a capital gains tax rate and the American economy has benefited as a result. Recently, however, it has been suggested that a capital gains rate is unfair because a disproportionate share of the benefit would go to taxpayers earning over $200,000 a year. In fact, there are many more taxpayers with moderate incomes who realize capital gains than there are in the higher income brackets. Three-fourth of all tax returns with capital gains were reported by taxpayers with wage and salary income of less than $50,000, and nearly half of all capital gains dollars go to the people with incomes under $50,000.

For example, the 25-year-old person who buys a home or some capital stock and sells it 20 years later when inflation and growth has doubled its price, probably needs the money for a family obligation. Indexing and a capital gains rate are important to that average citizen.

Capital gains has unfortunately become a contentious issue, but on one point there is really no dispute: a lower capital gains rate is a proven stimulus to economic growth and job creation. It provides an engine of opportunity that benefits all Americans. In addition, it should be noted that our capital gains tax cut proposal is highly progressive. Most of the revenues gained from our proposed cut in capital gains will come from upper-income taxpayers, but most of the proceeds will be used for programs that benefit those with lower incomes: expansion of the earned income credit to assist child care, the low-income housing credit, employer-provided education assistance, targeted jobs tax credit, and health insurance for the self-employed.

Partisan politics really has no place in the debate over an economic issue as important as reducing the capital gains tax rate. The capital gains proposal supported by a majority in the Ways and Means Committee is not a Republican idea or a Democratic idea. It is an idea that makes sense for America, one that deserves the enthusiastic bipartisan support of a Congress united in a commitment to a more prosperous, competitive American economy that can provide jobs and opportunity for all our people.

DIFFICULT THOUGHTS ON HEALTH CARE

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, former Colorado Governor Richard Lamm is well known for his controversial stance on health care issues. I think all Members should consider the questions posed by Mr. Lamm in a recent article in the New York Times, which I wish to share with them:

[From the New York Times, August 2, 1989]

SAVING A FEW, SACRIFICING MANY—AT GREAT COST

(By Richard D. Lamm)

SAN FRANSCISCO.—The ancient Greeks observed that "to know all to ask is to know half." The cost of our inefficient health care system cannot continue to grow at more than twice the rate of inflation. Heretical questions must be asked.

"What chance is there that she will leave this unit alive?" The group of doctors look annoyed at my question. We were clustered around the bed of a 91-year-old woman in the intensive care unit of a university hospital. She had been in intensive care for two weeks, kept alive by a web of tubes and hoses. The attending physician swallowed her personal resentment. "Very small, but every once in a while someone survives," she said. "Medicine must do everything possible as long as there is a chance."

America has approximately 87,000 intensive care beds, far more than any other country. An intensive care bed is the most expensive medical setting possible, usually staffed by one to one and one-half nurses per bed and surrounded by hundreds of thousands of dollars of high-technology equipment. They do save some people who would have been previously lost, but at a very high cost. They are thus symbolic of both our caring and our priorities.

Once people get into the health care system, we will spend fantastic amounts exploring a small chance of survival for them, yet 31 million Americans do not have basic health insurance and 30 percent of the kids in America have never seen a dentist. We have seemingly unlimited resources for patients in the system but painfully few for citizens outside the system. Our health care spending is reactive and reflexive rather than reflective.

Thirteen percent of our patients, many of them terminal, account for more than 50 percent of our hospital costs, yet Medicaid covers only 40 percent of the people living in poverty and a million American families have one or more members denied health care yearly. Almost 60 percent of Medicare's inpatient expenditures is spent on 12 percent of the recipients, too often for marginal procedures.

In one corner of the hospital, we are squeezing a few more days of pain-racked existence out of people for whom there is clearly no happy outcome; yet 600,000 women gave birth last year with little or no prenatal care.

A hospital alarm goes off and the team rushes to resuscitate a man with prostate cancer. But an alarm has also gone off in our economy, and we ignore it at our peril.

We have among the lowest rates of investment in new plant and equipment in the industrialized world, yet there is a group of our brightest men and women using expensive Japanese machines and large amounts of our limited resources on frail bodies, many of whom everyone concedes will never leave this unit. On this day four of the 12 people in the unit have virtually no chance of leaving the hospital.

In practically every town in America, the best building is the hospital (40 percent empty) and the worst a school (usually overcrowded). The highest paid professionals are doctors; the lowest paid professionals are teachers. We are overtreating our sick and undereducating our kids. We spend more than other industrialized nations on health care, both in total dollars and percent of gross national product devoted to health care, yet we do not keep our citizens as healthy as they do.

The basic dilemma of American medicine is that we have invented more health care than we can afford to pay for, and yet we find it terribly hard to set priorities. We rush to rescue people in intensive care units today whom just yesterday we abandoned. We spend too much money on high-technology care for a few and too little on basic health care for the many.

There is a permanently unconscious woman in Washington, D.C., maintained on an artificial life support system who became comatose and vegetative in 1953. We have spent millions keeping her heart beating in a city whose infant-mortality rate exceeds that of many third world countries.

Health care in America has become a fiscal black hole that can absorb unlimited resources. We have the finest technological means in the world, but all too few are asking, "to what end?" But another alarm sounds in the hospital's intensive care unit, and we must be off on our mission of "mercy."

OLDER WORKERS BENEFIT PROTECTION ACT

HON. EDWARD R. ROYBAL

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that I believe is critical to the employment concerns of this Nation's older workers, the Older Workers Benefit Protection Act, H.R. 3200. This important legislation is necessary to protect older workers from arbitrary age discrimination in employee benefit plans. I am pleased to have my colleagues, Representatives HAWKINS, CLAY, MARTINEZ, and BILBRAY join me in this important endeavor.

I would also like to note that yesterday this legislation was introduced in the Senate by Senator PRYOR, chairman of the Senate Aging Committee, and Senators METZENBAUM, JEFFORDS, KENNEDY, DECONCINI, and BUMPERS.

The sole purpose of this legislation is to address the recent U.S. Supreme Court decision in Public Employees Retirement System of Ohio v. Betts, No. 88-389 (June 23, 1989), and to reassert Congress' original intent in enacting, in 1967, the Age Discrimination Employment Act [ADEA], the Federal law prohibiting age discrimination in the workplace.

In the Betts decision, the Court significantly limited the scope of the ADEA. The Court held that Congress intended the ADEA to have only very limited applicability to employee benefit plans. The effect of this decision is to essentially permit employers to freely discriminate against older workers in their health and retirement plans and other fringe benefit programs. The Court's view of the ADEA is contrary to what had been the accepted interpretation of the ADEA for the past 20 years, specifically, the interpretations of two Federal agencies and the five Federal circuit courts of appeals to consider this issue.

The legislation I am introducing today, the Older Workers Benefit Protection Act, will reinforce the intent of Congress when it passed the ADEA in 1967, that employers are prohibited from discriminating against older workers in employee benefit plans, except in very limited circumstances, and only when they have provided substantial justification for doing so.

I would like to provide some background on this issue. Prior to the Betts decision, the ADEA was interpreted as requiring an employer who discriminated between older and younger workers in employee benefit plans to prove that the plans did not violate the ADEA. Section 4(f)(2) of the ADEA (29 U.S.C. 623(f)(2)) was interpreted as requiring employers to demonstrate that a plan that did not provide older workers equal benefits to younger workers was not a "subterfuge to evade the purposes" of the ADEA. The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission [EEOC], the Federal agency responsible for enforcing the ADEA, adopted regulations from the Department of Labor, the previous enforcement agency, which interpreted the "subterfuge" requirement as placing the burden on employers to prove that "age based reductions in employee benefit plans" were justified by "significant cost considerations," 29 C.F.R 1625.10. Employers had to show that the cost of providing an equal benefit was greater for an older worker than for a younger worker. This interpretation of the ADEA was supported by five Federal circuit courts of appeals.

In the Betts case, the Court essentially rejected this interpretation of the ADEA and invalidated the EEOC's regulations. As stated by Justice Marshall in his dissent, the Betts case "immunizes virtually all employee benefit programs from liability" under the ADEA. Slip opinion (dissent) at 1. As a result of this decision, Justice Marshall continued, "liability will not attach under the ADEA even if an employer is unable to put forth any justification for denying older workers the benefits younger ones receive, and indeed, even if his only reason for discriminating against older workers in benefits is his abject hostility to, or his unfounded stereotypes of them." Slip opinion (dissent) at 1.

Specifically, the Court held that Congress intended to exempt employee benefit plans from coverage under the ADEA, "except to the extent plans were used as a subterfuge for age discrimination in other aspects of the employee relation"—for example, wages, hiring, firing, promotion, retaliation. Slip opinion at 19. Under Betts therefore a discriminatory employee benefit plan can only be successfully challenged if it is shown that it is associated with unlawful discrimination against an older worker in a nonbenefit area, such as the denial of employment or a reduction of wages.

The Court also put the burden on the employee to prove that the employee benefit plan violates the ADEA. The older employee must prove that the employee benefit plan "actually was intended to serve the purpose of discriminating in some nonfringe benefit aspect of the employment relation." Slip opinion at 20.

Finally, the Court held that employee benefit plans established prior to the enactment of the ADEA in 1967 cannot be a subterfuge to evade the purposes of the ADEA, thus effectively insulating these plans from being held in violation of the ADEA. The Court rejected the argument that Congress, through 1978 amendments to the ADEA, specifically intended to make clear that the ADEA does apply to pre-1967 plans.

The Older Workers Benefit Protection Act, in the words of the legislation, would "restore the original congressional intent in passing and amending the [ADEA], which is to prohibit discrimination against older workers in all employee benefits except when age-based reductions in employee benefit plans are justified by significant cost considerations." The bill basically codifies the EEOC regulations in effect prior to the Betts decision.

Briefly, the bill would do the following. First, it would make in compliance with the ADEA only those employee benefit plans "where, for each benefit or benefit package * * * the actual amount of payment made or cost incurred on behalf of an older worker is no less than that made or incurred on behalf of a younger worker." Second, it would put the burden on the employer to prove that an employee benefit plan that discriminates between younger and older workers does not violate the ADEA. Finally, the legislation would make clear that the ADEA is applicable to employee benefit plans established prior to the enactment of the ADEA in 1967.

Of additional significance is that the bill has retroactive application with regard to all actions and proceedings brought under the ADEA that were pending on June 23, 1989, the date of the Betts decision, and actions or proceedings brought under the ADEA after that date. This is consistent with current case law.

I urge my colleagues to support this much needed legislation. We must reiterate what we intended when we enacted the ADEA, that arbitrary employment discrimination based on age is unlawful, not only in such areas as hiring, firing, wages, and promotion, but also in an area as critical to the employment relationship as employee benefits.

ECONOMIC IMPACT REVITALIZATION ACT

HON. MICKEY LELAND

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, between now and the year 2000, more than half of all new workers hired will be minorities or females. An alarming percentage of these workers who will be called upon to operate technical equipment and processes will lack the necessary training and skills. If we are to meet the challenge of increased global competition, this Nation must commit itself to end shortages of technically trained workers by increasing opportunities for minority and female owned enterprises.

The Office of Minority Economic Impact [OMEI] was created, in part, to assist in the development of energy-related Minority Business Enterprises [MBE]. If it is to fulfill this mission, the office's resources must be restructured to enhance MBE development and to increase minority involvement in scientific and educational projects conducted by the DOE.

To meet these objectives, I am introducing H.R. 3184, the Economic Impact Revitalization Act. This bill will more effectively coordinate existing programs within OMEI and DOE and establish a venture capital program as well as a working capital program. The goals of these programs are to: First, strengthen the competitive and productive capabilities of MBE's that conduct business with DOE and its related agencies; second, increase the number of minority and women-owned energy-related MBE's; and third, provide technical training for minorities and women.

This bill will establish an Energy Related Minority Business Enterprise Center [MBE Center] which will be composed of Federal, State, and industry representatives. The MBE Center will serve as an intake facility to assess a MBE's management, technology, and capital requirements and then offer technical and managerial assistance where appropriate. Subsequently, the MBE will have the opportunity to enter into a partnership with a university research center and a national lab. The partnership would develop proposals for the commercialization of research and then submit them to the DOE for funding and development.

Furthermore, this bill will convert OMEI's current bid proposal preparation loan program into a grant program. Such a conversion will significantly increase the number of MBE's that are to participate in the bid proposal process. This conversion will not require new funding in fiscal year 1990.

H.R. 3184 would allow moneys in the Nuclear Waste Fund to be deposited in the Minority Bank Deposit Program of the Department of the Treasury. This additional authority will enable OMEI to invest more than $1 billion in minority financial institutions.

These programs will enable OMEI to attract private and State funds. Such moneys would be used to establish mixed loan portfolios which would be offered to MBE's to facilitate their successful operation.

In summary, H.R. 3184 will usher in a new age for energy-related MBE's by providing them with the wherewithal to compete and participate in the high-technology revolution. I encourage my colleagues to support minority development and cosponsor this bill.

PHYSICIAN REIMBURSEMENT

HON. ELIZABETH J. PATTERSON

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mrs. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, because of escalating health care costs and increasing budgetary strains affecting our Medicare Program, it is obvious that changes will have to be made regarding physician reimbursement. Unless we are able to control the spiraling costs, services to our elderly and disabled citizens will be seriously jeopardized.

However, it is essential that any revisions in the payment system do not sacrifice available, accessible medical care as a means of controlling cost and meeting budgetary targets. For this reason, I do not support expenditure targets. I believe that the establishment of annual expenditure targets for payments to physicians would severally affect the ability of senior citizens and disabled persons to obtain needed medical care quickly and adequately.

The goal of enacting expenditure targets is to reduce Federal expenditures for the Medicare Program. However, the result of enacting such targets would be the rationing of medical care for senior citizens and disabled Americans. We must not force those providing health care to choose between honoring their commitment to provide needed services or meeting budgetary goals in which our senior citizens, in effect, become Federal expenditure targets.

HARLEM HOSPITAL—MEETING THE NEEDS OF THE COMMUNITY

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention and to the attention of my colleagues, a nationwide health coalition which was initiated by a hospital which is located in my 16th Congressional District in New York City—Harlem Hospital.

The name of this coalition is the Committee on Improve Minority Health by the Year 2000 and it consists of health care professionals from across the country who are committed to this cause. Dr. Muriel Petioni, who has spent over 50 years of her life working to heal the sick in the Harlem community, understands the critical need for health care for the black community especially at a time when health institutions and hospitals that serve the black and Hispanic communities have been closing their doors. She understands that there needs to be more black and Hispanic doctors serving these communities.

Dr. Petioni and her colleagues are conscious of the fact that there has to be a change. The facts are evident. According to Charles Windsor, executive director of Harlem Hospital, blacks and Hispanics are disproportionately afflicted by all of the major diseases such as cancer, heart disease, and diabetes. And the life expectancy for blacks and Hispanics is a far cry from what the life expectancy is for whites.

The committee held conferences with health care professionals, educators, and community leaders, sponsored jointly by the Harlem Hospital Center and Columbia University's College of Physicians and Surgeons. The agenda for these conferences was to develop recommendations which addressed some of the following vital issues: increased programs to deal with the impact of substance abuse and AIDS, the need for expansion of primary health care services, mental health issues, and health career education. Earlier this year, these recommendations were presented to the black and Puerto Rican caucus in New York State where legislators, including myself, vowed to see that all of these issues be dealt with on every level of government. Something has to be done. Solutions have to be found.

It is for these very important reasons that the Committee to Improve Minority Health by the Year 2000 was formed. It is my hope, as well as the hope of the committee and all those vehemently involved with the health care concerns in the black and Hispanic communities, that one day we can turn these numbers around and that health care for minority people can be a thing of excellence.

RECOGNITION OF CORUNNA PUBLIC SCHOOL AS A HISTORIC MARKER

HON. BILL SCHUETTE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. SCHUETTE. Mr. Speaker, it is my honor to rise today to recognize the dedication of the Corunna Public School in Corunna, MI, as a Michigan historic site marker.

The Corunna School District was organized in 1842, and constructed its first school house the same year. It has been an elementary and secondary educational facility in Corunna since 1842. Its architect, Edwyn A. Bowd, is renowned as a specialist in the designing of public, institutional, and civic buildings in southern Michigan between 1902 and 1940.

The growing Corunna School District built new school buildings in 1851, 1866, and 1882 on the same site. A fire on April 14, 1908, completely destroyed the 1882 structure, but the Corunna citizens raised the funds necessary to rebuild the building, which was ready for occupancy again in 1909.

The 2½-story Georgian-revival style school is trimmed in limestone. The bell in the cupola was cast in 1882 and donated by the Corunna Presbyterian Church to the school upon its completion.

The school, which originally held grades K-12, graduated high school students through 1952 and housed elementary classes until 1976. Today it serves as the central office of the Corunna School District and its community education office. Pre-school and adult education classes are also held in the school on a daily basis.

Mr. Speaker and fellow colleagues, it is again my honor to announce the dedication of the Corunna Public School as a Michigan historic site marker.

MRS. LECH WALESA VISITS JERSEY CITY, NJ

HON. FRANK J. GUARINI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, on July 6, 1989, Danuta Walesa, wife of Polands Solidarity leader, Lech Walesa, came to Jersey City, the former home of her husband's parents.

Mrs. Walesa's visit was inspired by her family's deep roots in Jersey City and Hudson County. Lech Walesa's mother first came to Jersey City in 1971 to live with her second husband, Stanislaw Walesa, and her sister. Stanislaw was the brother of Bolek Walesa, Lech Walesa's father, who died after World War II. Lech Walesa's mother died in 1974 after she was struck by an automobile and killed while crossing a street in Bayonne.

Stanislaw Walesa remained in Jersey City and worked with Mr. Harry Bockner, owner of the Henderson Lumber Mills, until his death in 1981. I attended the funeral of Stanislaw Walesa who died in 1982, just 2 months before he would have been 65 years of age.

Mrs. Walesa came to Jersey City to visit a family friend, Mr. Harry Bockner, at this place of business, to thank him for the support he gave to Lech's mother and stepfather while they lived in America. She also visited the Exchange Place site on the waterfront where a foundation for the Katyn Forest Massacre Memorial is being erected by the mayor and city council as a tribute to those valiant Polish soldiers who fought Hitler's march.

Because I was deeply impressed with Lech's leadership of the struggle for justice and freedom in Poland, I recommended him for the Nobel Peace Prize. My remarks appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 18, 1981, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to discuss a subject which not only gives us great personal pleasure, but is also a subject of great pride in my district.

Lech Walesa, the courageous leader of the Polish Free Trade Union known as Solidarity, has recently been nominated for the 1981 Nobel Peace Prize. I would like to take this occasion to state here on the floor of the House that I can think of no more appropriate recipient for this prestigious award than Mr. Walesa. He has set an example for all persons, regardless of nationality or the political system their nation follows, as one who cherishes freedom and the dignity of working men and women.

Lech Walesa has arrived at his present position of international prominence not as a man seeking personal power, or even a former office in his country's government. He has come to our attention because of spectacular events in Poland, for which he has been the prime catalyst, having galvanized the imagination and respect of peoples throughout the world * * *.

We all fervently pray that awarding the Nobel Peace Prize to Lech Walesa will be the crowning event in a peaceful and successful achievement of his worthy goals. Perhaps such international recognition will give pause for reflection to those who would crush freedom in Poland through force of arms.

It is my hope, Mr. Speaker, in speaking out before the House today, to in some small way, add my own voice, representing the people of Hudson County and New Jersey's 14th Congressional District, in supporting the nomination of Lech Walesa for the 1981 Nobel Peace Prize.

In a letter dated October 7, 1981, from Solidarnosc Headquarters, in Gdansk, Poland, Lech Walesa sent me the following letter:

DEAR MR. GUARINI, Thank you very much for your cordial letter and tribute you paid to me, but first of all I am happy to hear that you approve the activities of our independent, self-governed union.

All of us are very grateful for the moral support of aims and tasks we declared and which must be of concern to all who are interested in justice.

Thanks to your letter and many others from the U.S.A. and all over the world our union is becoming stronger and aware that in our struggle for human rights and dignity we are not alone. It is the source of hope for us that these aims should be achieved not in Poland only but also in other countries.

I am absolutely convinced that the proposal of mutual cooperation you suggested, and I accept with great pleasure, will serve the cause of peace, justice and freedom of all the people.

I hope that visit to the U.S.A. will help to achieve our aims.

I am grateful, Sir, that you supported my nomination for the 1981 Nobel Peace Prize. This is a matter of great importance, particularly for the whole of "Solidarity" as the union, much more than me, personally.

Thank you for the American flag and the photos you enclosed.

I extend our best wishes for you and all the "Solidarity's" friends in the U.S.A., I remain, Sincerely, Lech Walesa, Chairman of NSZZ "Solidarnosn."

During the past few years contact has been maintained by mail and by individuals visiting Poland. Roger Castor, a student at Jersey City State College, studying with the Kosciuszko Foundation in Poland, on two occasions brought messages and gifts of an American flag and Royal Doullon Bunnykins set for their newborn child.

On another occasion, Edward Balarzuk and his wife Dorothy visited Walesa in Gdansk with a message from the people of New Jersey, sent by me, urging Walesa to stay strong.

It was my pleasure during the bicentennial year of the U.S. Constitution to send a copy of our Constitution to Lech Walesa to be signed by him. Because of the tense situation, our emissary could not meet with Mr. Walesa in his office and had to go to the rectory of St. Brigida's Church where he affixed his signature in the presence of Roger Castor and Msgr. Henryk Jankowski, his chief of staff.

Last year we sent a message via Father Leonard Miodowski with another invitation to visit with us, which was matched by a letter from the Hudson County Building Trades Council President Nick Sita.

Several months ago we were advised by Mr. Walesa of his anticipated trip to the United States under the leadership of Lane Kirkland, president of the national AFL-CIO.

Two weeks ago I had the privilege of speaking with Mr. Walesa through a telephone call made by me and Walter Brolewicz, first cousin of the Solidarity leader. Mr. Walesa indicated that he will be visiting the United States on or about November 19, depending on circumstances in his nation.

Since January of this year we have been making plans to honor the valiant labor leader when he visits Jersey City, the "second home of the Walesa family," because of his parents' long residence in our area.

During his stay, Mr. Walesa will visit the Statue of Liberty, attend services at St. Anthony's Church, Jersey City, where his mother worshiped, and receive an honorary degree from St. Peter's College.

A committee of outstanding individuals has been formed to welcome Mr. Walesa with Thomas K. Wojslawowitz, chairman, Mrs. Jean Kozmor, cochairperson, Rev. Leonard Miodowski, treasurer, Joseph Sluka, secretary, Conrad J. Vuocolo, executive director, Michael J. Sluka, Esq., attorney for the committee, and Henry J. Dabrowski, CPA, as fiscal advisor.

I am pleased that the group has named me as honorary chairperson for this historic event.

Archbishop Theodore E. McCarrick, of the Archdiocese of Newark, and Bishop Jerome E. Pechillo, Auxiliary Bishop of Hudson County, will participate at the religious services, with local and other clergy from throughout the State, including Rev. Gereld Bajek, pastor, St. Anthony's Roman Catholic Church, Rev. Stanley Urbanik, pastor, and Rev. Leonard Miodowski, assistant pastor of St. Ann's Church, and Rev. Walter Niedzwiecki, pastor of Our Lady of Czestochowa Church, all of Jersey City; and Rev. Msgr. J. Marjanczyk, pastor of Our Lady of Mount Carmel Church, and Rev. Bernard Nowicki, pastor of Polish National Catholic Church, of Bayonne, and Rev. Rudolf Zubic, pastor of Our Lady of Czestochowa Church, Harrison.

Other members of the committee are:

Edward and Dorothy Baltarzuk, of Toms River; Marion Borek, of Harrison; Marian Marawski, of Lyndhurst; Ziggy Pyka, of West Orange; Lucian Rutowski, of North Arlington; and Edward Melinowski of Carlstadt.

PAT DREIZLER RETIRES

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Pat Dreizler who is retiring after a distinguished 30-year career in public service. From the beginning to the end of her career, Pat Dreizler's service to society has been constant, characterized by genuine enthusiasm for her work and dedication to the people of Redondo Beach.

Ms. Dreizler came to California in 1956 with her husband and three children. She soon became deeply involved in volunteer activities in Redondo Beach. Ms. Dreizler's commitment to youth centers, charities, parks and recreation centers made her well suited for the role of community services assistant, a position which she assumed in the midsixties. In this capacity, she was able to confront such pressing issues as drug and alcohol abuse. By running an information service, she provided city residents with information about services and programs which helped combat these growing problems.

Pat Dreizler's dedicated service rose to greater responsibilities when Redondo Beach city officials appointed her director of the newly created department of community resources in 1975. Under her guidance, this fledgling department took on a wide range of invaluable responsibilities for the city. Her office currently supervises three senior citizen clubs, runs the South Bay Juvenile Diversion Project for troubled teenagers, provides staff support for the Redondo Beach Historical Society, all in addition to the department's continued efforts to provide city residents with information about helpful social services in the region.

Pat Dreizler's 30-year commitment to helping her community serves as an example for all of society. On the occasion of her retirement, I commend her for her accomplishments, I congratulate her family and friends, and I wish her much joy and happiness in the future.

TERRORISM

HON. ALBERT G. BUSTAMANTE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. BUSTAMANTE. Mr. Speaker, I, along with my fellow Americans, am appalled by the reported execution of Lieutenant Colonel Higgins earlier this week. In the aftermath of this tragic event, there have been numerous calls by my colleagues for revenge against those who perpetrated this heinous act. I am also supportive of action targeted both at those who engage in terrorist activities, like the Hezballah, and those states such as Libya, Iran, and Syria who aid terrorist efforts.

However, I am quite alarmed by those who have used this tragedy as an opportunity to criticize Israel instead of laying the blame squarely on those like the Hezballah who commit terrorist acts. For example, on Monday, Senator DOLE implied that Israel somehow bears responsibility for Colonel Higgin's murder. It seems to me, to assign blame to Israel for the execution of American hostages in fact serves to implicitly support the terrorist groups which are truly responsible for these reprehensible crimes.

I believe that as a nation that is truly interested in attaining peace in the Middle East, we must put an end to blaming Israel first and instead focus our efforts on punishing those who commit barbaric acts of terrorism. For terrorism will not end as long as those who practice it believe that they can weaken our support for Israel by taking hostages. Sadly, Senator DOLE revealed this week that the incentive for terrorists still exists.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO JUDGE MICHAEL DeMARCO

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to the Honorable Michael DeMarco, a dear friend of mine and a former District Court justice from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. I have known Judge DeMarco for many years and was saddened to learn of his passing earlier this week.

The memory of Judge DeMarco brings back many fond memories of my days as a Massachusetts State Senator and my early days as a Congressman. Judge DeMarco was a personable, outgoing individual who will be sorely missed by those of us who knew and loved him.

Judge DeMarco loved people! At our many sessions in and around Boston—Judge DeMarco was always the center of lively debate—he epitomized the camaraderie that existed within our circle of friends. Judge DeMarco was always the one who would assemble the group. He was the catalyst for friendship among a wide range of individuals.

Judge DeMarco was a big man! But his stature could not compare to the size of his heart. Everyone who knew Judge DeMarco was familiar with his kind and gentle demeanor and looked forward to the opportunity to spend some time with him. As a legislator from western Massachusetts I spent a great deal of time traveling across the Commonwealth. I always looked forward to the opportunities I had to travel with Judge DeMarco who, at the time, was a member of the industrial accident board.

Mr. Speaker, Judge DeMarco had an illustrious career in service to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. He was appointed to the accident board in 1953 by Governor Christian A. Herter and reappointed in 1959 by Governor Foster Furcolo. My dear friend, Governor John Volpe, appointed Judge DeMarco to the bench in 1962. In all his charges, he composed himself in a kind and compassionate manner. He was faithful to his oath to the Commonwealth while at the same time honest and fair to all those who came before him.

As I have already stated, Mr. Speaker, Judge DeMarco was a loving man! More than anything else he loved his family. He loved his three children and four grandchildren. Each of these family members should feel great strength in knowing that their father and grandfather left so much of himself in the people around him. Judge DeMarco was a man who was helpful, big-hearted, idealistic, daring, decent, and fair. Family and friends should reflect on the memories we have of him—reflections of unity, affection, and love.

The value of reflection is to inspire us to the future. It is my hope and prayer that the memory of Judge DeMarco will strengthen the lives of all those who knew him and lead us to move forward with the same joy and spirit that Judge DeMarco brought to his own life.

ENHANCED OIL AND GAS RECOVERY

HON. MICHAEL A. ANDREWS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I had the opportunity to testify before the Senate Finance Committee Subcommittee on Energy and Agriculture Taxation. The topic of the hearing was S. 828, a bill introduced by Senator DOMENICI, Senator BOREN—the chairman of the subcommittee—and others, which provides important incentives for enhanced oil and gas recovery. Soon the House version of the Enhanced Oil and Gas Recovery Tax Act of 1989, will be introduced by Mr. PICKLE, and I am proud to be an original cosponsor.

The Enhanced Oil and Gas Recovery Tax Act of 1989 provides necessary tax incentives for the removal of crude oil and gas through enhanced recovery techniques and a tax credit for research and development to discover or improve tertiary recovery methods. Promoting the recovery of oil and gas "already in place" will certainly help reduce our dependency on imported oil. This bill will stimulate marginal production, including the development of stripper wells and heavy oil.

Such sources represent a good portion of the remaining proven energy reserves in this country. The fact is that regular oil recovery techniques leave 65 to 70 percent of the oil in the ground. Enhanced recovery techniques enable us to get at this remaining oil. Providing incentives for enhanced recovery is a sure fire way to increase domestic production by encouraging the bringing up of oil that we already know is there but which is somewhat more expensive to get at.

While I strongly support the Enhanced Oil and Gas Recovery Tax Act of 1989, I believe that it is only a first step. We must do more to put our domestic oil and gas industry back on its feet again. U.S. oil production is below 8 million barrels a day, the lowest level in a quarter century. More than half the drilling rigs operating 3 years ago are in mothballs or dismantled. In 2 or 3 years 50 percent of the oil we consume will flow from foreign rigs, a dependence we have never experienced before.

Unknown to most, oil and gas is one of the most heavily taxed industries in the United States. The average effective Federal tax rate for U.S. oil companies has been well above that of firms in other industries during the 1980's. Other nations are lowering their taxes on energy production and attracting capital away from the United States to develop their resources. If our tax system does not stay competitive, U.S. resources will stay in the ground. Our economy will be the loser and our national security will suffer.

Again, the Enhanced Oil and Gas Recovery Tax Act is a good first step. However we must do more. My bill, H.R. 658, the Exploration and Development Incentive Act, and its companion, Senator BOREN's bill, S. 234, are targeted to provide real help to our struggling independent producers who drill 80 to 90 percent of all wells in the United States. Both bills provide a new exploration and development tax credit, a new production credit for marginal well production, remove intangible drilling costs from the minimum tax, extend the nonconventional fuels credit and reinstate tight sands gas qualification for this credit. They also increase percentage depletion, repeal the property transfer rule, and repeal the net income limitation on percentage depletion.

I am cognizant of the challenges that we in the Congress face meeting the deficit reduction targets each year. But we cannot delay. I am working to find a revenue source to pay for these proposals and urge my colleagues in the Senate to do the same. We must enact fiscally responsible legislation which will assist the domestic oil and gas industry. Our economy and our national security depend upon it.

EXPLANATION OF MISSED VOTES

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I regret that I missed recorded votes on July 25 and 28, and on August 3. Accordingly, I wish to state for the RECORD how I would have voted had I been present:

Rollcall No. 157: "No."
Rollcall No. 158: "No."
Rollcall No. 159: "No."
Rollcall No. 160: "Aye."
Rollcall No. 186: "No."
Rollcall No. 187: "Aye."
Rollcall No. 188: "Aye."
Rollcall No. 209: "Aye."

WILLIAM MICHAEL KITZMILLER'S RETIREMENT

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to mark an occasion which has elements of both sadness and happiness. The Committee on Energy and Commerce is losing a very valued member of the staff.

I feel a great deal of personal sorrow at the retirement of William Michael Kitzmiller, our staff director, but I am glad that Mr. Kitzmiller will remain a friend in the future as he has in the past.

Like everyone on the Energy and Commerce Committee, I am very proud of the committee; I am extremely proud of the colleagues with whom I serve, and of the history and traditions of the committee. It was the first committee of the House of Representatives, then known as the Committee on Commerce and Manufacturers.

Those who have served on this committee have had a great sense of pride in what our committee does to serve the public.

During Mr. Kitzmiller's tenure, our committee has dealt with some of the most important issues of our time: Maintaining and improving the quality of our environment; preserving American jobs; assuring a stable and affordable energy supply; protecting the integrity of our securities markets; and many more.

In all these areas, Mr. Kitzmiller has been here to advise me and guide me and work with me; to work with the members of the committee; to assure that the procedures of the committee are open and fair; and to assure that the responsibilities of the committee are properly carried out. He has had a very great burden of responsibility for the way the committee has been run during the time that I have had the privilege of serving as chairman.

He has been an outstanding staff director and is known and loved, I think, not only by the members of the committee and the staff, but also everyone else throughout the Congress and those who work both on the Hill and off the Hill with our committee.

Though he is moving on to other activities, the committee and the Congress will bear his stamp for some time to come. He has taught me a great deal, and I know that other Members have learned from him as well. And as staff director, he brought in and trained bright, talented people who will help us conduct the committee's business in the future.

Mr. Kitzmiller is an erudite, articulate man who could have been a success in any number of professions. He was—and is—a scholar, a teacher, and a writer. That he chose to join us in our endeavors has been our gain. That he is now retiring is our loss.

Mr. Kitzmiller, my colleagues join me in wishing you God's blessing and good fortune in all of your future affairs. We will miss you, and we love you.

THE 12TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE GULFPORT-BILOXI REGIONAL AIRPORT AUTHORITY

HON. LARKIN I. SMITH

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. SMITH of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few minutes to commend to your attention the Gulfport/Biloxi Regional Airport Authority.

Twelve years ago this month, this regional airport authority was chartered by the State of Mississippi as a joint venture of the city of Biloxi, the city of Gulfport and the county of Harrison. This regional airport authority was formed to own and operate what had been the municipal airport of Gulfport, MS.

When the regional airport authority began operations, it was faced with an obsolete passenger terminal, single carrier service, runways in need of refurbishing, a lack of professional management, and a shortage of funds. The three very able charter commissioners of the Gulfport/Biloxi Regional Airport Authority, Mr. Emile Fallo, Mr. Wallace Farragut and Mr. G.B. Werby, working with their very able general counsel, Cy Faneca, Esq., immediately took steps to remedy these deficiencies. Within a few months a professional, certified airport manager was hired and within 4 years a new, modern passenger terminal was completed. Runways and taxiways were refurbished.

The progress of the airport during these past 12 years has been nothing short of amazing. Moreover, this regional airport authority has been a model of outstanding airport management and cooperation among local governments. It is a classic example of what can be accomplished by local governments working together for the common good. It is an example we should seek to duplicate in other endeavors. During these past 12 years, the achievements of this airport authority have reflected the high caliber of its dedicated commissioners and professional staff. Their knowledge, experience and professionalism have guided the Gulfport/Biloxi Regional Airport Authority steadily and expertly. For the last 3 years our airport authority has benefited greatly from the management of Executive Director Bruce Frallic.

Today the Gulfport/Biloxi Regional Airport Authority has three airline carriers serving three major hubs from its modern passenger terminal and runways. Its primary runway is 9,000 feet long, making it one of the longest in the United States, capable of landing any aircraft. Its instrument landing systems provide all-weather capability. Airport revenues and tenant activity are at an alltime high and growing.

The Federal Airport Improvement Program has been a great help to the Gulfport/Biloxi Regional Airport. During these past 12 years the Gulfport/Biloxi Regional Airport Authority has applied for and received $14 million in Federal Aviation Administration grants through the Airport Improvement Program, which is funded by the Aviation Trust Fund. Without these AIP funds, the capital improvements at the airport would not have been possible. The three local governments each contributed $1 million through general obligation bonds, which made possible the construction of the new terminal. The Airport Authority has matched the Federal AIP funds with $1.4 million.

The Mississippi Gulf Coast has every reason to be proud of the Gulfport/Biloxi Regional Airport Authority. It has a 12-year history of progress and success.

THE DORNAN AMENDMENT TREATED DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA RESIDENTS AS SECOND-CLASS CITIZENS

HON. MAJOR R. OWENS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. OWENS of New York. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I voted against an amendment offered by Mr. DORNAN to the District of Columbia appropriations bill. The Dornan amendment was not about whether abortion is good or bad. Only a pregnant woman should make that decision. The Dornan amendment was about personal freedom and self-determination in the District of Columbia. It was about legislators trying to force women to do something which they know is not in the best interests of themselves or their children—both born and unborn. It was about the Federal Government trying to say "not only will we not help you do what you feel is right, but we will not allow your neighbors to help you either."

Abortions have already been severely limited throughout the Nation because this body has forbidden the use of Federal funds for poor women who feel they need abortions. For these women, America is not a country of equal opportunity. Women who are able to pay for an abortion can decide that they are not able to care for a child, that bringing a child into this world is against both the interests of her child and herself. They are able to exercise their constitutional rights without hindrance. Poor women do not have this same right. If they get pregnant, they must bear the child, and taxpayers must pay for it.

In the District of Columbia, women who receive AFDC for their children receive an average of $350 a month. There is no extra money to cover the cost of an abortion. The average cost of a Medicaid-funded abortion in the District is $485. For those women who are not allowed to get abortions because Medicaid will not pay for them, Medicaid and the taxpayers end up paying at least $2,190 for the woman to bear her unwanted child.

A woman who does not want her child may not treat her pregnancy seriously. She may not seek out adequate prenatal care, and may not be motivated to cease activities which could harm her fetus such as smoking, drinking alcoholic beverages, or using controlled substances. These babies are at great risk of being born with low birthweight, with AIDS, with drug dependencies, and with fetal alcohol syndrome. These are the babies who will die in the first year of their lives. In 1986 the District of Columbia had the highest rate in the Nation of infant mortality, neonatal mortality, and low birthweight babies, and the second highest rate of postneonatal mortality.

The Dornan amendment was a bad amendment because it would have prohibited the people of the District of Columbia from helping poor pregnant women with its own resources. It is law that States and localities may spend their own Medicaid money on abortion services. However, in the District of Columbia women who know that they cannot provide the financial or emotional support needed to care for their unborn children, must still bear those children at the expense of the Government, her family, and often the health and well-being of her baby.

States in this country have the right to deal with local issues, including health care, locally. According to the law, the District of Columbia is treated like a State for purposes related to Medicaid. In the law, States are allowed to make their own decisions concerning the use of local funds in Medicaid, and 13 States permit the use of their own revenues to fund abortion services for its poor residents. The District of Columbia, though treated like a State under Medicaid, would have been denied this same right of other localities by the Dornan amendment.

This body must stop treating the people of the District of Columbia as second-class citizens of this Nation. They must have the same basic rights as all people in this country. On the issue of the Dornan amendment, that right means being able to decide for themselves whether or not they want their local revenues to help poor women in the District of Columbia. I applaud my colleagues who voted to uphold that basic right of the people of the District of Columbia.

TRIBUTE TO ROLLIN "DOC" WRIGHT, LIEUTENANT, CALIFORNIA HIGHWAY PATROL

HON. CHARLES PASHAYAN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, it was almost 30 years ago that Rollin A. "Doc" Wright first donned the uniform of the California highway patrol. In the succeeding years, he served the highway patrol in San Jose, San Leandro, Los Banos, Yuba-Sutter, and Tracy.

In 1975, he became the first member of the California Highway Patrol to be assigned to a foreign country or territory. He spent 1 year with the Territorial Police of American Samoa. For the past 10 years, he was commander of the Mariposa area.

Lieutenant Wright's involvement in community organizations reveals the giving nature of the man: The Mariposa Chamber of Commerce, the John C. Fremont Hospital Foundation, the Emergency Medical Care Committee and Alcohol Advisory Board of Mariposa County, the Mariposa Fish and Game Association, the Mariposa Lions Club, the Yosemite Rotary Club, the Elks Oakhurst Lodge, the Free and Accepted Masons, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the California Association of Highway Patrolmen, and the Calfornia Peace Officers' Association.

Lieutenant Wright served in the defense of America as an aviation electronics technician in the Navy from 1949 to 1953, and as chief warrant officer and criminal investigator for the California Army National Guard from 1971 until the present.

"Doc" Wright is laying down his badge now. His colleagues honored him in a special retirement dinner on July 29 at the Mariposa County Fairgrounds. Peace officers like "Doc" put their lives on the line every time they put on a uniform. We rely on them every day to maintain order and peace in society.

On behalf of the House of Representatives, I should like to extend a heartfelt thanks to Rollin "Doc" Wright for his many years of unselfish dedication to the noble purposes of the California Highway Patrol. All Californians are the better for his service.

THE RAILROAD EVENT RECORDER ACT OF 1989

HON. BILL SCHUETTE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. SCHUETTE. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation which I believe will go a long way toward improving public safety on trains by significantly enhancing the ability of the National Safety Transportation Board [NTSB] to conduct accident investigations. My legislation will require that all locomotives be equipped with event recorders or so-called black boxes. These event recorders will also be required to meet minimum standards.

Last year the Rail Safety Improvement Act of 1988 was signed into law. Among the many improvements to rail safety brought about by this new law was a requirement that the Federal Railroad Administration [FRA] issue regulations requiring that trains be equipped with event recorders. Unfortunately, the FRA has interpreted the law to say that they are only required to issue regulations "as may be necessary."

The FRA initiated a notice of advanced rulemaking on November 23, 1988, and they held a hearing on this issue on January 10, 1989. While I am pleased that these activities have taken place, I am concerned that the FRA may not take action to issue regulations. In my view, this is clearly contrary to congressional intent in the passage of the Rail Safety Improvement Act. It also concerns me that the FRA is not bound to issue regulations by any specific date. My bill will clarify that all locomotives, not just trains, will be required to have event recorders.

As far back as 1969, the NTSB issued a recommendation to the FRA that requested the FRA to impose regulations requiring that all mainline trains be equipped with speed recorders. The Safety Board issued another recommendation to the FRA in 1977 recommending that the FRA require event recorders on all trains operating on main tracks.

These event recorders are vital to the safety investigations conducted by the NTSB. They are invaluable in assisting the Safety Board to reconstruct the events leading to an accident, which is critical in determining the cause. Without this information the ability of the Safety Board to issue recommendations that would be helpful in preventing future accidents is severely hindered. In 1987 and 1988 there were at least 19 accidents in which the NTSB investigation was frustrated because of the absence of event recorder data.

In a recent accident in Freeland, MI, my home State, the accident investigation by NTSB was severely hampered because of inadequate event recorder data. In this particular case there were two locomotives, one of which had a very primitive paper tape speed recorder that provided only the speed of the train. The other locomotive had another relatively inferior recorder which, as is often the case, was unfortunately not working.

Mr. Speaker, I think the advantages of event recorders are clear, and the need to have multievent recorders that provide a minimum level of information is equally clear.

JAMES BLACK, REDONDO BEACH FIRE CHIEF

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to honor James Black, on the occasion of his retirement as fire chief of the city of Redondo Beach. James Black has spent the bulk of his career protecting the people of Redondo Beach from the fires which destroy property and life. On July 14, 1989, he retired. The city will indeed miss him.

Chief Black's career in public service began during the Korean war, where he served with Army intelligence reconnaissance. After he left the Army, he worked with a construction firm, but in the mid-1950's economic conditions forced him to find work elsewhere.

A friend talked him into taking a job as a firefighter. That was the beginning of his career in firefighting, a field in which he found he truly excelled. In 1956, he helped found the city of Covina's first full-time fire department as the city ended its all-volunteer force. He subsequently received numerous promotions from the department because of his high scores on all the promotion tests.

In 1964, at the age of 30, Hermosa Beach asked Black to become its new fire chief. This is generally unheard of—except in the case of James Black. He served with distinction for 5 years. Next, he became deputy fire chief of Redondo Beach. Only a year later, he was appointed the city's fire chief. He has held that post until his retirement last month.

Today, I would like to recognize all that James Black has done. It is because of James Black that Redondo Beach established a program to improve paramedic service at accident sites. It is because of James Black that Redondo Beach now requires fire sprinklers and fire alarms in all new commercial buildings. And it is because of James Black that Redondo Beach received a class 2 fire insurance rating—the second highest given by the Insurance Service Office to cities the size of Redondo Beach.

On behalf of those who reside in Hermosa Beach, Redondo Beach, and others who have ever benefited from the dedication and excellence achieved by this man, I would like to thank Chief James Black for everything he has done. I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating him on his outstanding service.

A REFLECTION ON THE COURTS

HON. ALBERT G. BUSTAMANTE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. BUSTAMANTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in a moment of reflection and introspection. While the House is getting ready to recess, the Supreme Court has already finished their 1988 October term. I feel that now is an appropriate item to take a critical look at the recent decisions of our judicial branch and try to determine for ourselves. The direction in which our Nation is headed.

Of particular concern to me, and I am sure to many of my colleagues, are the recent decisions dealing with various civil rights questions. There were more cases tried under the category of civil rights than any other. This seems to me to be an indication of the importance of civil rights. While I cannot concentrate on all of the cases heard, I would like to cite two as general representative examples. Martin versus Wilks and City of Richmond versus J.A. Croson Co.

In the case of Martin versus Wilks, it was established that a person could challenge programs under title VII of the Civil Rights Act in a subsequent reverse discrimination title VII action. While this seems a reasonable ruling, we must be wary of such action. The Civil Rights Act was established in response to a great inequality that existed and which to a large extent continues to exist in this Nation. We must take care that this act continues to work for the benefit of those it was created.

In the case of City of Richmond versus J.A. Croson Co., the city's requirement that 30 percent of subcontract be awarded to minority business enterprises was ruled to be in violation of the equal protection clause. This decision is inconsistent in itself for it rules that the city's set-asides were unconstitutional but that similar Federal set-asides were not. More importantly however, this decision disregards the fact that these set-asides are the only insurance we have against discriminatory acts in these types of business dealings. However imperfect these programs may be, the solution is not to cut them but to improve upon them.

Both of the aforesaid rulings were decided by a divided Court. This is an indication of the difficulty of the topic and also a signal to us to remain vigilant. While these may seem to be carefully thought out and fair decisions, we must question them. We must do so because they are reversing trends that were considered to be positive and progressive only 20 years ago. We cannot let the shields that were created to protect minorities become weapons which can be used against them.

H.R. 3140, THE ELDER-CARE LONG-TERM CARE ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1989

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, today, I am introducing with my colleagues, Congressman WALGREN and Congressman MARKEY of the Energy and Commerce Committee, H.R. 3140, the Elder-Care Long-Term Care Assistance Act of 1989. The purpose of this legislation is to establish a comprehensive program under the Medicare statute that offers protection against the devastating costs of in-home long-term care services and nursing facility care.

In introducing this bill today, we wish to honor our late colleague, Senator Claude Pepper of Florida. Senator Pepper understood the terrible financial burden faced by elderly people who are unfortunate enough to need long-term care services. He sought throughout his long and productive life to make sure that America provided its older citizens with the health insurance protection they so richly deserve. Yet, the goal of assuring comprehensive long-term care coverage eluded him.

As was so painfully clear during the debate to expand Medicare to provide catastrophic coverage for acute medical expenses, long-term care is a catastrophic burden that virtually no one can afford. At the insistence of Senator Pepper, the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage legislation created what is now known as the "Pepper Commission" to examine the need for both long-term care coverage and comprehensive health care protection, and to develop recommendations for the Congress on how to address these gaps in our health care system. The bill we are introducing today is a first step in the development of comprehensive long-term care assistance for the American people.

Although long-term care is the real financial catastrophe that Americans fear most, it is not covered under Medicare. In fact, Medicare pays for less than 2 percent of the nursing facility bills of elderly people and provides for only limited and highly skilled home health benefits. The Medicaid Program does pay for nursing facility care, but it provides assistance only for those who impoverish themselves to meet the stringent, means-tested eligibility levels. There is still no adequate, private long-term care insurance market to allow those with the financial resources to purchase secure coverage. Thus, more and more Americans are facing long-term care needs that threaten to force them out of their homes, eat up their savings, and put tremendous financial burdens on their families.

The growing elderly population's need for long-term care affects us all. These in need of long-term care are our parents, our spouses, and our friends. Most Americans have already dealt personally with a spouse or loved one in need of long-term care or expect to confront the situation soon. Most Americans have had firsthand experience trying to find a nursing facility and then arranging to pay for the care. They know long-term care is hard to secure and even harder to pay for. They know the average cost of nursing facility care now exceeds $25,000 a year. They know they need help with such bills and that they want protection for themselves and their families. And they are tired of the years of inaction on improving long-term care benefits.

When Americans are asked about their priorities, 94 percent say they feel it is important that older Americans be insured against the cost of long-term care. Long-term care is consistently cited as the No. 1 priority for increased government spending against all other issues. By nearly a two-to-one margin, middle-aged and older people prefer a government social insurance program to one based on private financing with government coverage limited to the poor. They want a program that covers home care, but believe any long-term care system must also cover nursing facility services. And taxpayers say they are willing to pay specific additional taxes, such as lifting the cap on the Medicare payroll tax, to finance a Federal, comprehensive long-term care program.

It is time to come to grips with this crisis that threatens so many older Americans. It is time to face the facts and bring real protection against these financial burdens to the American people. It will not be easy to fashion a balanced and comprehensive plan that offers protection to those most in need at a price tag that all can afford, but the elderly and their families cannot and should not wait any longer.

H.R. 3140 is designed to address these problems. It provides much needed assistance to severely impaired elderly and disabled Medicare beneficiaries. It covers both home care and nursing facility services and fills the financial void that now confronts most families when the need for long-term care strikes.

Although broad in scope, the legislation does not address every need or every concern. But it makes a fair start. It expands the Medicare program to provide long-term care coverage for the most severely impaired elderly. It gives the frail elderly and disabled the choice of staying at home, but also provides assistance if nursing facility care is required. It asks frail beneficiaries to shoulder some of the responsibility for care by continuing to pay part of the cost. For the poor and near-poor with inadequate resources, H.R. 3140 directs Medicaid to assist with cost-sharing obligations. And the legislation includes specific sources of revenue, so that the cost of long-term care reform will not add to the Federal deficit.

More specifically, Elder-Care provides coverage for in-home and community-based services to all Medicare beneficiaries with 2 or more limitations in activities of daily living (beneficiaries) or a similar level of cognitive impairment. The Medicare beneficiaries the bill is designed to help are unable to bathe, dress, eat, toilet, or transfer from a bed or chair without substantial assistance. They suffer from the effects of stroke, diabetes, arthritis, and Alzheimer's disease. Because of their impairments, they need substantial assistance from family and friends or paid assistance in order to survive at home, in the community.

Under the legislation, beneficiaries would become eligible for services after being assessed and certified by the long-term care assessment team of a Community Assessment, Review and Evaluation [CARE] agency. Based upon a uniform assessment and methodology established by the Secretary, the CARE organization would evaluate the beneficiary to establish eligibility for receipt of benefits and to determine the beneficiary's impairment level. For those eligible for long-term care assistance, the CARE organization would develop a plan of care to provide for needed services in the community and monitor the provision of those services. The CARE agency would operate under contract with the Secretary and would perform quality audits of both home care and nursing facility services in addition to conducting assessments. Under the provisions of the bill, CARE agencies would be either units of State or local governments or nonprofit organizations.

Once determined to be in need of home care services, impaired beneficiaries would receive financing for such care based on their degree of impairment. H.R. 3140 specifies two levels of benefits based on the severity of impairment. Those with the most severe limitations would receive the most assistance with up to 30 hours of in-home assistance per week covered under the bill. The moderately impaired would receive up to 20 hours per week of in-home care. CARE agencies would develop plans of care for the impaired elderly within these maximum benefit caps. Covered services include homemaker, personal aide care, and adult day health care, as well as skilled nursing services. Home care services are to be provided by federally certified home health and home care agencies.

The beneficiaries receiving home care benefits would be expected to pay for 20 percent of the cost of their care; Medicare would cover the remaining 80 percent. Although the cost-sharing can be steep, Elder-Care provides an expanded package of services that is currently unavailable under Medicare or private insurance at a cost far below and far more manageable than that which an individual would have to pay without Federal assistance. For most families, this level of assistance will make the difference between continued care at home and nursing facility placement. It offers new and needed assistance to those struggling to care for their loved ones with Alzheimer's disease or suffering the disability of stroke.

Recognizing, however, that poor and near-poor beneficiaries are already financially strapped and can hardly shoulder additional cost-sharing requirements, Elder-Care provides Medicaid assistance to cover their cost-sharing obligations. This coverage includes both cost-sharing and premiums for current Medicare benefits as well as the new cost-sharing obligations under Elder-Care. Medicaid would cover all cost-sharing for individuals with incomes below the poverty level and would provide partial assistance to those with incomes between 100 and 200 percent of poverty. Low-income beneficiaries would apply to the State Medicaid office for assistance.

In addition to these Medicaid protections, H.R. 3140 creates a new grant program within the Public Health Service [PHS] Act for the development and operation of community care agencies [CCA's] that would provide home and community-based services in low-income or rural areas. Such communities often have great difficulties in establishing provider organizations and networks that can offer the home care services covered under the Elder-Care Program. Modeled on the PHS Community Health Centers Program, CCA's would provide access to needed home care services and help ensure that Elder-Care benefits are available to all those eligible for community care. Ultimately, such organizations would be have to be certified as home care agencies under Medicare in order to continue to participate in the Elder-Care program.

For those individuals who can no longer cope in the community, Elder-Care also provides nursing facility coverage. In order to be eligible for services, a beneficiary would have to be screened and certified to need institutional care. Preadmission screening would be conducted by the CARE agency that is also used to establish home care eligibility. Individuals seeking nursing facility care would be provided with alternative arrangements in the community, when appropriate. Those who are screened eligible for nursing facility care would be covered for community care as severely impaired while awaiting nursing facility placement or as alternative to entering a nursing facility.

Payment for nursing facility services would be made only to those facilities that are federally certified. Reimbursement would be provided under a prospective payment system that is based on the average Medicare facility cost in an individual State and adjusted to reflect the case mix of the nursing facility's resident population. The Secretary is to specify the methodology for the nursing facility prospective case mix payment system.

H.R. 3140 also requires beneficiaries to share in the cost of nursing facility care. Beneficiaries are responsible for the full cost of the first 2 months of nursing facility care, unless such services are covered by the current Medicare skilled nursing facility [SNF] benefit. For months 3 through 24 of care, the beneficiary is expected to pay one-third of the average national Medicare nursing facility per diem rate. After 24 months of care, the beneficiaries would pay 10 percent of the per diem rate—a rate that permits individuals to finance long-term care using their own Social Security pensions, but without tapping into family resources and savings.

With these cost sharing levels, the maximum out-of-pocket payment an individual in a nursing facility for 2 years would pay for care today would be less than $30,000. This is not a trivial amount to be sure, but it is a manageable and predetermined amount that families could plan for through savings or the purchase of private insurance. The fear of total impoverishment from nursing facility care would be replaced by an insurable risk.

Again, for those with low-incomes for whom even this fixed outlay would represent an impossible burden, the Medicaid program would provide assistance with cost-sharing obligations. Medicaid would pay for all cost-sharing and uncovered care of those with incomes below the poverty level and would offer partial assistance to those with incomes between 100 and 200 percent of poverty.

Elder-care would be financed through a new Medicare Long-Term Care Trust Fund supported by revenues raised from three different tax sources. H.R. 3140 would first eliminate the cap on wages now covered by the OASDHI tax, including the 1.45 percent Medicare payroll tax. Second, the legislation would impose a 10 percent surcharge on the excess of taxable estates and gifts over $100,000. Finally, the bill would require an income surcharge of $3.50 per $100 of income tax liability for all taxpayers. Taken together, these revenues should cover the entire cost of the Elder-Care Program, making it self-financing and deficit neutral.

In addition to the creation of Elder-Care, H.R. 3140 includes expansions in the Medicare Program to extend health care coverage to all individuals with incomes below 100 percent of the Federal poverty line. These improvements are financed through reduced State and Federal spending under Medicaid that would result from the establishment and implementation of the Elder-Care Program.

Although final estimates are not yet available from the Congressional Budget Office [CBO], preliminary reports indicate that the cost of Elder-Care for a full year of implementation will be between $50 to $60 billion in 1992. An outline of the full program follows.

Despite its high cost, Elder-Care is a program that must be enacted. We know that long-term care reform won't be easy, and we know that it won't be cheap. It will take enormous resources. It will take Federal leadership and grassroots support. But Americans want long-term care reform and they tell us they are willing to pay for it. It is time to act on those commitments and bring an end to the years of indecision on this critical health care issue.

We, as a nation, have already made great gains in expanding affordable health services for the elderly. But we cannot stop before the job is done. The time has come to enact a long-term care program that is broadly accessible, progressively financed, and insures quality care for all. Elder-Care provides a good starting point for this long overdue improvement in the social safety net for elderly Americans.

ELDER-CARE LONG-TERM CARE ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1989 H.R. 3140

TITLE I—MEDICARE LONG-TERM CARE BENEFITS

A. Community Care: Eligibility and Benefits

Eligibility: All Medicare beneficiaries unable to perform without assistance 2 or more activities of daily living (ADLs) (bathing, dressing, toileting, transferring and eating) or with a cognitive impairment (such as Alzheimer's disease) that requires the substantial direction, instruction, or supervision of another person.

Eligibility Determination: Made by federally-funded non-profit or public Community Assessment, Review, and Evaluation (CARE) agencies using uniform assessment criteria established by the Secretary. CARE agencies will assess potential beneficiaries, certify eligibility, develop and revise plans of care, and review the quality of care provided. CARE agencies will be designated by the Secretary and must be either a State or local governmental unit or a non-profit organization.

Benefits: Full range of home care services (skilled and unskilled) and adult day health care, as specified in a plan of care. Home care services provided directly or under contract by Medicare-certified home care or home health agencies.

Scope of Benefits: Individuals are entitled to community care benefits based on the degree of impairment (severe or moderate) as determined in the comprehensive assessment by the CARE agency. The Secretary will establish standards for severe and moderate impairment based on severity of ADL and cognitive impairment.

Severe Impairment: up to 30 hours per week of community care services.

Moderate Impairment: up to 20 hours per week of community care services.

Cost-Sharing: 20 percent of the cost of benefits provided under the plan of care.

Community Care Payment: Home care agencies would be reimbursed according to a fee schedule established by the Secretary, adjusted by the area wage index, and updated by the home health market basket. Adult day care services would be reimbursed on a per diem rate established by the Secretary and adjusted for area wage differentials.

Low-Income Protections: For individuals below 100% of poverty, Medicaid pays assessment charge and all cost-sharing requirements. For individuals between 100% and 200% of poverty, Medicaid pays part of the cost-sharing (75% of cost-sharing requirements for those between 100% and 150% of poverty and 50% of cost-sharing requirements for the 150%-200% of poverty group.) States have the option of implementing a more generous cost-sharing system based on a sliding scale for the 100%-200% of poverty group. Individuals apply to State Medicaid program for cost-sharing assistance. State is responsible for eligibility determination.

Private Insurance Incentives: Private insurers can market plans to cover cost-sharing requirements and to provide supplemental benefits.

B. Nursing Facility Care: Eligibility and Benefits

Eligibility: All Medicare beneficiaries who have been screened by a CARE agency and determined to have a severe level of functional or cognitive impairment based upon limitations in ADLs and other risk factors established by the Secretary.

Eligibility Determination: Preadmission screening conducted prior to nursing facility admission by CARE agency. Determinations based upon uniform assessment criteria established by the Secretary. CAREs can recommend alternate services in the community, when appropriate. Individuals determined to be in need of nursing facility care are automatically deemed eligible for the "severe" package of community care services.

Scope of Benefits: All care provided in a federally certified nursing facility.

Cost-Sharing:

Full cost of first 2 months of care, unless covered by Medicare SNF benefit.

⅛ of national per diem nursing facility rate for months 3-24.

10 percent of national per diem nursing facility rate for months 25 and beyond.

Reimbursement: Nursing facilities reimbursed on a prospective basis with two components: personal care services (including nursing care and raw food) and room, board, and capital costs. The personal care component will be updated annually on the basis of the nursing facility market basket and the room and board component will be increased annually by the CPI. The nursing facility payment rate is based on the lesser of 90 percent of the average State Medicare skilled nursing facility per diem or 125 percent of the average State Medicaid nursing facility per diem in 1989, updated to 1992.

Low-Income Protections: For individuals below 100 percent of poverty, Medicaid pays all cost-sharing requirements. For individuals between 100 percent and 200 percent of poverty, Medicaid pays part of the cost-sharing (75 percent of cost-sharing requirements for those between 100 percent and 150 percent of poverty and 50 percent of cost-sharing requirements for the 150-200 percent of poverty group). States have the option of implementing a graduated and more generous cost-sharing system based on a sliding scale for the 100-200 percent of poverty group. Individuals apply to State Medicaid program for cost-sharing assistance. State is responsible for eligibility determination.

Private Insurance Incentives: Private insurers can market plans to cover cost-sharing requirements and to provide supplemental benefits.

C. Financing

Preliminary Cost Estimate: Between $50 and $60 billion for a full year of implementation in 1992.

Financing Mechanisms: Financing revenues to be raised from 3 different tax sources.

Payroll Tax: Eliminate cap on taxable wages covered by OASDHI payroll tax, including the 1.45 percent Medicare payroll tax (revenues raised: approximately $38 billion).

Estate and Gift Tax: Dedicate additional revenues from Federal estate and gift tax receipts gained by imposing a 10% surcharge on the excess of taxable estates and gifts over $100,000 (revenues raised: approximately $5 billion).

Income Related Premium: Impose an income tax surcharge of $3.50 per $100 of income tax liability for all taxpayers (revenues raised: approximately $10 billion).

TITLE II—MEDICAID HEALTH BENEFITS FOR UNDER-POVERTY INDIVIDUALS

Coverage of Under-Poverty Individuals: State Medicaid programs are required to cover basic medical services (including prescription drugs) to all individuals with incomes below 100% of the Federal poverty level.

TITLE III—HOME CARE FOR LOW-INCOME INDIVIDUALS

Grant Program: Establish a Community Care Agency (CCA) grant program in the Public Health Service Act that is modeled after the Community Health Centers program and is designed to provide home and community-based services in low-income or rural areas that may have difficulty establishing provider networks. Agencies are required to become Medicare-certified as home care agencies within 2 years of receiving a grant. Authorization: $200 million in the first fiscal year.

THE RURAL DEVELOPMENT FAIR SHARE DEVELOPMENT ACT

HON. BYRON L. DORGAN
OF NORTH DAKOTA

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced legislation that is designed to encourage rural development by assuring rural America its fair share of Federal contracts, grants and economic development assistance. This legislation will also redirect the mission of the Department of Agriculture to devote greater effort to rural development. Finally, this bill will begin to address the issue of rural outmigration by making rural areas that are losing a substantial percentage of their population eligible for the same Federal assistance that is given to areas experiencing high unemployment.

As the U.S. economy begins to slow down, it is becoming even more apparent that rural America did not share in the deficit-induced prosperity of the Reagan years. Worse yet, due to the drought in the West and the Midwest and the decline in energy prices overall, many parts of rural America have seen a real decline in their economic standard of living. All over rural America, small towns are withering and dying as their citizens—especially the young and the college educated—have moved to the already congested urban centers of our Nation. The process feeds on itself as the shrinking population causes other businesses to fail and makes it impossible for the local governments to maintain the infrastructure required to attract new firms.

The Federal Government is not responsible for all the ills that beset rural America but it has exacerbated these trends by its spending patterns and its tendency to view rural problems as solely related to agriculture. Agriculture is and will remain vitally important to rural America. But if rural America is to prosper and become a viable part of the postindustrial economy we must foster diversification into other economic activities.

In this bill, I am proposing a five-pronged approach:

First. Let's have an affirmative action strategy for rural America. In order to help those groups in our society who have been left behind, the Federal Government actively seeks to assist minority firms by designating a share of Federal contracts for these companies. Similarly, I propose that the Congress establish a requirement that a fair proportion of the goods and services procured by the Federal Government should be from companies in rural areas.

This rural content requirement is established as broadly as possible so as to allow Federal Departments and agencies as much leeway as possible. Nobody expects the Navy to build aircraft carriers on the great plains but rural America does have the right to expect the Federal Government to spend a fair share of its aggregate purchasing dollars in rural areas. This requirement would apply to either the major contractors or the subcontractors on a major contract. In either case, I would propose that the relevant proportion of rural content should be tied to the proportion of Americans living in rural communities—about 15 to 20 percent in 1989.

I feel that this approach will result, over time, in a more geographically diversified, more competitive Government contractor base that will also provide a stable foundation for continued rural economic diversification.

Second. Require Federal agencies that make grants and loans to foster general economic development to allocate at least a fair share of their funds to rural areas, Again, this share should be tied to the percentage of Americans living in rural communities.

In a study done by the GAO for Mr. Coleman, the percentage of Small Business Administration loans and grants devoted to rural areas was often far below the fair percentage these areas should receive—sometimes as low as 3 percent. Assuring rural communities their fair share of these funds is the one way to increase the amount of development funds available in this year's tight budgetary climate.

Of course, I understand that some development funding is targeted at certain areas. But for those programs that are aimed to benefit the Nation as a whole, rural America has the right to expect its fair share. Requiring Agencies and Departments to monitor their allocations to rural areas and establishing a criteria for fund allocation is one way to assure that it gets it.

Third. Staunch the outmigration of the rural populace by giving rural areas that are losing population the same assistance that is given to urban areas with high unemployment. For those urban areas that experience a high rate of unemployment, the Federal Government properly provides assistance to stimulate new job creation. Unfortunately, in rural areas economic downturns often lead people to move elsewhere in search of employment opportunities. Consequently, the unemployment rate never reaches the level required to trigger Federal assistance.

My legislation provides that rural areas which have experienced a significant loss of population—5 percent or more over a 5-year period—will be declared to be labor surplus areas. Under this designation, firms bidding on these contracts will be eligible for preferential consideration if they or their subcontractors are located in these areas. Under this approach, rural areas will not be penalized for the fact that the rural unemployed would rather relocate than stay unemployed.

Fourth. Facilitate rural development through the use of rural development investment zones. As you know, one recent proposal for restoring balance in the economy is to create urban enterprise zones. The weakness of this approach is that it leaves the rural depression untouched. A further weakness is that the notion of enterprise or investment zones is meaningless without tangible incentives to attract businesses.

We should put some meat on the bones of the enterprise zones idea with workable tax incentives and provisions for urban and rural investments.

My legislation will stimulate new business development in rural areas, and provide new and challenging employment for their residents. Of equal significance, anticipated expansion and diversification of businesses in these regions will reduce the impact of economic downturns in the future. This legislation complements the prior two proposals I have made today by facilitating the business development which the rural content requirement and rural fair share will help initiate.

My legislation authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to designate development zones located in certain impoverished rural communities based upon the area's size, its degree of poverty and general economic distress.

The legislation provides employment-related tax incentives to attract new businesses and to retain existing businesses within the nominated areas. The incentives include:

An employer tax credit of 10 percent for increased spending on qualified wages.

An investment tax credit of 10 percent on certain depreciable real property used in a trade or business within a development investment zone.

Other investment provisions are:

Waiver or modification of Treasury rules are permitted in certain circumstances in order to further job creation, community development, and economic revitalization objectives of the zones.

The Foreign Trade Board shall consider any application to establish a foreign trade zone within a development investment zone on a priority basis, and expedite processing.

The additional Federal assistance and tax incentives provided under the act should result in incentives to diversified economic growth that is so desperately needed to improve the quality of life for residents in these areas.

Fifth. Let's redirect the Department of Agriculture to focus more directly on rural development. In order to give proper attention to rural development at the highest level, I am proposing that the Department name be changed to the U.S. Department of Agriculture and Rural Development. To ensure that this will not merely be a meaningless name change, I am also proposing that the Department establish an Under Secretary for Rural Development. This office will oversee the various rural development activities in the Department through the Agency for Rural Development—a new agency that will house the various development programs now located throughout the Department.

In addition, the Agency for Rural Development will provide matching grants to States to foster rural development coordination and planning, encourage technology development in rural areas and establish revolving loan and venture capital fund pools. Finally, I would propose that we establish a Rural Advocacy Office to act on behalf or rural States, small communities and small businesses located in rural areas when seeking redress from onerous regulations or assistance in seeking Government grants or contracts.

FUNDING OF THE UNITED STATES AND FOREIGN COMMERCIAL SERVICE

HON. DONALD J. PEASE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to associate myself with the August 1 remarks of my colleagues Representatives RIDGE, JOHNSON, and ROGERS regarding the funding of the United States and Foreign Commercial Service [US&FCS].

At a time when our Government needs to promote exports aggressively, the Appropriations Committee unwisely recommended a level of funding for US&FCS that was $5.17 million less than the President's budget request. The President asked for a $6 million increase in the US&FCS budget to offset its 20-percent loss of purchasing power caused by the declining value of the dollar.

This loss of purchasing power has cut sharply into the resources of US&FCS, resulting in a reduction in overseas officers, domestic field staff, and export promotion services. While other nations, realizing the benefits of trade-generated economic growth, have expanded their overseas presence, the United States has lagged badly behind. In Egypt, for example, the Japanese have 15 commercial officers; we have only 2.

Given our Nation's trade deficit and our need to get more U.S. companies involved in exporting, we cannot afford to let this trend continue. We need a well-staffed US&FCS with the resources to promote our exports aggressively in overseas markets. By appropriating the President's full budget request, Congress can avoid any further reductions in US&FCS services and pave the way for a stronger overseas presence in the future.

CONFEREES WAGED TO REVIEW ATF FUNDING

HON. DENNY SMITH

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. DENNY SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express both my surprise and disappointment with one of the actions taken by the Appropriations Committee on H.R. 3072, the Department of Defense authorization bill that the House passed this morning.

The bill zeroed out the funding for the Advanced Tactical Fighter [ATF] Program. I have reviewed the committee report in search of the logic involved in this decision. I must tell my colleagues, based on my own close personal involvement in this program from visiting both of the contractors several times, that the issues of concern to the committee are being adequately addressed by the Air Force and the contractors in the ATF Demonstration and Validation Program.

From a former combat pilot's point of view, I believe that we cannot, in good conscience, send future American pilots into combat against the expected numerical odds in anything less than the superior airplanes that will result from this competition. The ATF Program has been well-structured. The ongoing Demonstration/Validation Program will prove which designs and systems will perform, and the subsequent full scale development program has been stretched by the Air Force to ensure that adequate testing is accomplished prior to going into production.

I share the Appropriations Committee's concern about both ATF unit and total program cost, but such issues must not override good judgment. Passage of the bill this morning has resulted in our interfering, in the final months of a 50-month program, with a program that had the best possible return on our investment as a result of both competition and contractor investment. The result will be the loss of much of this investment, a delay in the program for a number of years, and a greatly increased cost when we do replace the current Navy and Air Force fighter aircraft—a replacement that we will certainly face in the years ahead.

I encourage my colleagues on the Appropriations Committee to closely examine their actions regarding the ATF Program and to fully fund this program when they enter into joint conference with the other body later this year.

THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF CHICAGO BRIDGE AND IRON

HON. HARRIS W. FAWELL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. FAWELL. Mr. Speaker, from the humble wooden bridge building business which Horace E. Horton started soon after the Civil War, Chicago Bridge and Iron Co. [CBI] has grown to become one of the leading companies in the worldwide construction business.

I rise today to congratulate CBI as it approaches its 100th anniversary on August 8, 1989.

CBI is a shining example of the entrepreneurial spirit of America. CBI's history is one of those unheralded success stories of American innovation that contributed to our Nation's rise to the top of the industrial world.

CBI's story is of innovation as the company adapted its products and services to the world's major technical and industrial developments. In the early part of this century, the company moved beyond its original bridge building business. The company followed the paths of the railroads as new communities required special structures such as elevated water storage tanks.

In the early 1920's CBI quickly established itself as a leading supplier to the petroleum industry, furnishing large storage tanks and special purpose structures.

CBI was part of the great industrial machine that helped us win World War II, by building dry docks and landing ships for the U.S. Navy.

Following the war, CBI grew tremendously as its products and services ranged from hydroelectric power projects to the space program, nuclear power, water storage, as well as a premier position in furnishing structures for the oil and gas industry.

Today, CBI is a $1 billion company with diversified projects throughout the world, ranging from storage tanks to new deck sections for the Golden Gate Bridge.

I am proud to represent CBI's headquarters in Oak Brook, IL. Again, my congratulations to CBI for reaching this milestone.

HEALTH CARE FOR VETERANS

HON. NICK JOE RAHALL II

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to the recently released GAO report stating that one-fifth of the disability benefits paid to veterans are for the ordinary diseases of life that have nothing to do with veterans' military service.

There is a current of thought in medical circles that although a person may not have suffered debilitating physical injury during their service to our Nation, the mental and emotional stress caused by killing other humans, or merely trying to live long enough to return to the United States, can create long-lasting mental scars. This extreme anguish, which no one can possibly imagine unless they have lived through a war, can eventually lead to physical illness as the veteran ages, and most of our World War II and Korean war veterans have aged considerably since their service to our country. Furthermore, it is a well-known fact that Vietnam veterans have suffered from indescribable mental anguish, which has hindered their careers and made it difficult for them to care for themselves and their families. This certainly is service-related injury, although there are some who would question the validity of this claim, and continue to deny the veteran his fair share of the benefits earned in defense of our country.

In addition, I cannot and do not care to imagine the day when we shall remove millions of veterans from VA benefits programs and add them to the 37 million Americans who are already without any kind of health care coverage. Is it for us to decide that a veteran can only receive VA benefits if he or she was injured in battle only? Who would benefit from such a situation, certainly not the Federal Government which is already buckling under the stress of providing health care under existing programs.

I am also deeply offended at the report's attempt to create a rift between Vietnam and World War II era veterans. We are not and should not decide who gets health care benefits; they all deserve them. Even more ridiculous is the GAO report's quoting of David Stockman, who has already proven his credibility as a budget expert—he has none.

In conclusion, I would like to restate my adamant opposition to any effort to cut the veterans out of their own benefits programs and pit them against other Americans who also need health care security. We owe our veterans a debt, and by accusing them of fraudulently claiming their rights to health care, the GAO report has wrongfully dismissed the U.S. veteran's position of importance earned through proud service to this Nation.

I would not want to experience the physical and mental torment that our veterans have endured, and no one has the right to deny their rights to health care, whatever the reason.

INDIANA DUNES NATIONAL LAKESHORE

HON. PETER J. VISCLOSKY

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, during the past 10 years, tremendous changes have occured in Indiana's First Congressional District due to the restructuring of its preeminent industry, steel. Realizing that these changes are upon us, the public officials and citizens of northwest Indiana have been studying options for maintaining economic vitality. It is an exciting time for the area, in essence, it is a rebirth.

Throughout these changes, the Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore has remained a constant source of serene beauty and recreation to all. The boundaries of this unique national park weave through small communities, the urban center of Gary, and cradle two massive steel mills. The Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore is an anchor for the quality of life in northwest Indiana.

As the park is being called upon to meet many new demands created by the region's changing atmosphere, many new challenges have resulted. These challenges must be met.

Today I have introduced the Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore Access and Enhancement Act, a bill to meet these new challenges. The main thrust of this act is to address the problem of access. Existing staging areas are insufficient and additional facilities must be developed. Handicap beach access is also a feature that the park lacks. In addition, alternative recreational possibilities made available by the many river corridors in the parks' vicinity, and a means of utilizing the possibilities, must be considered.

My bill is the result of over 8 months of discussion with concerned citizens, interested organizations, and elected public officials. It is my hope that active participation will continue during the hearing process so that the bill can be improved further.

I want to extend my gratitude to all those who took part in the making of this bill. Without them the Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore Access and Enhancement Act would not exist. I look forward to working with them as this bill proceeds. Thank you.

WHAT IS TO BECOME OF TOMORROW'S LEADERS?

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, over the years I have come to the floor many times, too many times, to commemorate the tragic passing of many brave men and women who have lost their lives in the war against drugs. These courageous law enforcement personnel knew the dangers before them when they stood up before the pushers, the dealers, and smugglers who threaten our society, yet they would not be intimidated. These heroes and heroines paid the ultimate price for their courage—with their lives. Throughout our history we have been blessed by scores of such heroes, but what of tomorrow? Who will our leaders be? We know not for sure. But what we do know is that without them, we are lost.

Drug abuse in and of itself presents a considerable threat to society, but the narcotics trade robs us of our future in many other ways as well. On Sunday, July 23, Derrick Connor was slain in a drug-related battle. Derrick was the student head of the Mentor Program at the Malcom X Elementary School in Washington, DC. The Mentor Program was designed to provide students at that troubled school with positive role models for the future. Derrick was only 13 years old.

A society without leaders will not long survive. In our war on drugs, our Nation is losing too many of our leaders, even before they actually have the opportunity to lead. Derrick at the tender age of 13, was hardly with us before he left us. We cannot help but wonder how much he could have accomplished had he survived?

We take pride in knowing that America has never been short on heroes in public service, but what of tomorrow? Our society is increasingly sacrificing more and more of our young people, and our future, to drugs and to drug peddlers. Some believe that this is a malady affecting only the disadvantaged segments of our society—somebody else's children. Some accept that this loss is painful and tragic, but a loss that we as a nation have little choice but to accept. Some more calloused individuals actually believe that the people we lose to narcotics are expendable, and that they had nothing to offer to society anyway. Obviously, that is simply not true. Derrick Connor had a great deal to offer our country.

While the narcotics trade has had the most obviously devastating effect on our urban areas, in reality it has drained the strength of our Nation at all levels and in all areas. A recent report released by National Drug Policy and Drug Control Director Bennett indicates that while casual use of drugs is down sharply, the indicators of cocaine and heroine abuse have been rising sharply. Furthermore, a recent survey released by the Cocaine Hotline indicates that the percentage of emergency calls received from those with college educations doubled in the last year.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues and the administration to consider this question: What is the future of our Nation when many of tomorrow's leaders will not have the opportunity to live to see tomorrow, and when many of those who do survive lose their future to cocaine and other illicit narcotics? We must take action—from Wall Street to Watts, across the Nation and around the world, we must intensify our antidrugs campaign. We must give our children the wisdom needed to survive and to protect them from the drug dealers until they understand just who and what these peddlers of poison are.

Our antinarcotics efforts have often been described as a war on drugs, but a war can only be won if we are willing to dedicate desperately needed resources to waging the battle. We are engaged in a war we must not lose. The heart and soul of our Nation is at stake. What better investment for tomorrow than to make certain our leaders of tomorrow can grow up in a drug free society.

EPA NEEDS TO FOCUS ON EDUCATION

HON. MEL HANCOCK

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, one of the major concerns in the Congress this year centers on the issue of clean air, a subject worthy of extended debate. At the top of the list is the issue of emission standards, specifically, catalytic converters.

Recently, an interesting article on this subject was brought to attention. I would like to share it with my colleagues at this point in the RECORD.

EPA NEEDS TO FOCUS MORE ON EDUCATION

(By Larry Dixon)

For years, the Environmental Protection Agency has been trying to do the will of Congress in helping to clean up our nation's air. The goal of cleaner air is, of course, like Christmas and motherhood—we are all in favor of it.

We don't propose to question motives. The EPA has seemed, at times, to be sensitive to the people who are trying to earn a living in the aftermarket. Even so, the relationship often has been rocky.

We all watched, and many times applauded, as the agency put on a tough face against tampering at the manufacturer and installer levels.

While the rules kept changing, most people in the industry were, and are, giving compliance a good try. At an industry conference a couple of years ago, two representatives of the EPA were on the stage answering questions. After one had given his comments in response to a question from a member of the audience, the other rose and gave a different answer. It was obvious that even they were confused. We don't find fault with this. A certain amount of confusion is inevitable in a complex and changing situation.

Now, the agency seems to have answers for most questions. Much has been written on the EPA's guidelines for exhaust-system repairs. This magazine has devoted a great many pages in recent months to explanations of the agency's guidelines.

Even so, I have lost count of the number of times since the first of this year that shop people have called the magazine, stopped one of our editors at some public gathering or written letters asking about the EPA standards. The shop operators are not comfortable with converters because they are not sure of what is right and what is wrong. Some have told us that they simply won't sell catalytic converters because they are too confused.

During a recent roundtable discussion organized by Undercar Digest, a distributor related information an EPA official had given him about applications for one style of aftermarket converter. A manufacturer pointed out that what the EPA official told the distributor directly contradicted agency policy.

When not every EPA employee involved in air-quality enforcement understands the agency's own guidelines, it's no wonder that shop owners are confused.

Then, recently, the EPA began an enforcement program that sends agents to shops to investigate and levy funds for violations of the repair guidelines. Between February and April, the agency proposed fines of more than $3 million. Wait a minute! This isn't the way it ought to be. The feds should be working harder on educating shop owners than they are on eradicating shop profits.

This whole thing has been very confusing from the start. The industry has pretty well demonstrated a desire to reduce air pollution, and some impressive gains have been made already. Now is not the time to ride roughshod over an industry that is as big, as important and as widespread as any in this nation.

Education, rather than fines and penalties, will help clean the air. We think the EPA should be spending its energy (and our tax dollars) right now in getting out to trade shows, contacting publications and gaining access to the people in the business through trade associations and meetings. We should be (and would like to be) publishing dates and times of regional seminars conducted by the EPA to answer the many questions that shop owners have about servicing emissions systems and components. We believe the industry sincerely wants to do what is right. The EPA should give it the opportunity.

If the real goal is clean air rather than cleaning out the bank accounts of honest, hard-working shop owners, then let's call a halt to this avalanche of fines and penalties. Let's get the EPA enthused about getting out of Washington and into the countryside—with seminars instead of shotguns.

TRIBUTE TO DERRALD SWANSON

HON. RONALD V. DELLUMS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to give tribute to a true American hero, Derrald Swanson.

On July 29, 1989, Derrald unselfishly sacrificed his own life in an attempt to save a drowing friend. This heroic attempt is indicative of Derrald's caring for others and the character of his humanitarian spirit.

Derrald was born in San Francisco, CA., August 15, 1951, to John and Margaret. He received his Christian baptism on January 27, 1963 and was a faithful member of the Church of All Faiths, located in Oakland, CA. In his Christian life, he was active in young adult activities, a youth usher, and a willing volunteer in various church functions and festivities. As an Oakland resident, Derrald attended Oakland public schools and graduated from Oakland Technical High School in June 1969. Later he attended Laney Junior College where he received his Associate Arts Degree in Sociology. In 1972, he joined and served in the U.S. Army actively for 4 years.

On December 2, 1972, he was joined in holy matrimony with Brenda Joyce Smith. From this union came two sons, Dondrell and Brandon. They remained together as a family until his departure. He leaves to cherish his memory his wife, Brenda, sons, Dondrell, Brandon, LaDrue, his mother, Margaret Lucien, father John Swanson, stepfather, Stanley Lucien, grandparents, Bishop and Mrs. Archie Swanson, brothers, Sandré, Terry, Carlton, Keith, sisters, Belinda, Valerie, and a host of other relatives and loving friends.

Derrald leaves a celebrated life of 37 years—one of caring, sharing, and expressions of love.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for this opportunity to share with the people of the 8th Congressional District, and the Nation, this special tribute to Derrald Swanson, one of our outstanding citizens.

KIWANIS INTERNATIONAL HELPING TO BUILD A DRUG-FREE WORLD

HON. C. CHRISTOPHER COX

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege today to ask my colleagues to recognize the efforts of Kiwanis International to fight drug abuse.

We grow increasingly aware of the scourge of drugs in our Nation and around the world. Moving testimony here on Capitol Hill, tours of neighborhoods destroyed by drugs, and the horror stories of babies born addicted to harmful narcotics, tell us of the tragedy drugs bring.

This Congress has declared war on drugs and has backed tougher laws to fight drug use and drug pushers. But no government can alone win the war on drugs. It is an informed and committed citizenry that will turn the tide of battle and win that war.

That is why I am pleased to share with my colleagues the tremendous efforts of Kiwanis International to combat drug abuse.

Recognized for its far-sighted drug abuse treatment programs with a Private Sector Initiative Award from the White House in 1987, Kiwanis International has now reaffirmed its commitment to fight drug abuse with a resolution adopted at the 74th Annual Convention of Kiwanis International. The language of this important resolution is a guide for the efforts of all who soldier in this war:

BUILD A DRUG-FREE WORLD

Drugs harmful to health pose one of the greatest threats to our existence. Each year, countless thousands of persons worldwide are adversely affected by or die in drug-related incidents. As to our youth—each nation's most precious resource—drug abuse interferes with learning, alters personality, and injures health. For unfortunate infants born to mothers using harmful drugs, life begins with the torturous pain of drug withdrawal and possible permanent disabilities. Family life suffers when any member becomes addicted. For all persons, standards of living decrease as employee absenteeisms and poor workmanship increase the cost of all consumer products. Illicit drugs are closely tied to crimes and other illegal activities. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That; each Kiwanian and Kiwanis club help build a drug-free world and join the battle to prevent the use of harmful, illegal, or addictive drugs by developing and/or promoting programs which:

1. Prevent drug experimentation and abuse.

2. Increase, through community education, the awareness of the dangers of drug use and abuse.

3. Focus public attention on the importance of fostering a widespread attitude of intolerance for harmful, illegal, or addictive drugs and their use throughout all segments of society.

4. Examine and emphasize the essential roles and responsibilities of youth, parents, family, spiritual communities, schools, governments, and society in the prevention of the basic causes of drug abuse and in the provision for successful treatments.

Mr. Speaker, the efforts of Kiwanis International deserve our recognition and support. As we honor this outstanding group here today, we should use this occasion to reaffirm our own commitment to work with groups such as Kiwanis in pursuit of a truly drug-free world. I thank the Kiwanis for providing us with this opportunity and ask my colleagues to join me in supporting their outstanding efforts.

MANOMET VILLAGE CELEBRATES 350TH BIRTHDAY

HON. GERRY E. STUDDS

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I want to extend my very best wishes to the people of Manomet Village as we celebrate the village's 350th birthday.

The 17th century surveyors sent by Governor Bradford along the Indian trails surrounding Plymouth plantation could not possibly have envisioned the community which would flourish here 300 years later. Exploration led the courageous Plymouth settlers to establish their first trading post at the mouth of the river, and to name their village with an Indian word meaning "the trail of the burden carriers." Today, the Aptucxet Trading Post, a replica of that first post constructed on the original foundation, serves as apt reminder of Manomet's origins.

Nothing boosts our capacity and courage to confront new challenges like the knowledge that those who preceded us also braved—and somehow survived—their own hardships.

Manomet's legacy is rooted in a vibrant history of local people, events and ideas evolving for 350 years—a heritage of which we can all be very proud indeed.

It is with this pride and pleasure that we today salute the past—and future—of Manomet Village. All the best.

RETIREMENT OF REAR ADM. BENNETT S. "BUD" SPARKS

HON. HOWARD COBLE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, as a former member of the U.S. Coast Guard and U.S. Coast Guard Reserve, it is my pleasure and honor to recognize a fellow "Coasty" as he retires from service to his country. His name is Rear Adm. Bennett S. "Bud" Sparks. He is a friend of mine, and his is a story worth telling.

Bud Sparks joined the Coast Guard Reserve on December 14, 1942, with the rank of E–1. When he retired on July 8, 1989, he had obtained the rank of O–8. In 46 years of service to the United States, Bud Sparks was a leader. During his distinguished career, he rose from enlisted man to rear admiral. Bud Sparks was the first/last Coast Guard Reserve commodore and the first Coast Guard national president of the Reserve Officers Association.

He has seen how the Coast Guard has evolved over the years. In an interview with the Mariner magazine Bud Sparks remarked:

When I first joined, our nation was at war. The Coast Guard was a key player in that war effort, hunting enemy subs, landing soldiers and marines on hostile beaches, transporting troops to the scene of battle, and other such duties. Today, the Coast Guard clearly is still one of this nation's five armed forces. While military readiness is regaining its importance, we are engaged in a war to enhance safety. Yes, the Coast Guard is a tool of the nation and responds as Congress dictates. As a multi-mission service, we stand ready to meet any new challenges. I only wish the Congress would fund our service to the level of activity Congress mandates.

Bud, I could not agree with you more. My mission in Congress is to see that the Coast Guard receives its fair share of our national budget. If we are requiring the Coast Guard to perform more and more duties, we must provide the necessary funds to do the job right.

In addition to an outstanding Coast Guard career, Bud managed to build a family-owned import/export business. He accomplished all of this with the able assistance of his wife Betty. Bud and Betty Sparks reared six fine children, and they did this because in the words of Bud Sparks, "My wife and I are a team. We work together and most often, commit to the same tasks."

On his retirement from the U.S. Coast Guard Reserve team, I extend my best wishes to Rear Adm. Bennett S. "Bud" Sparks. Thanks for 46 outstanding years of service to the Coast Guard and the Nation.

NATIONAL GLAUCOMA AWARENESS WEEK

HON. DOUG WALGREN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, today Mr. MADIGAN, Mr. LELAND, and Mr. WHITTAKER and I am introducing a joint resolution designating the week of November 12 to 18, 1989, as "National Glaucoma Awareness Week." Through this resolution, we hope to bring attention to the need for early prevention treatment of this very common disease.

Approximately 2 million individuals in the United States have glaucoma and at least 50 percent of these individuals are unaware of it. Because glaucoma can be detected by a routine eye examination, increasing public awareness of the disease can help to reduce the chance of the tragic onset of blindness which is so often the consequence of this disease.

Glaucoma is the second leading cause of blindness in the United States and the leading cause of blindness among black Americans. In addition, the elderly, those with diabetes, and those with a family history of the disease are at an especially high risk of contracting the disease. Eighty thousand individuals in the United States are already blind from glaucoma and 5 to 10 million Americans have undiagnosed and elevated intraocular pressure which puts them at a high risk of developing glaucoma.

Damage to the eye from glaucoma is progressive and there is no cure. For this reason, early detection treatment is important. The earlier the disease is recognized, the more easily it can be treated and controlled. It is our hope that through "National Glaucoma Awareness Week" public understanding of this disease can be increased. We must devote more resources to finding a cure and we must educate those at risk about the danger of glaucoma and the need for regular examinations.

I hope that my colleagues will support us in the effort to pass this resolution.

FIESTA EDUCATIVA HONORS RAUL VARGAS

HON. ESTEBAN EDWARD TORRES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize a very special individual, Mr. Raul Vargas, executive director of the Office for Mexican American Programs at the University of Southern California [USC]. Raul will be honored for his dedication to improving the quality of education for all Hispanics by "Fiesta Educativa," a national community based organization, on Thursday, August 10, 1989.

An executive director of the Office of Mexican-American Programs at USC, Raul Vargas has been instrumental in helping Hispanic students finance their college education at USC. In 1974, Raul, along with eight USC alumni, founded the USC Mexican American Alumni Association, [MAAA]. The USC MAAA was established as a vehicle to provide scholarship assistance to undergraduate Hispanic students at USC. Since then, the organization has awarded more than 2,000 scholarships, totaling $2.4 million. In addition to the undergraduate scholarship program, the MAAA funds four medical school students in a joint venture with the USC School of Medicine and National Medical Enterprise. Currently, MAAA is involved in a campaign to raise $1 million for the USC MAAA Endowment Fund.

Raul was born in Miami, AZ. He attended Arizona State University and has done graduate work at California State University at Los Angeles and at USC. He is married and resides in Upland with his wife, Marcia and their two children, Tracle a senior at USC, and Cesar a sophomore at USC. Raul has taught at the junior high and high school levels and prior to this position at USC he was director of the Manpower Program for the Rio Hondo Areas Action Council.

Raul Vargas is a dedicated community servant with membership in many organizations such as the Variety Boys and Girls Club, and serves on the scholarship committees for the Montebello Town Center, the East Los Angeles Community Union, the USC Skull and Dagger Society, and is a staff advisor to the USC Latino Business Student Association. In addition, Raul has received many honors including, the National Hispanic Scholarship Fund "Hispanic of the Year Award," the National Network of Hispanic Women Leadership Award, the Mexican American Opportunity Foundation Aztec Award and the Society of Hispanic Professional Engineers' Hispanic of the Year Award.

Raul's genuine commitment to improving the quality of education for Hispanic youth motivated him to support the development of Fiesta Educativa, a community group dedicated to assisting Latinos with special developmental needs and their families. Through his efforts, Fiesta Educativa has enjoyed a strengthened relationship with the University of Southern California. Fiesta Educativa, will honor Raul Vargas for his outstanding contributions at a special dinner and roast on Thursday, August 10, 1989 in Glendale, CA.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in saluting Raul Vargas for his notable record of leadership and service to the educational needs of the Hispanic community and USC.

ITALIAN-AMERICAN HERITAGE AND CULTURE MONTH, OCTOBER 1989

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, today, along with 79 of my colleagues, I will introduce legislation which will designate October 1989 as "Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month".

Over 20 million American citizens make up the Italian-American community, representing one of the largest ethnic groups in the United States. They are not unlike millions of others who have journeyed great distances to reach America, to start a new life, a better life. This has been a common dream throughout the history of this great country of ours.

Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month will focus attention on the great contributions and accomplishments that Italians and Italian-Americans have made in all aspects of life in the United States.

Italian-American organizations throughout the United States greatly contribute to the prosperity and progress of our Nation on a yearly basis. Many of these groups throughout the Nation are planning special events during October to commemorate these great men and women, and educate the public of their accomplishments.

I am proud to be the author of this legislation and urge my colleagues to join me in designating October 1989 as "Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month."

JACK LEAHY, VETERAN NEWSPAPERMAN, RETIRES

HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, Jack Leahy, a good friend of mine for over 15 years, recently retired from the newspaper business after a distinguished 47 years in the profession. An avid reader of Jack's articles, I have always enjoyed his valuable insights, crisp reporting, and no-nonsense approach to public policy issues.

Jack has been a dedicated journalist; deeply committed to accuracy, fairness, and above all, to the truth. A family man who is one of the pillars of the Catholic Church in the Diocese of Trenton, Jack has given incalculable hours in the service to others.

I ask my collegues to take a few minutes to read the excellent article by Jim Lowney in the Irish Echo which highlights just a few of this man's accomplishments.

VETERAN NEWSMAN RETIRES—BUT NOT COMPLETELY

(By Jim Lowney)

TRENTON, NJ.—Veteran newspaperman John M. "Jack" Leahy has been behind a typewriter, and lately, a computer terminal, for 47 years. And after he steps down this month as news editor of The Monitor, the Trenton Catholic Diocesan publication, he still expects to be writing.

I'll remain active in the Right to Life program and will be doing freelance writing and will be a correspondent for the Monitor," said Leahy, a native of Union City, N.J.

The newsman said his venture into journalism was brought about more by World War II rather than by a boyhood dream.

"When I got out of high school in 1941 I was 17 and there were no jobs except those in defense work and you had to be 18 years old. So I wound up being an office boy and "gofer" for $12 a week at the Hudson Dispatch," recalled Leahy.

Soon a well respected newspaperman, A. Bruce Cook, who was managing editor of the Dispatch, took Leahy under his wing and began to teach him the fine points of newswriting.

"He would take short pieces that had already been in the paper and have me rewrite them as practice. He was a great teacher. You could make a mistake once, but if you made the same one the second time you were nailed to the wall," remembered Leahy with a chuckle.

Leahy ultimately served as an assistant deskman and then as rewriteman for the newspaper. His career was interrupted for Army service in World War II and again during the Korean War. He was originally assigned to England with the U.S. Army Air Corps' Eighth Air Force and returned to Europe while serving with the Air Force during the Korean War.

The excitement of covering breaking news in busy Hudson County towns is still not forgotten by Leahy.

"I first covered the town of Secaucus with an old time reporter Newell Davis, who later worked for the Newark News."

After returning from military service, Leahy was assigned to covering Weehawken and half of Union City.

"Anything that happened in that area I covered—from obituaries to fires and local political clubs," he recalled.

Leahy left the Dispatch and joined the Monitor in December of 1956. Under the direction of retired Bishop of Trenton George Ahr, Vincent Weiss, the first editor, Leahy covered the church, school and hospital news of a six-county area of Central New Jersey.

"It was originally a broadsheet but like many other weekly newspapers it was converted to a tabloid size several years ago," mentioned Leahy.

For almost 30 years, Leahy has been active in the Ancient Order of Hibernians. He first joined Hudson County Division 2 in 1950 and later transferred to Msgr. Crean Division 1, in Hamilton Township, a Trenton suburb, where Leahy lives. He was division president from 1965 to 1966 and served as New Jersey state president from 1976 to 1978.

The newsman served as editor of the New Jersey Hibernian, a fraternal newspaper, for 10 years and in 1968 through 1970 when Montclair-resident Michael L. Delahunty served as AOH national president, he was editor of the National Hibernian Digest.

At the moment Leahy is recording secretary of his local division and is New Jersey chairman of Pro-Life activities.

The newspaperman has also dedicated countless hours to veteran organizations over the years. He has held offices on the local, state and national level of the Catholic War Veterans of the United States. He is a member and first vice commander of Holy Cross Post 417, Trenton and a member of Hamilton Township Post 3525, Veterans of Foreign Wars.

In other activities, Leahy is a member of the Catholic Press Association. Moreover, he is a charter member of the Diocesan Pastoral Council, serves on the Trenton Diocese Respect Life Committee and is the Respect for Life chairman on the Pastoral Council of Holy Angels Church, Trenton. In addition he serves as a lector and Eucharistic minister to the sick.

Jack Leahy, whose grandparents emigrated from County Cork, is married to the former Mary K. Downey, a native of Mount Bellew, Co. Galway. Mary retired in March from St. Francis Medical Center in Trenton, after more than 42 years of nursing service.

The Leahys have four children: Catherine Bowen, of Lawrenceville, N.J., Capt. Kevin M. Leahy, a Marine Corps officer at Camp Pendleton, Calif., Brian T. Leahy, of Yardville, N.J. and Patricia A. Leahy, at home. The Leahy's also boast five grandchildren.

We spent a pleasant afternoon recently with Jack and Mary at Bill Sweeney's homey restaurant on South Broad St., in the Garden State capital. They talked mostly about a planned trip.

There was little talk from Jack about slowing down. We got the feeling that the days ahead will be just as busy as the ones behind Jack Leahy, a dedicated journalist, an outstanding Catholic layman and an admirable Irishman.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. BRIAN J. DONNELLY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, due to the fact that I had to attend a funeral for a dear friend in Boston, and because of the unusual delay in the floor proceedings, I was unable to cast my vote against the savings and loan legislation.

Were I present, I would have cast a nay vote as I did on the last two occasions on this legislation. Quite simply, Mr. Speaker, this legislation is flawed and filled with provisions that are injurious to the taxpayers in my State.

THE INTRODUCTION OF THE RECYCLING EXISTING ASSETS FOR COST-EFFECTIVE HOUSING ACT OF 1989

HON. BRUCE F. VENTO

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that will address two problems that are inextricably related. This legislation, the Recycling Existing Assets for Cost-Effective Housing Act of 1989 [REACH], will help provide housing opportunities to low- to moderate-income people while assisting Federal Government agencies or affiliated agencies in disposing of the thousands of foreclosed properties that are standing empty month after month.

According to recent estimates, over 107,000 single-family properties are being held by FSLIC, FDIC, Farmers Home, the VA, FHA, Fannie Mae, and Freddie Mac. This is in addition to hundreds of multifamily properties, thousands of farms, and millions of acres of farmland. Estimated values of this property range from $50 to $100 billion. This property is a cornucopia of rental and ownership opportunities for affordable housing. This property represents assets that would be better used if it were filled with people, rather than closed and covered with boards. This property should be recycled into homes for people.

The REACH Act of 1989 will authorize $300 million in fiscal years 1990 and 1991 for the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development to make grants on a fair share basis to the State housing finance agencies. The housing finance agencies will establish revolving funds to make grants and loans to assist low- and moderate-income homebuyers and renters. All Federal funds would be maximized through a dollar-for-dollar matching requirement, thereby doubling funds at the outset.

Through the revolving fund, the agencies would make grants to nonprofits, public housing authorities, and local governments for the development and rehabilitation of multifamily rental housing. The developing entities would also be eligible for loans, at reduced interest rates, for the purchase of the multifamily properties. The properties must have an occupancy of more than 50 percent low- to moderate-income renters in order to qualify. Loans from the revolving funds would also be made to low- to moderate-income homebuyers of single-family properties with a preference for first-time homebuyers and lower income homebuyers. In order to ensure that this housing would continue to provide affordable housing rather than merely serving as a short-term investment vehicle, conveyance of property within 5 years would force some repayment of the grants, or the repayment of loans plus interest and penalties.

Properties eligible under REACH would include but not be limited to those held by FSLIC, the FDIC, FHA, and VA. They would be listed with the Secretary of HUD and updated on at least a monthly basis. Listings would be provided upon request to interested State housing finance agencies and other units of local government.

Mr. Speaker, this program will reach out for the lemons and make lemonade. The REACH Act of 1989 will provide needed revenues both to the Federal Government and to individual Americans who are desperately in need of affordable housing. This legislation will reach the needs of our Nation by providing the bridge to reach from the asset disposition process of agencies to housing ownership for our citizens. I ask my colleagues to join me in supporting, sponsoring, and enacting the REACH Program.

NATIONAL SECURITY, MILITARY STRENGTH, AND ECONOMIC STRENGTH

HON. JOLENE UNSOELD

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mrs. UNSOELD. Mr. Speaker, my position on defense comes down to one very simple principle; peace and strength for America. There are those who claim that we must choose either peace or strength as if the two were mutually exclusive and not, as is the truth, mutually dependent. The American people don't want to choose. They want both.

We know that we must have the defense we need at a cost we can afford. We know that we must have nuclear and conventional forces that are strong enough to deter attack from anyone. We know that we must make ourselves secure not only from nuclear war, but from the use of even a single nuclear weapon by anyone—including terrorists.

Real national security requires both military strength and economic strength. Our daily sense of personal security depends on the health and prosperity of our economy in relation to our family. Our ability to sustain an effective defense and our stature in the world depends on the strength of our economy.

Economic strength is our strongest bargaining lever, whether in arms discussions or trade negotiations or diplomatic discussions. That leverage is at the heart of what makes us a major power in the world today—the economic strength to provide sufficient resources to meet our military needs, but also to feed and clothe and care for our American people. That is what national security is all about—achieving that balance between defense and domestic needs. Soveit President Gorbachev is currently attempting to come to terms with this reality as he tries to choose between a Blackjack bomber and feeding starving coal miners.

As it was so eloquently pointed out by the distinguished gentleman from California, the chairman of the Budget Committee, our greatest weakness as we approach the next decade is not our military arsenal. It is a serious lack of resources—a tremendous debt which is undermining our economy, and worst of all, it is the lack of political courage to make tough choices when it comes to taxes, entitlements, and defense.

In line with these tough choices, I would like to express my concern about the continued support for the strategic defense initiative. Mr. Speaker, I believe SDI, also known as star wars, would not provide our Nation one iota of protection from nuclear attack and would require an expenditure of resources we cannot afford.

It is estimated that SDI would cost the United States between $249 and $452 billion over 10 years. The House Armed Service Committee calculates that the same amount of money could buy: First, as many as 32 aircraft carrier battle groups—including carriers, destroyers, fuel ships, and all other support craft; Second, 49–90 modern armored division; or third, 62–113 F–13 fighter wings—of 3 squadrons each. Given America's staggering budget deficit, common sense tells us that we should not spend such gross amounts of money on fundamentally flawed and unrealistic projects like SDI. Given Soviet superiority in conventional weaponry in Europe, our Nation's defense can be made much more secure with less money by investing in conventional weapons.

Recognizing that America can no longer afford to spend money it doesn't have, Secretary of Defense Cheney cut the administration's budget request for SDI funding from $40 to $33 billion over the next 5 years, an average of almost $7 billion per year. That cut is not large enough. I believe much less money is sufficient for this experimental research program. I support funding at a level which would help us to maintain, and perhaps extend, our technological lead and may eventually yield a technologically and economically feasible, nonthreatening defense. Also, continued research may promote further technological spinoffs, as it has in the areas of computers and sensors, of both military and economic benefit.

President Reagan portrayed SDI as "a defensive system that would make it virtually impossible for nuclear missiles to get through." But numerous experts, including many from the former President's own party, have questioned whether a space-based missile defense shield would, in fact, be workable. On NBC's "Today Show" last March, former Congressman, now Secretary of Defense Richard Cheney said, "If you think about it in those terms, it's going to be a remote proposition."

Proponents of SDI claim that the Soviet Union is deploying its own star wars shield and is even ahead of the United States in developing the necessary technology. These concerns are unwarranted. In developing new technologies for missile defense, the Soviets lag far behind the United States, and it would only be in the next century that they could deploy their own missile defense system.

The United States remain 10 years ahead of the Soviets in computer and sensor technologies, which are the keys to space-based weapons. Particularly significant is the area of infrared sensors, which are useful for both surveillance and weapons guidance. Since the early 1970's, the United States has had global infrared satellite coverage. The Soviets still do not have such coverage. We also have infrared antisatellite and ABM weapons, which the Soviets do not. Also, statistics stating that the Soviets are pouring more money into lasers than we are misleading, because such figures represent the entire Soviet budget for lasers of all types, not simply those for a star wars system.

The Soviets continue to work on lasers that the United States military abandoned long ago. And while it is true that the Soviets will, after 11 years, complete an antimissile defense system around Moscow this year consisting of 100 interceptors, that system is allowed under the Anti-Ballistic Missile [ABM] Treaty of 1972. Last year Lawrence Woodruff, Deputy Undersecretary of Defense under President Reagan, said, "The Soviets have been developing their Moscow defenses for over 10 years at costs of billions of dollars. For much less expense we believe we can penetrate these defenses with a small number of Minuteman missiles equipped with highly effective chaff and decoys." In other words, we already have the technology to overcome their defenses.

There are other compelling reasons why we should not forge ahead with SDI. Investing heavily in SDI will propel the arms race to dizzying new levels and into space. As President Bush's National Security Advisor Brent Scowcroft said, deploying phase I of SDI "would enhance deterrence only in the sense that it would force a very heavy attack" by the Soviets. That is, the Soviets could overwhelm SDI simply by building and launching more missiles. And It would give them the incentive to do so. Clearly, deploying SDI will not make America or the world safer.

In the long run, a vigorous and expanding economy, a productive and well-educated work force, development of important technologies, stable and effective alliances and other nonmilitary factors will contribute more to our real security than trying to beat the Soviets on every front of the arms race. The United States needs a lean, strong military. And at a time of billion dollar budget deficits, it is especially important that we get the most for our defense dollars. To do this, we also need to develop a coherent defense policy in keeping with a realistic determination of our defense commitments.

As one analyst recently put it, Mr. Speaker, "the patron saints of star wars are now out of Washington." Now we can get down to the business of defending our great Nation realistically, both militarily and economically. The United States of America now has the opportunity and the strength to lead the world to peace and prosperity, and I believe the world is looking to us for this leadership. Cutting money from pie in the sky, unaffordable and destabilizing projects such as the strategic defense initiative will demonstrate to the world that we have the intelligence, character, confidence and desire as well to reach these goals. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

INTRODUCTION OF GOVERNMENT CHECK-CASHING AND BASIC BANKING LEGISLATION

HON. RICHARD H. LEHMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation which would address the need for both basic banking accounts and Government check-cashing services.

These consumer proposals with relation to access to financial services have been circulating for serveral years. Time and again both the House and the Senate have tried to fashion a compromise on these issues. The House came very close last year when it included provisions in its version of the expanded bank powers legislation, H.R. 5094, that would have required these services. Because this measure never went to conference, we did not have an opportunity to work out an agreement with the Senate with regard to the consumer provisions.

On the Senate side, Senator METZENBAUM has been instrumental in advocating these financial services, and was successful in requesting a GAO report on Government check-cashing issues in the 1987 CEBA bill. That report reinforced the need to have check-cashing legislation implemented. This year his efforts were successful in bringing about hearings on this subject before the Senate Banking Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs chaired by Senator DIXON. The legislation he has introduced, S. 906 and S. 907, is a reflection of the carefully-structured compromise worked out in H.R. 5094 with the cooperation of both consumer and financial industry respresentatives.

As the new chairman of the House Banking Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs and Coinage, I believe the lack of basic financial services has long been neglected, and I share Senator METZENBAUM's concern that these issues need to be addressed. That is why I have joined him today in introducing companion legislation in the House that would require both check-cashing services and basic checking accounts.

I believe this legislation is necessary for several reasons. In light of the savings and loan bailout currently being considered and the burden it is placing on the taxpayer, this is an appropriate time to reflect on what the financial institutions are giving back to the taxpayer. There has been a growing trend in the banking industry to neglect the needs of lower income and elderly customers and pursue more profitable services benefiting the affluent. Basic banking services were once the mainstay of the banking industry, but they have gradually been replaced by more sophisticated, high return products. What was once a system based on small, community-oriented institutions has become a nationwide operation offering a wide range of services, each more innovative and far-reaching than the last.

What has been lost is the ability of the consumer with simple needs to find the affordable banking services he requires. Those who simply desire to cash a Government check have resorted to expensive check-cashing outlets. Those who only want to keep their limited funds in a safe place at an affordable price have reverted to stuffing their mattress as a less costly alternative. Minimum balances, costly fees, and inconvenient access have all contributed to driving the senior citizen and lower income consumer away from the financial market.

Banks, while having legitimate concerns on the implementation of this legislation, have the option of two approaches. Either they can criticize the intricacies of the bill, or they can perceive the possibilities of an untapped market. While many financial representatives argue that direct deposit of Government checks is enough to provide low-income consumers access to the banks, this is an undeveloped and relatively untested service. In addition, direct deposit faces resistence from those who receive Government checks because of limited access to banks and a basic distrust of the institutions themselves. The focus in the short term should be on how to bring those disinfranchised from the financial market back into the circle. If, in the long term, direct deposit can assist in this effort, it should be developed as a viable option.

Statistics differ on this issue, but clear evidence exists which indicates lower income individuals do not take advantage of bank accounts either because they do not have ready access or they do not feel the amount justifies the cost. Without an account relationship, the ability to cash checks is limited to grocery stores, liquor stores, and Government check cashing centers at a cost of $7 or more per check. While senior citizens have less of a problem, the limited income of many reduces their ability to participate as well. Without a safe and secure place to deposit their money, many are victims of fraud and theft.

Both sides of the issue need to be evaluated in bringing this legislation to fruition. I have planned hearings on October 5 which will give both supporters and opponents of basic banking the opportunity to present their views. The bills I am introducing will serve as a stepping-stone from which to work, so sufficient progress can be made in this Congress to have this legislation passed.

RHETORIC NOT ENOUGH IN DEALING WITH TENSION

HON. NICHOLAS MAVROULES

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my utter exasperation with this latest act of terrorism—I am speaking, of course, of the murder of Colonel Higgins by Iranian-backed terrorists.

I traveled to Beirut in 1983, and I witnessed firsthand the death and destruction caused by the vicious terrorist bombing at our Marine barracks in Lebanon. We, as a nation, must settle on a strict policy of zero tolerance when it comes to acts of international violence. We cannot allow those with anti-American agendas to act with impunity, and secure from consequences.

I call upon the free world to unite in opposition to these deplorable terrorist acts, and I speak for unity of action—not of empty rhetoric. As an international community we must not shy away from the use of force, for terrorists understand one language, and one alone—and that is their own.

It is imperative that as a nation and as an international community we act and act decisively.

COL. NICK ROWE: AN AMERICAN HERO

HON. DON RITTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, America and its youth are struggling with the terrible scourge of drugs. Now more than ever, the youth of America need role models that embody self-discipline, self-sacrifice, and courage. Some of the heroes that have appeared in American popular culture in the past several decades have had a negative impact upon our society. It is time the American people stood up and unveiled the facade of these "heroes" who damage our youth and our society. Too often we have ignored those who are truly worthy of honor—the unsung heroes who have sacrificed for the good of their community and their country.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to bring to the attention of my colleagues an important editorial by Stephen T. Banko entitled "Two Kinds of American Hero"—which appeared in the Wall Street Journal on July 5, 1989. It is an incredible testimony to Col. Nick Rowe—who dedicated his life to his family and his country.

Mr. Speaker, America owes a lot to people like Nick Rowe. It has been said that there is no greater love than when one lays down his life for another—Nick Rowe paid that price. It's time American rediscovered its real heroes.

TWO KINDS OF AMERICAN HERO

(By Stephen T. Banko III)

The final democracy of death has provided two departed souls with eternal equality in recent months. One was the worlds's oldest Yippie, Abbie Hoffman. The other was Col. James Nicholas Rowe, who spent five years in a North Vietnamese prison camp.

Mr. Hoffman died by his own hand and attracted a ream of newsprint attention and miles of videotaped eulogies on television stations across the country. The media's fascination with Mr. Hoffman was a result, no doubt, of Mr. Hoffman's fascination with the media.

And when he died of a drug overdose earlier this year, he was recalled by Mike Royko of the Chicago Tribune as a loveable guy—something akin to the playful puppy who is nice to pet but still does dirt on your best oriental rug. Mr. Royko said that Mr. Hoffman was just having a little fun with America, just joshing and tweaking the country's collective nose with his outrageous behavior. Mr. Royko said the nation would sorely miss Abbie.

But not every nose in America in those crazy days needed tweaking. A lot of 17-year and 18-year noses needed wiping and other Americans went to Vietnam to take care of that chore.

One of them was Col. Rowe. In pre-'60s America, Col. Rowe might have been considered a hero. He graduated from West Point, became one the nation's elite Special Forces and went to Vietnam as an adviser in 1963. He was in Vietnam for three months when he was captured by the Viet Cong after a ferocious firefight. He spent the next five years in prison camps, coping with starvation, disease, torture and thirst—23 of those months in complete isolation. While Mr. Hoffman was immortalized in a box with a 21-inch screen, Col. Rowe was confined in a bamboo cage, three feet by four feet by six feet. Delicacies were the meat he could capture in the form of rats and snakes that ventured too close to his cage. Three of his comrades died of starvation while in captivity.

But worse than the physical isolation of the prison routine was the emotional isolation inflicted by Col. Rowe's captors. They showed him newpaper photographs of teenagers burning the American flag in the shadow of the Washington Monument and college campuses sporting the flag of the Viet Cong.

He escaped three times, only to be recaptured. After each failed attempt, he was severely beaten in retribution. Finally, on his way to his own execution on New Year's Eve, 1968, Col. Rowe escaped when the execution detail was surprised by a flight of American helicopters.

Nick Rowe was an intense, soft-spoken man of firm convictions. None of those convictions were stronger than his love of his country. His years of captivity and deprivation had not robbed him of his sense of humor. In 1983, speaking at a Vietnam veterans luncheon in Buffalo, N.Y., Col. Rowe was served rice.

"Could I speak with the man responsible for today's menu?" he asked, flashing his affable Texas grin. "I want to know if he worked a POW camp in Phuoc Long."

Col. Rowe's speech that day never made the nightly news. Perhaps it was his subject matter. For he spoke not of hate or war or killing, but of love: love of country, love of God, and love of his comrades-in-arms. He spoke in hushed tones about suffering and the price of his love. He spoke with a deep conviction and quiet confidence that radiated through the packed room. Anyone there that day in 1983 knew he was in the company of a true hero; not the comic book, hyperbolized heroism of Rambo and Norris and Schwartzenegger, but heroism in the tradition of real people with real feelings and real courage.

On April 21 of this year Philippine communists did what Vietnamese communists had been unable to do: They killed Nick Rowe, assassinating him as he drove to work, still on active duty.

Abby Hoffman and Nick Rowe; two men on two different paths; one to fame and fortune and the other to duty and sacrifice. One death stylized in print and videotape, the other death commemorated by the mournful notes to "Taps" at Arlington National Cemetery. It's strange how we pick our heroes.

NEW FEDERAL JUDICIAL DISTRICT

HON. WILLIAM E. DANNEMEYER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce a bill today on behalf of myself, and my California colleagues Mr. BROWN, Mr. COX, Mr. DORNAN, Mr. LEWIS, Mr. MCCANDLESS, and Mr. PACKARD to create a new Federal judicial district in California comprised of Orange, Riverside, and San Bernardino Counties. The new western district would be seated in Santa Ana, while the central district which formerly contained these counties would continue to be seated in Los Angeles.

The central district currently covers a massive 39,921 square miles and serves over 13 million people. It is inequitable and unfair that the growing and thriving areas included in the proposed western district continue to be a part of this huge central district. In fact, the tricounty area contains 4.2 million people while the average Federal court district contains only 2.4 million people. Additionally, the tricounty area that would comprise the proposed western district has experienced a nearly 70-percent increase in population since 1970.

The caseload in the current central district is currently ranked amongst the top four districts in the country for every meaningful category according to the "Annual Report of the Administrative Office of the United States" (1988). The central district bears the single heaviest caseload in the Nation in such categories as civil cases commenced, U.S. civil case pending, and civil cases terminated.

Another important consideration in this issue is the convenience of access to the courts for jurors, witnesses, litigants, and lawyers. Valuable time and resources are being wasted commuting to and from Los Angeles on the congested freeways in southern California.

Fair and easy access to the Federal courts in the tricounty area is a concept that is long overdue to become a reality. The Constitution vests in Congress the power to establish and determine the jurisdiction of lower Federal courts. As Members of Congress whose constituents have been adversely affected by the present district court structure, the sponsors of this legislation believe it is our responsibility to take the initiative and secure passage of this legislation. Any other solution is merely a stopgap.

INTRODUCTION OF DEBT EXCHANGE AND BORDER DEVELOPMENT WITH MEXICO

HON. JIM BATES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the United States-Mexico Debt Exchange and Border Development Act of 1989, an important legislative initiative to assist in debt reduction and border improvements for Mexico.

With the announcement of the Brady plan and supportive statements by President Bush, our Government sparked the recent debt agreement between Mexico and its private creditors. While our Government's words of encouragement have resulted in a reduction of Mexico's debt burden to commercial banks, we must demonstrate our true commitment to a resolution of the debt crisis through actions to restructure Mexico's public debt to the United States Government.

Debt reduction alone, however, is not the answer. We have the ability to restructure it to promote development and environmental preservation in an area of tremendous concern to Americans: the United States-Mexico border. With these goals in mind, I am introducing the United States-Mexico Debt Exchange and Border Development Act of 1989.

Mexico's economic difficulties are primary causes of recent population increases in border communities, as well as the immigration of Mexican citizens into our country. In addition to the annual legal immigration of 50 to 60,000 Mexicans to the United States, about 1 million undocumented Mexican immigrants cross the border each year. In recent years, these population increases and flows of immigrants have hindered the ability of public services and facilities in border regions to provide needed and effective assistance to communities.

Our Government must demonstrate true leadership in the effort to address the Mexican debt, while alleviating problems along the United States-Mexico border. The Government of Mexico currently owes our Government approximately $2 billion. While this is a small amount in comparison to Mexico's total external debt of over $100 billion, its significance as an obligation to a government committed to resolving the debt crisis should not be underestimated.

In light of this situation, I am introducing the United States-Mexico Debt Exchange and Border Development Act of 1989, in order to relieve a portion of the Mexican debt to the United States Government, while simultaneously promoting development in communities along the United States-Mexico border. This legislation authorizes debt-for-development swaps, which would permit Mexican repayments due on United States loans to be redirected to development activities in the vicinity of the United States-Mexico border. It would also permit debt forgiveness, allowing amounts less than which would otherwise consist of debt repayments to be used for these development activities.

Through such a debt swap mechanism, our Government could assist in relieving the Mexican debt burden while improving conditions in border regions. These improvements could be targeted toward environmental improvements, public health needs, community development projects, and other necessary programs.

This legislation would also authorize the use of economic assistance funds for grants to nongovernmental organizations. These grants would be authorized for the purchase of debt obligations owed by the Government of Mexico to commercial lending institutions, and for the cancellation of such debt in exchange for Mexico making available assets or policy commitments to promote development or preservation projects along the United States-Mexico border.

On August 6, the United States-Mexico Binational Commission, chaired by Secretary of State James Baker and his counterpart in the Mexican Government, will meet to discuss a number of bilateral issues, most significantly the debt question and border issues. In anticipation of this meeting, I have asked the Secretary of State to use the mechanisms proposed in the United States-Mexico Debt Exchange and Border Development Act of 1989 as a vehicle for debt reduction and border enhancement. Support for this legislation will strengthen this message, and will demonstrate our desire for a constructive resolution of the debt crisis.

PRIDE FOR THE AMERICAN FLAG

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to share with my distinguished colleagues the remarkable efforts of one man, Mr. William L. Sinclair of Hurlock, MD. This fine gentleman single-handedly collected nearly 1,000 signatures in a petition opposing the Supreme Court's decision to allow the desecration of the flag.

His fellow Marylander's signed their names to the following words, crafted so eloquently by Mr. Sinclair:

HURLOCK, MD.

Hon. ROY P. DYSON,
Cannon House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. DYSON: The American Flag is a symbol, the sight of which arouses a resurgence of pride in every patriotic American. It is the greatest symbol of freedom anywhere in the world, and an umbrella of protection sought after by people from repressive societies all over the world. It is our ensign, our banner representing honor and glory, and a concept of self government that many thousands have died to protect.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM L. SINCLAIR.

Mr. Sinclair states succinctly and clearly the proud feeling we have for our flag in America. He goes on to describe the terrible feeling we have when someone deliberately mutilates or outright mocks our national symbol. He speaks poignantly of those Americans who have fought so loyally for our way of life and who died in the process or who were terribly wounded. The desecration of the flag is an insult to them, what they fought for and all that for which we stand.

Mr. Sinclair does not understand how a group of people, so prestigious as to represent the entire body of laws in this country, could rule to allow something as abhorrent as mutilation of the flag. He decided to show those people, the Supreme Court, that the people who live by the laws felt they made a mistake.

With supreme dedication to this important cause, William Sinclair collected hundreds of signatures. He respectfully submits them to us so that we in Congress might put an end to wanton disrespect to our national symbol. Gentleman, let us act quickly and decisively to represent Mr. Sinclair and his fellow petitioners and place the flag in the position of reverence it so deeply merits.

A POEM FOR AMERICA

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. ESPY. Mr. Speaker, I recently received a letter and a poem from a very thoughtful constituent, Ms. Margie Hall Dorris, who expressed her feelings about American patriotism and what she senses to be a nation adrift.

I was touched by her expressions and the feelings of concern that she conveyed in her poem. I would like to take the liberty of sharing Ms. Dorris' poem with my House colleagues.

WHAT'S THE MATTER, AMERICA?

What's the matter with you, America?
  Are you as sick as you appear to be?
Looks like you're turning red all over,
  Your temperature is rising by degree.
What's the matter with you, America?
  Have you lost your memory?
Have you forgotten the principles you were founded upon?
  Happiness, life and liberty!
That's happiness for everyone,
  Not just a chosen few.
That's life for everyone,
  Those already born, or due.
That's liberty for everyone,
  Freedom to choose what we love to do.
Have some of these things been taken away?
  America, what's happening to you?
Just because a few are not believers
  In the God you've trusted from the start,
Are you giving in to the minority?
  Don't you think majority plays a part?
What's the matter with you, America?
  Say I can burn the red, white and blue?
I can't believe it's happening!
  America, what's the matter with you?
What's the matter with you, America?
  If you are sick, as you seem to be,
Don't you think it's time to see the Doctor?
  Of your pain, He can set you free.
Maybe if you would change position,
  And fall down on your knees,
Call on the Great Physician,
  You would receive that needed ease.
Great nations have risen and fallen,
  You can read it in the history books.
Are we still that Christian nation?
  Seems rather pagan, by the looks.
What's the matter with you, America?
  You're still the greatest nation in the world!
Hearts beat strong with pride and patriotism,
  Everytime we see our flag unfurled.
America, if you are aching and hurting,
  Know your sons and daughters are standing by your side.
They fought to keep you strong and brave,
  And they will never let you lose your pride.
America, please keep your flag from burning,
  Don't take "In God We Trust" from the dime.
You are the grandest nation God ever made,
  You are America, you are mine!

HELP RESTORE FAIRNESS TO TITLE VII DISCRIMINATION CASES

HON. TOM CAMPBELL

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. CAMPBELL of California. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing the Civil Rights Restoration Act of 1989, to reverse portions of the Supreme Court's decision in Wards Cove versus Atonio.

In this decision the Supreme Court shifted the burden of proof in employment discrimination under title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act. Prior to Wards Cove, an employee or job applicant alleging discrimination could establish a prima facie violation of title VII by demonstrating a significant underrepresentation of women or minorities in a given set of job categories, as compared with the pool of qualified applicants for those job categories. Upon such a showing, the burden of proof shifted to the employer, who could defend against the charge by identifying the particular hiring practices that caused the disparate impact, and justify them on the grounds of business necessity.

After Wards Cove, however, finding a statistical underrepresentation of women or minorities in certain job categories, as compared with the qualified applicant pool for those categories, is no longer sufficient to establish a prima facie violation. The plaintiff must now identify the specific practices and show a casual link between them and the disparate impact. This is so despite the fact that the employer knows the selection criteria much better than the employee does.

I believe that this new regime unfairly burdens the victims of discrimination. A scientific statistical analysis as outlined above should be recognized as the powerful evidence that it is: that the probability of a discriminatory pattern occurring randomly is extremely low. H.R. 2598 would restore disparate impact cases to their previous condition. Upon a showing that women or minorities are significantly underrepresented on the work force as compared with the qualified applicant pool, the burden of proof would shift to the defendant, who would have to persuade the court that the hiring practices that caused the disparate impact are business necessities. This had been the law for 18 years until the Supreme Court's decision this term.

ADELA M. NAVARRO, TEXAS HISTORIAN

HON. HENRY B. GONZALEZ

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, August 16 marks the 85th birthday of my good friend, Adela M. Navarro, who has spent most of her lifetime as a relentless fighter of the distortions found in the written accounts of early Texas history.

Ms. Navarro is the great, great-granddaughter of the Texas patriot Don Jose Antonio Navarro, who was the only native born Texan signer of the 1845 Constitution of the State of Texas, and one of only two native Texans to sign the Texas Declaration of Independence.

After graduation from Brackenridge High School at San Antonio, Adela, or "Adelita," took some social studies courses at Our Lady of the Lake University in San Antonio and at Columbia University in New York City. She also studies history and political science at the University of Pennsylvania and real estate law courses at San Antonio's Trinity University.

Eternally a student and researcher, Adela's studies have taken her not only to all parts of Texas, Louisiana, Connecticut, Spain, and to the Canary Islands, but to many other locations too numerous to mention.

The Texas Legislature has honored her for her historical works, including her successful efforts to obtain the historical costs of arms for the city of San Antonio and the county of Bexar.

Adela Margarita Navarro is a prominent member of the Bexar County Historical Commission, and was active in the plans for the celebration of the 250th anniversary of the arrival of the Canary Islanders to settle San Antonio and to establish San Fernando Cathedral.

In 1965 Adela founded the Canary Islands Descedents' Society and the Texas Hispanic History Foundation, both of which were later chartered by the State of Texas. In 1973 Adela visited the Canary Islands as a special guest of the government in celebration of the 500th anniversary of the founding of the city of Las Palmas of the Gran Canarias where she received the "Medalla de Tenerife," and a Citation of Honor. Also during her visit she was received by the Duchess of Bexar at her palace for dinner.

St. Bernard Parish, Louisiana, proclaimed Miss Adela Navarro as an honorary citizen of New Orleans in 1978 and in 1982 the San Antonio Independence School District Board recognized Adela's contributions in the field of history education. Several other groups have also honored her.

During the Depression of the early 1930's, Adela worked as a casewoker in Freehold, NJ, where her family lived for several years. In 1940, as our country prepared for war, Adela was clerk and registrar of the draft board at Monmouth. Ironically, her duties included sending her own brother, Jose (Joe) L. Navarro, a draft notice, who was subsequently inducted into the service.

Adela went on to serve in the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps [WAC]. At the end of World War II she went to work at the regional office of the Veterans' Administration at Newark, NJ.

It was during this time in her life that her love for literature grew and was nourished by a strong tie of friendship with the famous Broadway playwright, Eugene O'Neill, and his family, particularly his daughter, Oona, who was later to become the wife of Charlie Chaplin. It was also during those years that Adela knew Prof. Albert Einstein, who was teaching during that period at Princeton University.

In 1951 the Navarro family returned to their beloved Texas and San Antonio—"mi pueblo, mi ciudad, mi gente, mi San Antonio," Adela often says in respect to the historical city. Most of Adela's conflict with the history books about Texas revolve around the 1836 conflict at the Alamo. She points out that the conflict did not claim the lives of 160 "Texas" heroes. They were, after all, on Mexican soil. There were legitimate reasons why General Santa Ana issued a decree ordering the lawbreakers, or pistoleros, out of Mexican territory," Adela has often argued with member of the Daughters of the Republic of Texas.

Her love for San Antonio has taken her through endless court battles trying to right the wrongs that have taken place in our beloved city. Adela still holds a judgment against the city because of its defiling of the Catholic Cemetery (the Camposanto) in 1860 by order of the city council which changed the cemetery into what is still called Ben Milam Park.

Adela regrets that she did not learn Spanish as well as she would have liked, and recalls that attempts of her ancestors to establish a college of arts and sciences in San Antonio in the 1830's with emphasis in Spanish instruction were aborted by the Texas Legislature.

But, Adela is nevertheless very competent bilingually, and has used this ability well, including running for public office twice, the first time in 1958. She is considered the first Hispanic woman in Texas to seek elective office. Although not successful at the polls, she paved the way for the Hispanic female officeholders of today.

And, I recall with great pleasure all the support that Adela and her brother, Joe, have given me in my career as a public servant, especially the work they did at the old Houston Building campaign office in the fall of 1961 when I was first elected to Congress in a special election.

Adela Navarro, a very special daughter of Texas, I salute you on your 85th birthday. May it be a very wonderful occasion as you are honored with family and friends, beginning on Sunday, August 13, with a 9 a.m. mass at San Fernando Cathedral, followed by breakfast at La Mansion del Rio.

As your friend, Marge Hall, has written, you have worked endlessly to preserve our heritage and to keep us aware of our Texas history. We are very grateful to you for this work, Adela Navarro, and for being you.

DISASTER ASSISTANCE FOR 1989

HON. VIRGINIA SMITH

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2467, to provide assistance to agricultural producers who have been devastated by this year's drought.

It is essential that we bring financial relief to our Nation's farmers and ranchers and to producers in my district who are suffering from the second year of dry weather and the worst conditions since 1934. Each day that fails to bring desperately needed rain adds to the failing financial condition of farmers and ranchers.

While this is not a perfect or ideal piece of legislation, I support the agreement that has been reached, and thank my colleagues on the Senate and House Agriculture Committees who have diligently dedicated themselves to obtaining a responsible compromise for providing reasonable relief.

I am extremely pleased to have a drought assistance bill on the way to the President's desk before we begin our month-long recess, but I do want to express my concern about the procedure we are operating under.

Informal negotiations of the House, Senate, and White House resulted in a compromise that was brought to the floor with no warning, no details were available, and we passed it in a flash with no explanation or debate. Whether the legislation will result in rightful assistance to producers depends on how the U.S. Department of Agriculture interprets and administers the program.

I trust fully my hard-working colleagues on the Agriculture Committee, but I am just concerned that even minor provisions contain the potential for substantial negative effects.

Like many of you, I want to provide the most timely assistance possible, but we should not let our concern of meeting with our constituents during the August recess override the necessity and our responsibility of writing quality legislation.

I have stated that any drought assistance proposal must have fiscal integrity and account for our Federal financial responsibilities as well as provide necessary assistance to producers. The original legislation passed by the House would have cost the American taxpayers an estimated $1.3 billion, while this legislation reduces the total bill to an estimated $885 million.

I would especially like to thank those Members who worked to include nonprogram crops. In Nebraska there are 18,000 farms that grow wheat and 30,000 farms that grow hay and alfalfa, and 32 percent of all crop sales are received from nonprogram crops.

The only way this legislation assists ranchers in my district, who are faced with the worst conditions they have ever experienced, is through relief for nonprogram crops.

I have been pleased with Agriculture Secretary Yeutter's quick, early actions to open livestock assistance programs and with ASCS Administrator Bjerke's willingness to listen to the problems that are confronting producers when they are unable to qualify.

They must continue to listen carefully, however, as the drought tightens its grip on our base livestock herds. I hope further steps will be taken to maintain the livestock industry, which supplies 56 percent of total cash receipts for Nebraska agriculture.

I and my good friends, Mr. DORGAN from North Dakota, Mr. MARLENEE from Montana, Mr. BROWN from Colorado, Mr. STENHOLM from Texas, Mr. JOHNSON from South Dakota, and Mr. LIGHTFOOT from Iowa, along with my very good friend Mr. ROBERTS from Kansas, have introduced legislation, H.R. 2923, to provide assistance for producers who have been forced to sell livestock because their grass has dried up, their hay has run out, and they cannot qualify for emergency feed assistance.

While I agree that the Federal Government should not be expected to quarantee a producer's income, we must make certain that farmers and ranchers, as well as our rural communities, are not forced into financial collapse due to natural disasters. I expect that reasonable and desirable revisions will be made in Federal crop insurance to provide a more effective program for agricultural producers.

I am happy that the final legislative package was scaled back to cost only $885 million and designed to include many of the producers who have been afflicted with natural disasters.

I thank my colleagues for supporting this legislation so necessary assistance and proper relief can be made available to our Nation's farmers and ranchers.

HUMAN RIGHTS IN SOUTH AMERICA: THE GRANTING OF AMNESTY TO FORMER MEMBERS OF MILITARY REGIMES

HON. PETER H. KOSTMAYER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, the strict observance of human rights is an absolute necessity in this country as well as around the world. Unfortunately, human rights are often abused or outright ignored, as was often the case in the Latin American countries during the just-completed era of dictatorial military rule. Such military regimes have been responsible for tens of thousands of deaths in the Southern Cone of Latin America since 1970, yet these military transgressors remain largely unpunished. Although the cases discussed in the following article have for the most part run their course, they provide valuable examples of the tactics that should or should not be used in the future to enforce strong human rights standards. They send the powerful message that Latin America is trapped in a bloody cycle from which we must help it emerge if its democratic institutions are to survive. This article by Julie Rice, a research associate with the Washington-based Council on Hemispheric Affairs, first appeared in that organization's biweekly publication, the Washington Report on the Hemisphere. I encourage all of my colleagues to read this timely report.

CAN MILITARY REGIMES BE PUT ON TRIAL? LATIN AMERICA IS STILL TRYING TO ESCAPE ITS BLOODY LEGACY

(By Julie Rice, Research Associate, Council on Hemispheric Affairs)

The seemingly endless cycle of harsh military rule alternating with sometime brief interregnums of civilian governments has dominated Latin American politics in the last several decades, in a period during which the military converted itself from being the servitor of the oligarchy to being the new ruling class. When civilian rule succeeds that of the military, the new government has a moral obligation to prosecute the military for its human rights abuses, satisfying the calls for justice by much of the public. However, Latin American democratic leaders often lack the power to exercise this option without evoking a violent reaction from their country's armed forces.

Uruguayan voters bowed to an implicit military threat on April 16, when they voted to uphold a total amnesty law authored by the civilian government that took over in November 1984 from the military, which during its eleven-year rule had amassed the world's largest per capita number of political prisoners. Private citizens filed human rights abuse cases against 200 members of the Uruguayan military, but the Armed Forces High Command flexed its muscles and warned that it would not allow subpoenaed soliders to appear in civilian courts.

Under this pressure, a thoroughly cowed legislature passed the "Full Stop" law in December 1986 aimed at giving complete amnesty to the military, a move protested at the time by an estimated 65 percent of all Uruguayans. Opponents of the law succeeded in winning the right to stage a referendum to reconsider the measure, despite the nearly insurmountable requirement of having to attain signatures from 25 percent of the population.

President Julio Maria Sanguinetti, a pragmatist if nothing else, took the morally equivocal position that "military trials are incompatible with a climate of social stability," acknowledging the military blackmail that is a commonplace in most Latin American countries moving from military to civilian rule. Sanguinetti was able to convince his people that justice for human rights transgressors would wreak havoc in Uruguay, as well as invite another seizure of power by the country's armed forces, as 57 percent of the people voted to retain the amnesty law.

While the amnesty issue appears to have been settled in Uruguay at the lowest common denominator, in other Southern Cone countries it remains a burning political matter. Following Alfonsin's 1983 election as Argentine president, more than 2000 claims were filed by affected citizens against alleged deliquent military officers. In December 1986, Alfonsin attempted to limit the prosecutions with the "Punto Final" law which allowed additional charges to be filed for only the next sixty days. However, this formula did not satisfy the lower ranks of the army, some of whom staged a revolt the following April. As a result of this act of intimidation, the "Due Obedience" law was enacted in June that declared those under the rank of colonel who allegedly committed human rights crimes to be innocent because they were only following what they believed to be lawful orders. This measure pardoned most of those who were directly responsible for the 9,000–12,000 deaths resulting from the 1976–83 "dirty war."

As of June, 1989, five Argentine former heads of state and more than 30 senior officers had been convicted and there are still eighteen defendents before the Supreme Court, but with three recent uprisings by segments of the armed forces, even these pending cases may be dismissed. Defense Minister Italo Luder wants to end the trials, stating "they have prolonged too long a situation which has been handled too carelessly from the legal point of view."

Another country that has shed military rule for civilian control is Brazil. The Brazilian military passed a self-amnesty law in 1978, well before leaving office, and since the 1985 civilian transition there has been no effort to pin responsibility on it for the repressive violence and the 1,000 killings of political dissidents during 20 years of armed forces juntas. In fact, nearly 600—mainly rural residents—have been killed since the military gave up formal control, with ecologist Chico Mendes only the most famous victim. The military continues to hold important positions in the government, illustrated by the clause it had placed in the new constitution that defines the armed forces as the "defenders against foreign or domestic threats."

While in Brazil the military continues as a behind-the-scene power, in Paraguay, a military leader, Gen. Andres Rodriguez, has been approved by elections held after the February 3, overthrow of dictator Gen. Alfredo Stroessner after 34 years in power. Following the coup, Interior Minister Orlando Marchuca Vargas pledged to prosecute the many human rights violations committed under the Stroessner regime. A number of private law suits have been filed against members of the military and close associates of both Stroessner and Rodriguez, although none have yet advanced to court. If Rodriguez, known as a key figure in Stroessner's drug enterprises, allows full prosecution, he could very well find himself a defendent.

Chile is the only member of the Southern Cone group that continues to be directly governed by an unelected military. A transition to a civilian regime is scheduled for 1990, but the 1980 constitution created by Gen. Augusto Pinochet will leave the military with effective veto power over the elected government, despite the constitutional amendments scheduled to be voted on in July 1989. In any case, Pinochet has said he won't step down without an amnesty for those responsible for the estimated 15,000 deaths following the 1973 coup.

The Southern Cone has nearly run the gamut of possible solutions to the problem of prosecuting or amnestying former military governments for human rights abuses. The only tack not seen is one in which full civilian control over the military is demonstrated by complete prosecution. Sanguinetti of Uruguay believes that his country's comprehensive amnesty law will encourage other military leaders to step down without fear of prosecution. At the same time, however, the waiving of standards invites the armed forces, at almost no cost, to continue the damaging cycle of military coups and civilian restorations that has resulted in more than 40,000 deaths in the Southern Cone since 1970.

THE DOCTOR, HIS SECRET AND A LOST MOVIE—THE ALBERT JOHNSTON STORY: A LOST BOUNDARIES REUNION

HON. LOUIS STOKES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, "Lost Boundaries" was daring and progressive film when it made its debut in 1949. It also was one of the 10 best films of that year. Since that time, this groundbreaking film has been lost. Howard Mansfield's recent article in the Washington Post is about the second premiere of "Lost Boundaries." The film recounts the life of a black physician, Albert Johnston, who harbors a secret that could end his career.

This is not an ordinary drama about the life of a country doctor in a quiet, New England town. "Lost Boundaries" documents how economic, societal, and racial pressures motivated Johnston to assume the identity of a white man. In the 1920's and 1930's, many hospitals forbade black physician's from treating white patients. After Johnston had difficulty obtaining a residency because of his race, he made the decision to pass for white in order to improve the quality and scope of his life.

Mr. Speaker, Howard Mansfield's feature on the rediscovery of "Lost Boundaries" and the story the film tells is intriguing. I urge my colleagues to take a few moments and read this story about the American Dream.

THE DOCTOR, HIS SECRET AND A LOST MOVIE—THE ALBERT JOHNSTON STORY: A "LOST BOUNDARIES" REUNION

(By Howard Mansfield)

Keene, NH.—Forty years ago this city learned a secret: One of its leading citizens fell into a no man's land outside the boundaries. In the segregated America of the 1930's the lines between the races were drawn hard and fast, and Albert Johnston, a physician who lived as white, was, the records said, one-sixth black.

Eventually, Johnston risked his career by telling his story in the book and movie, "Lost Boundaries." The town didn't rise up; the doctor continued a successful practice. But it was a story tingled with sadness, a story of an ambitious doctor who was spurned by his country.

Johnston himself died a year ago. But yesterday, four generations of the Johnston family gathered with the actors and others who had worked on "Lost Boundaries" to celebrate a breakthrough film—one of the 10 best of 1949—that until last night's sold-out showing had all but vanished from sight. The movie was last shown in Keene 40 years ago to the day.

"It was a very positive movie. It's a beautiful story," says Albert Jr., the eldest of the physician's four children.

"This was a very radical departure from any kind of fiction film anybody was making in the country," says actor Mel Ferrer of his first film. "[It] established a new freedom in making films."

Johnston's life and destiny turned on a fraction—a fraction of inheritance, a fraction of acceptance. And, in the end, it turned on a fraction of his American Dream.

Albert Johnston was one of two blacks who were accepted each year to fulfill the quota at the University of Chicago's Rush Medical School. But finding a hospital for his residency was difficult; in the 1920s and '30s, black doctors were often prohibited from treating whites. At last a hospital in Portland, Maine, accepted him, and did not inquire about his race.

After his residency, he was recommended for a practice in the small town of Gorham, in the White Mountains of New Hampshire. When you spoke of prejudice in all-white Gorham, it was between the Protestants and the Catholic French Canadians.

Gorham welcomed its new doctor in 1929, and in the 10 years he practiced there, Johnston headed the school board, served as a selectman, was president of the county medical society and coached basketball. As chairman of the local Republican Party, he was a power to be reckoned with. The family passed muster with the local Congregational Church, and hosted the Christmas social at their home.

The Johnston house was in the town's rich Prospect Hill section. "The citizens wanted to be sure they had only the 'best' people living there—no Jews or Catholics, for example—so they sold to us at a ridiculous price!" he told Ebony magazine, years later. "They seem to think that since we were Protestant and white, we were just right." In truth, Johnston's wife, the former Thyra Baumann—one-eighth black—was Catholic.

After being certified in radiology, Johnston sold his practice and moved to Keene. He could have continued on in Keene as he had in Gorham and become one of the small city's "leading citizens," as they used to say. But war appeared likely and Johnston wanted to serve his country.

Even before Pearl Harbor, the Navy was desperate for people practicing his specialty. There were only 2,500 certified radiologists in the country, and many were old or essential to their community. The Navy wrote twice to Johnston, asking him to volunteer. Finally he did, knowing well that an investigation could scuttle his entire career. He passed the physical and was commissioned with the rank of lieutenant commander in the Naval Reserve.

But the Navy was segregated. There were no black officers; blacks served as mess attendants. And a Navy investigation discovered that at the University of Chicago, Johnston had belonged to Kappa Alpha Psi, a black fraternity. A Navy investigator was sent to Keene with one question:

"We understand that, even though you are registered as white, you have colored blood in your veins?"

"Who knows what blood any of us has in his veins?" replied Johnston.

That was the end of the interview. Three weeks later the Navy rescinded his commission, citing an "inability to meet Naval physical requirements." He was overweight and an inch and a half too short. He lost the weight and applied again, but his height was "still a disqualifying defect."

After that, Johnston tried everything to serve his country. He wrote the War Department. He tried the Army, which said: "We have more applicants of your type than we have position vacancies." He tried to get an appointment with the "colored troops." He had influential friends push his case. No one would have him.

Shortly after the Navy had rescinded the commission, his son came home from prep school, happily talking about his friends, including one who was "a good guy even if he is colored."

That angered his father, and as Albert Jr. was taking a bath for a date that night, his father came to the bathroom door and told him to run off the water. "Do you know something, boy? Well, you're colored."

He was 16. "I grew up as a boy not knowing my identity," says the 63-year-old Albert, a retired department store buyer and composer. "When I was a little boy, some people would say, 'Gee, if you could be anything in the United States, what would like to be? I said I'd like to be president. I could say that. But a little black child couldn't do it."

Albert Jr. didn't know where the boundaries lay. "I don't know if I belong to any race or not," he said three decades ago. "In my mind I don't. But I guess people just like to pigeon hole you."

At Dartmouth, he felt like an outsider. He dropped out, went to a psychiatrist, and eventually enlisted in the Navy as white—refusing a position as a radio operator in case they might send him South. Left scrubbing decks, he became depressed, jittery—"the whole bottom seemed to fall ouf of my stomach," he said. He was discharged.

Young Albert drifted through jobs. His father was angry with his once promising son. He wanted to have Albert committed to a veterans hospital. Finally Albert took off with a friend, hitchhiking across America to visit relatives in Cleveland, Chicago and Los Angeles.

At his aunt's house in Los Angeles, he met black doctors, lawyers, movie actors—people who had money. "It was a whole different world I was not aware of," he says. "I was like a white boy. I did not know that all these people lived so well. All I'd ever heard of was all the bad things you usually hear in association with Negroes."

The trip settled Albert down. Back home, he enrolled at the University of New Hampshire. With the college's other black male student, he attended a conference of sociology students. The conference produced several resolutions; one was to produce films honoring black Americans who had "made a contribution."

"When you went to a movie, you either saw a shoeshine boy, a jazz musician, a cotton picker, or Aunt Jemima or somebody's maid. We wanted to eliminate that stereotype," says Albert Jr. "So we thought of George Washington Carver."

Through their dean, Albert and the other black student arranged to bring their idea to the movie producer Louis de Rochemont, who lived nearby. De Rochemont politely listened to the students talking about George Washington Carver. De Rochemont understood, recalled Albert, "why the other student was interested in this, being obviously black, and he said, 'Mr. Johnston, how come you're interested in this? Are you studying sociology too?' I said, 'Well, I didn't know that I was black until about two years ago.' He says, 'Is that right?' And I told him the whole story. And he asked me to go home and write an eight-page synopsis of that, and would my family be willing to grant rights to make a motion picture. When I called my father at home, he thought maybe I'd been out on a beer bust or something—he didn't understand what was happening."

De Rochemont then called in William L. White to do the story for Reader's Digest. ("Twenty pages that shocked the world," it said in the movie ads.)

Published in 1947, "Lost Boundaries" became a bestseller, a "masterpiece of insight, intelligence and unsentimental compassion," the New Republic said. Today, "Lost Boundaries" is out of print.

The film was produced independently; Hollywood wouldn't back de Rochemont on such a risky topic, so he mortgaged his house to help pay for it. Mel Ferrer's booking agent warned him not to take the part because it could jeopardize his career. After the film came out, Ferrer, who is white, was accused of "passing."

De Rochemont had won an Oscar in 1936 for his "March of Time" newsreels. He took a documentary approach with "Lost Boundaries." He shot it in his hometown of Portsmouth, using as many authentic Yankees as he could round up, including his minister, who had a large role playing a minister. It was filmed in eight weeks for less than $600,000—a third, he said, of what the studios would have spent.

The movie itself uses a voice-over narrator to tell how the town of Keenham (based on Keene and Gorham) comes to like its new doctor. After he is rejected by the Navy, the news is whispered around town.

In one scene, the doctor's daughter runs into her boyfriend. There's an "awful rumor," he says. "They were saying you folks are colored."

"Are they saying bad things about us?" she replies.

In the end, at their minister's urging, the town stands by its doctor.

The first time the film was shown in New York, the audience sat in stunned silence once the lights came on.

The New York Times and Time magazine chose it as one of the 10 best films of 1949, and it was chosen as the best script at the Cannes film festival.

"Lost Boundaries" was banned in Atlanta by the censor employed by the city government, Christine Smith. In Smith's view, the film "contained inferences throughout which created preachments against longstanding customs that also were part of the laws of the south," reported the Atlanta Constitution.

Northerners, Smith said, would not understand. They overlook "the fact that segregation is a matter of law in the south—not just a matter of prejudice."

De Rochemont took the censor to court.

"That banning was good. Everybody wanted to see it after that," says Albert. "Lost Boundaries" played in Miami, San Antonio and 25 other smaller Southern cities. It enjoyed a long run in Los Angeles, and played for six months at the Astor Theater on Broadway. Mel Ferrer says President Truman's decision to desegregate the armed forces was speeded by viewing the film.

"Lost Boundaries" was "a real breakthrough," says Donald Bogle, author of a history of blacks in films. "The black characters you see in 'Lost Boundaries,' it's not the old-style Stepin Fetchit figure. These people do not speak with heavy dialects, they are not shuffling. They are composed, dignified, educated people who have a problem in America because of American discrimination and bigotry."

In Keene, people had lined up around the block to see the film, and except for a few residents, they stood by their doctor. "I feel as if as a great burden has been lifted from my shoulders," Johnston said at the time of the movie's release. Look magazine reported it this way: "The Johnstons . . . last spring let the world know they were Negroes. The reaction? There was none."

This was news in 1949. Two years earlier, Sinclair Lewis had published "Kingsblood Royal," a best-selling novel about a situation similar to the Johnstons': a successful businessman, in midlife, reveals he is black. But in the novel, his friends turn on him and his home is destroyed by an angry mob.

Johnston was proud of the people of Keene. "They are strong and unyielding like the granite foothills surrounding our little city. They respect human rights and are willing to give a man a break regardless of his color. Maybe the world outside feels like we live here like flowers in a florist hothouse, but this is not the truth. We are a part of Keene, part of the pulse and the soul of this city. . . ."

But it was not an entirely happy picture. Four years after the film, he lost his position with the hospital, for reasons that may have had to do with race. And while the family is always positive about Keene (Johnston's daughter Anne was voted most popular girl in her high school class) they acknowledge that it was easy for Keene to face what was then called the "Negro problem": At the start of the 1940s, there was only one other black family in town.

"We never once intended to pass over as white," says 85-year-old Thyra Johnston. "It just happened accidentally." But she adds, "I think if he had gotten into the Navy, I don't think he would have ever told the children. I used to say to him, 'What do we do when the kids grow up? We have to tell them sometime.' And he said, 'Let's just saw wood, say nothing and see what happens.' "

(Johnston's widow was here for the reunion, as were two sons, Albert Jr. and Paul; daughter Anne; Susan Douglas, who played the daughter in the film; Carleton Carpenter, who played the boyfriend; William Greaves, who played a friend; members of the de Rochemont family; and a number of Johnston grandchildren.)

"Americans in general do not want to do anything about race prejudice. They have been pampering their nasty little prejudices for years," Johnston told Ebony in the early 1950s.

At medical conventions he would have to endure Southern doctors telling him that as a northerner he had no idea what Negroes were like, that they "don't have the brains, or any sense of moral values like you and I have."

"I have to sit there silent and take it—feeling like a traitor," Johnston said in the book. He couldn't have achieved as much as he had if he had not "passed," he said, and yet now his achievement seemed hollow. "Whatever I do, my race gets no credit."

"I guess I've become morose," he said in the William White book. He quite the Rotary and the Masons, stopped making new friends at the hospital. He was offered impressive positions: an association with the head radiologist at Wayne University in Detroit, and a post at a large black college in the South. But in Detroit there were race riots and Johnston felt he would have to "pass" to have a successful practice. As for the South, he said, it would take him five years just to learn how to live in a Jim Crow society. There were still boundaries.

He stayed in Keene. And he explained his life by a way of a story: Once there was a woman who taught piano. Ever since she had been a girl, she dreamed of owning a concert grand, white with gold legs. She spent many years giving lessons, listening for hours a day to badly played music. At last she got herself that grand piano, but it was just another piano, even with the gold legs. It didn't sound anything like the piano in her dream.

"I have more or less an empty life," he said in the book. "Sometimes it all seems as disappointing as that white piano with the gold legs."

Johnston and his family moved to Hawaii in 1966, where again he was a successful radiologist and active in the community. He was 87 when he died there last year, and he was buried in Keene.

This year, six months after Johnston's death, a letter arrived at his house in Hawaii:

"Dear Mr. Johnston,

"Why should you be interested in the Air Force Medical Service? . . .

"Find out more about how the Air Force Medical Corps can help you achieve your professional and personal goals. Return the enclosed card, or call today."

A computer-generated form letter, perhaps, but 45 years ago such a letter would have been as magnificent as a white concert grand piano with gold legs.

KATHRYN CAMERON PORTER'S TRIBUTE TO HIS HOLINESS THE DALAI LAMA ON HIS RECEIVING THE RAOUL WALLENBERG CONGRESSIONAL HUMAN RIGHTS AWARD

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago the Congressional Human Rights Foundation presented the first annual Raoul Wallenberg Congressional Human Rights Award to His Holiness the Dalai Lama of Tibet. He was recognized for his outstanding leadership and his courageous struggle which has distinguished him as a leading proponent of human rights and world peace.

My friend and distinguished colleage from Illinois, JOHN PORTER, and I have the honor of cochairing the Congressional Human Rights Foundation. Mr. PORTER has been a dedicated and effective leader of the foundation, and an outspoken advocate, not only of the Dalai Lama and the Tibetans, but for all victims of human rights abuses around the world.

Kathryn Cameron Porter, a member of the executive board of the Congressional Human Rights Foundation, has also made an extremely important contribution to the foundation and its important activities in behalf of human rights. Her advice and leadership have been invaluable.

JOHN PORTER was unable to participate in the award ceremony in New York honoring the Dalai Lama, and Kathryn Porter made outstanding remarks on that occasion. Mr. Speaker, I include her comments in the RECORD so that they may be shared with my colleagues:

REMARKS OF KATHRYN CAMERON PORTER ON THE PRESENTATION OF THE RAOUL WALLENBERG CONGRESSIONAL HUMAN RIGHTS AWARD TO HIS HOLINESS THE DALAI LAMA OF TIBET

I am here on behalf of my husband, John Edward Porter who is held in Washington by votes on the Foreign Operations Appropriation Bill.

Today we are here to recognize His Holiness the Dalai Lama, a man who not only represents the people of Tibet but also oppressed peoples everywhere. Due to the bravery and perseverance of His Holiness, there is hope that soon the Tibetan people will know true freedom in their native land.

Your holiness, your work to secure a negotiated solution with the Chinese government through non-violent means is an inspiration to us, and we salute you for your unending and dedicated commitment towards achieving this goal.

It is fitting that the 1989 Raoul Wallenberg Congressional Human Rights Award, named after a true hero who courageously rescued thousands of people from death in concentration camps, should go to someone who has distinguished himself as an international symbol for peace and freedom around the world.

Although we honor you today for your contribution to the human spirit, we must remember that there is still work to be done towards the goal of freedom in Tibet. I pledge to you that we will continue to do all we can to assist you in the struggle and that we will not stop the pressure until the human rights of all Tibetans are restored.

May we all keep striving toward the Light.

AMERICA'S WAR AGAINST NICARAGUA

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend to the attention of my colleagues an excellent article by Dr. Kevin M. Cahill, the director of the Tropical Disease Center in Manhattan. The article, which is entitled "Our War Against Nicaragua Saps America's Moral Authority," appeared in the July 18 edition of Newsday and describes some of the tragic human costs of our Nation's policy toward Nicaragua.

Dr. Cahill has directed major medical programs in Africa, Asia, and Latin America for more than 30 years. I hope that the Members of the House will consider his thoughtful comments when Congress again returns to the issue of U.S. policy in Central America.

OUR WAR AGAINST NICARAGUA SAPS AMERICA'S MORAL AUTHORITY

(By Kevin M. Cahill)

As an American physician who has worked in troubled parts of the tropics for more than 30 years, I have learned to avoid political comment overseas. There the task is to help the sick and not fan flames of hatred. But back in my own country there can be no excuse for silence, especially if one has seen the scope of suffering and destruction I witnessed recently in Nicaragua. If one believes in the greatness of America, if one hopes for a "kinder, gentler" land, those of us privileged to work among the poor in the Third World have a special obligation to report on what we see.

We must tell our fellow citizens what is being perpetrated in our name, and there is nothing subtle about the carnage in Nicaragua. We must remind—or, maybe, educate—politicians that our own national interests, and even our ultimate security, will be based more on a respect for the rules of international law than on the transient gratification that seems to come with arrogant displays of power. For me it would be un-American to supress the outrage that overwhelms one in Nicaragua, for I believe that current U.S. policy is destroying not only their lives but our souls.

The cowardly accommodation with evil that has characterized our approach in Central America is patently immoral. While we demand the resignations of those in our government who even appear to violate ethical standards, an obsession with overthrowing the Sandinista leadership in Nicaragua has allowed our highest officials to act as open collaborators with kidnapers and rapists and killers of innocent civilians in the name of democracy. These are not exaggerated claims, for the victims are all over the blood-soaked land of Nicaragua for anyone with eyes to see.

The early dreams of the Nicaraguan revolution have faded and mere survival is now a source of pride. The literacy campaigns and public health projects that gave such enthusiasm and glory to the post-Somoza period finally fell victim to our guerrilla war. Today, amputees wait in decaying hospitals for prostheses that cannot be purchased because the nation's currency is almost worthless.

The legless teenagers of Nicaragua have become a part of our American legacy. Thousands of limbs were blown off in the last decade by American mines planted by American-paid contra forces. In our name, and supported by our tax dollars, this mercenary army selectively destroyed schools, health centers, agricultural seed banks and hydroelectric plants. As a coup de grace the United States imposed an economic embargo on Nicaragua, propelling the country into chaos. But the long-term burden of international condemnation, and the eventual isolation, shame and guilt, may have a greater effect on America than even the immediate pain and suffering experienced by Nicaragua.

How many Americans know that our country has been convicted, in the International Court of Justice at the Hague, of acts of terrorism against Nicaragua? How many Americans realize that our illegal mining of Nicaragua's harbors was condemned by almost every country in a formal United Nations vote?

The pattern of lies and deceit that culminated in the Iran-contra affair has damaged the moral credibility of the United States around the world. Those who frittered away our nation's reputation for honesty and integrity may have cost us more than all our foreign aid donations.

We pour billions of tax dollars a year into Central America. The vast majority of it is military assistance propping up right-wing regimes and contra forces that violate every tenet of decency and justice we were once taught to revere in America. I am certain the average American, given the chance to witness the results, would not condone such spending. What if those sums had been devoted to medical projects or education? Would we not be more secure if our investments had led to healthy neighbors with thriving economies? And even if we were not wise and generous enough to do that for other countries, wouldn't it have been at least more humane to invest that largess in our own schools, hospitals and housing for the homeless?

During the past decade, Cuba has annually sent 320 doctors to staff rural Nicaraguan clinics. Today four U.S. physician-volunteers serve our image as a humane and caring nation, and we wonder why the United States is losing the battle for the minds and hearts of mankind.

History is not on the side of those who think they can strangle independence in Nicaragua. For a century and a half we have intervened with armed force whenever a freedom movement flickered there, but times have changed, both around the world and in the United States. There is an almost irrepressible resilience in Nicaragua, and somehow the nation will survive, struggling for those basic sovereign rights we take for granted. We should have enough confidence in our great land to reject foolish fears—tiny Nicaragua never has been and cannot be a threat to us.

There are alternatives that could simultaneously stop the killing and allow us to recapture the nobility of our Founding Fathers. With the wisdom and strength that comes with maturity, we should be able to deal generously with newly independent nations without making them act as supplicant states. We should be able to understand their aspirations, share in their joys and sorrows and, in doing so, renew ourselves before something essential for America is lost forever.

NICARAGUAN ELECTIONS

HON. JOHN J. RHODES III

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, in the past, many of us who have supported the Nicaraguan Contras have felt that the peace in Nicaragua resulting from the absence of Contra pressure would not be democratic. Rather it would be the peace we gave Vietnam: A peace of slavery, poverty, and regional war, which endangers all Central American countries.

Yet many Members had last April no other choice but to help put together a meager funding for the Contras as "insurance" of free elections. At that time, and now as well, I was astounded by those who so cheerfully accepted credit for this compromise package which might not have been necessary had Members acted strongly in support of the Contras and their hopes for democracy in Nicaragua in the first place. Members had this chance when the question of Contra aid repeatedly came before the House, yet was repeatedly voted down by the majority. In the meantime, the Sandinista regime consolidated their power and tightened their grip on the people of Nicaragua.

Now, there is serious concern over how "democratic" the elections can be given Sandinista restraints on the opposition's access to television, restrictions on absentee voting, and other actions that threaten to make such elections a sham. A recent Wall Street Journal editorial lamented "Washington's Latin Legacy" noting various Sandinista practices to discourage democratic participation in the upcoming elections, including expelling the first person applying for observer status and confiscation of coffee plantations from three farmers who urged support for the opposition. The State Department is even compiling a list of such actions, which I would like to insert into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that all Nicaraguans are granted the freedoms of speech and worship, and be allowed the human and civil rights we enjoy here in our Nation. It is also my hope that all those who continually fought against funding of the freedom fighters remember to stand up just as cheerfully for the credit they deserve if the elections turn out to be as rigged and undemocratic as the 1984 elections were; now more than ever, the 1990 elections promise, so far, to be no better.

Despite their promises in the Esquipulas II and Tesoro Beach accords, the Sandinistas have placed restrictions on political participation and international observation of the political process, particularly since the May 7 elections in Panama.

In the Esquipulas II accords, the Sandinistas promised:

to move toward "an authentic democratic process, both pluralistic and participatory."

On June 14, police used tear gas to disperse taxi drivers peacefully protesting Sandinista economic policies.

On June 18, government permission for a private sector "march against hunger and misery" in Leon was denied.

On June 21, three large coffee estates were confiscated following owners' criticism of Sandinista economic policies.

A July 2 opposition march in Masaya was harassed by Sandinista thugs.

In the Tesoro Beach accords, the Sandinistas promised:

to reform the electoral law and "guarantee political organization and action in the broadest sense for political parties."

On April 18, the government passed electoral law reforms without good faith consultations with the opposition.

On May 17, five opposition parties were denied legal status. Four of these finally won legal status June 5.

Opposition leader Alfredo Cesar was not given a passport to travel to the June 20-22 Socialist International conference in Stockholm.

On June 26, Interior Ministry officers broke up a National Opposition Union planning meeting, claiming it was held without permission.

The main 14-party opposition bloc was denied permission for a rally in Ocotol July 9.

to "form a Supreme Electoral Council with a balanced participation of representatives from the opposition political parties."

On June 7, the National Assembly named a five-member Supreme Electoral Council with only one representative of the 14-party National Opposition Union coalition.

to invite international observers to "certify the integrity of the (election) process."

On May 24, two U.S. diplomats who had met with independent union leaders were expelled from Nicaragua.

On June 1, the Foreign Ministry sent a diplomatic note to all foreign missions warning against attendance at political rallies and social contact with the opposition.

On June 6, Foreign Minister D'Escoto told the OAS that its resolution on the Panamanian elections was "deplorable and unfortunate."

A representative of the nonpartisan U.S. group Freedom House who had applied for observer status was expelled from Nicaragua July 5.

Ministry of Interior officers prevented U.S. Congressman and diplomats from observing a July 30 opposition rally in Diriamba, near Managua.

Sandinista officials and the Sandinista-controlled media have stated that the U.S. would not be allowed to monitor the Nicaraguan electoral process.

to "guarantee the free functioning of the communications media."

On June 16, a La Prensa reporter was detained for two and a half hours for allegedly "spreading propaganda" on behalf of the opposition.

Foreign journalists at a July 2 opposition march were detained by police and had their credentials checked.

La Prensa is still required to buy its newsprint from the government, at artificially inflated prices.

TRIBUTE TO THE SOCIAL SECURITY DISTRICT OFFICE, CHARLESTON, SC

HON. ARTHUR RAVENEL, JR.

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. RAVENEL. Mr. Speaker, I am most proud that on August 4 our Social Security district office in Charleston was presented the Commissioner's Award for Office Excellence. This prestigious award is highly competitive—only 5 of the 252 Social Security offices in the Southeast were selected for this recognition.

My staff and I know first hand that the Charleston Social Security office provides outstanding service to our folks in the First Congressional District, for we work with them quite often and I repeatedly witness how dedicated and caring they are about their service.

It is an honor to list the names of the fine individuals who make this such an exceptional office:

ETHNIC HUNGARIAN REFUGEES FROM ROMANIA WALK FROM BUDAPEST TO PARIS TO CALL ATTENTION TO HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS BY THE ROMANIAN GOVERNMENT

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 4, 1989

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, the egregious violations of human rights by the Government of Romania are well known to the Members of Congress, and on many occasions we have adopted resolutions and amendments condemning these actions.

Just over a month ago in connection with the adoption of the foreign assistance legislation approved by the House, we adopted an amendment which noted:

The Government of * * * Romania continues its flagrant abuse of the human rights of its citizens, including the freedom of religion, freedom of speech and press, and the rights of ethnic minorities.

It further notes:

Hungarian, German, and other ethnic minorities have been subjected to a campaign of forced assimilation, including severe restrictions on the use of their own languages in education and in other cultural expressions.

As a result of these unconscionable human rights violations, literally thousands of ethnic Hungarians have fled their homes in Romania's region of Transylvania—homes where they and their ancestors have lived for a thousand years and more. Most of these ethnic Hungarians have fled to Hungary and thousands of them are living in temporary refugee facilities. During the recent historic visit of President Bush to Hungary, Mrs. Barbara Bush called attention to the plight of these tragic refugees by visiting a group of them in one of their camps.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform my colleagues of an effort by Hungarian refugees from Transylvania to call the attention of the world to their plight. On the occasion of the bicentennial of the French Revolution and of the Declaration of Rights of Man and the Citizen a group of Hungarian refugees will walk from Budapest to Paris—a distance of hundreds of miles. They are making this trek in the spirit of the motto of the 1703 Hungarian Walk of Independence: "Cum Deo pro patria et libertate"—"With God for country and liberty."

These Hungarian refugees from Transylvania—led by Okos Marton and Fuhos Gabor—are seeking through this dramatic, but peaceful means to call attention to the forced assimilation of the minorities in Transylvania, and the oppression of the people of Romania by their Government.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues in the Congress to join me in giving moral support to this important effort to call attention to human rights violations and to urge the Romanian Government to accept its international obligations to observe the human rights of its citizens, of whatever nationality.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, September 6, 1989

The House met at 12 noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

We remember, O gracious God, those who seek to serve You by serving others. On this day we specially recall those who labor in this place seeking to bring a measure of justice and mercy and peace to our troubled world.

We remember with gratitude the lives of MICKEY LELAND and LARKIN SMITH, their efforts to provide for other people the necessities and the opportunities of life. May we celebrate their dedication by doing the works of mercy wherever we are and by continuing the work they sought to do.

May Your blessing, O loving God, be with their families and friends, with all who mourn, and may Your spirit encourage us to do justice, love, mercy, and ever walk humbly with You. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

Mr. GALLEGLY. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1, rule I, I demand a vote on agreeing to the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Chair's approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. GALLEGLY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 267, nays 85, answered "present" 1, not voting 76, as follows:

So the Journal was approved.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, due to illness I was absent on rollcall no. 220. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye".

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT] please come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. BENNETT led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

IN MEMORY OF MR. LELAND AND MR. SMITH OF MISSISSIPPI

(Mr. GEPHARDT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield such time as he may consume to the minority whip, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH].

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, let me thank my colleague for yielding, and just say that I rise for our side of the aisle to say that during the break we lost two colleagues, both in the pursuit of their duty, both seeking to serve mankind, and that all Members will remember the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LELAND] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SMITH] and that we appreciate very much the leadership taking this moment to begin the session by recognizing these two very fine colleagues and Members whose memories will live on for a very long time in this body.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman, and I ask that all Members, with heavy hearts and bowed heads, let Members remember the service and contributions of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LELAND] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SMITH] with a moment of silence, and ask on behalf of both parties and all Americans, that we stand and have this moment of silence.

(A moment of silence was had.)

The message also announced that pursuant to Public Law 100-297, the Chair, on behalf of the President pro tempore, appoints Mr. METZENBAUM and Mr. Wendell N. Rollason of Florida, from private life, to the National Commission on Migrant Education.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

Washington, DC, September 5, 1989.

Hon. THOMAS S. FOLEY,
The Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of the certificate of election received from Honorable Jim Smith, Secretary of State, State of Florida, certifying that, according to the official returns of the Special Election held on August 29, 1989 the Honorable Ileana Ros-Lehtinen was elected to the Office of United States Representative in Congress from the Eighteenth Congressional District of Florida.

With great respect, I am,

Sincerely yours,

DONNALD K. ANDERSON,
Clerk.

By W. RAYMOND COLLEY,
Deputy Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the certificate.

The Clerk read the certificate, as follows:

STATE OF FLORIDA, DEPARTMENT OF STATE

I, Jim Smith, Secretary of State of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the following person was elected as Representative in Congress at the Special General Election held on the Twenty-ninth day of August, A.D., 1989, as shown by the election returns on file in this office.

Eighteenth Congressional District: Ileana Ros-Lehtinen.

SWEARING IN OF THE HONORABLE ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN OF FLORIDA AS A MEMBER OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. Will the Member-elect from the State of Florida please come forward?

Mrs. ROS-LEHTINEN appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

The SPEAKER. Congratulations. You are now a Member of Congress.

EXPRESSION OF APPRECIATION BY THE HONORABLE ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN, OF FLORIDA

(Mrs. ROS-LEHTINEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from Florida [Mrs. ROS-LEHTINEN] is recognized.

Mrs. ROS-LEHTINEN. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank my colleagues from the Florida delegation, including Senator GRAHAM.

It is indeed a pleasure and an honor to be elected to serve in this distinguished body. As a Cuban-American whose family has fled the horrors of communism, I think that this day serves to solidify the belief and the truth that the United States truly is the land of opportunity where all of our dreams can be made possible if we try hard enough. Thank you very much.

PROVIDING THE FUNDS FOR THE WAR AGAINST DRUGS

(Mr. SMITH of Iowa asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, since the program the President announced to speed up the war on drugs is essentially the same program the House passed several months ago as a part of the supplemental appropriations bill, the majority of the House is already on record in favor of the increases needed. The Appropriations Committee, which I subchair, which handles most of the drug funding, welcomes the administration's change of attitude toward the funding needed, but after the administration so vigorously and successfully opposed that $821 million appropriations bill for the same purpose only a few months ago, we need a positive statement now supporting new funding. Merely proposing to take the money from nonmilitary programs the administration did not support to begin with does not contribute to a funding solution. Since the appropriations for 1990 have already been allocated in compliance with the summit agreement and revising these programs and appropriations would take a lot of time, identifying the additional new revenues for this purpose or temporarily using some unobligated balances would be much faster.

Mr. Speaker, enough valuable time has been lost waiting for the administration's drug program report, instead of moving ahead with the fund, and so I urge the President to join the Congress in a good-faith effort to provide these funds.

SUPPORT THE PRESIDENT'S STRATEGY TO END THE DRUG SCOURGE

(Mr. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS. Mr. Speaker, I am in strong support of the President's strategy to fight the drug scourge facing our Nation today. As Members of this body know, we have had a policy toward drugs for the past few years, but this is the first time we have had an actual strategy to rid the United States of our drug problem.

The President outlined four key areas that we need to focus on and I strongly endorse these priorities.

I have just gotten back from a week in the major coca producing areas of Bolivia and Peru. Again and again, our delegation was told that if the United States did not have such an appetite for cocaine and its derivative, crack, they would not grow the coca. Cutting the demand for drugs in this country requires tougher laws and an unparalleled education program aimed at drug dealers and users, such as that used successfully in Hong Kong.

These countries are committed to helping us end this problem, but we must assist them in converting use of their land to those crops on which they can still earn a living. Destroying the coca crop, which we have the ability to do, is an admirable goal, but we cannot cut these campesinos livelihood alone.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to help the President eliminate this problem and support his strategy to end the drug scourge.

TRIBUTE TO MICKEY LELAND AND LARKIN SMITH

(Mr. HUBBARD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, first, congratulations to our newest member of the U.S. House of Representatives, ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN.

Second, President Bush last night outlined a Federal antidrug strategy which seeks a coordinated, cooperative commitment to address the drug problem by all Government agencies. Surely, we in Congress will do our part in this urgent effort to combat dangerous drugs. It is our biggest domestic problem ever.

Last, I want to pay tribute to our beloved colleagues MICKEY LELAND and LARKIN SMITH. MICKEY LELAND was headed toward a leadership role here in the U.S. House of Representatives when his life was cut short at 44.

LARKIN SMITH served only 7 months in Congress, but it was clear to all of us that Trent Lott's successor was definitely marked for prominence here in the U.S. House of Representatives.

The best monument to MICKEY LELAND would be legislation from this Congress to help eliminate poverty, disease and famine worldwide.

The best monument to LARKIN SMITH would be legislation from this Congress to help wipe out the serious drug problem.

It was the sight of an Ethiopian girl dying before his eyes that moved MICKEY LELAND to work against hunger.

It was the sight of Mississippi teenagers hooked on drugs that caused then-Sheriff Larkin Smith to work against drugs in southern Mississippi.

Let's work to keep their causes alive.

TRIBUTE TO A. BARTLETT GIAMATTI

(Mr. CONTE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, last Friday, suddenly, without warning, America lost one of its true superstars, A. Bartlett Giamatti, at 51 years of age. It has been said that all Bart Giamatti demanded of himself was everything.

Bart studied the plays of Shakespeare and the plays of Ozzie Smith. He contemplated the expansion of the universe as well as the expansion of the major leagues. And he was as captivated by the rhythm of a sonnet as he was with the pace of a ball game.

He was passionate, a romantic, a man who greeted his friends with a hearty bear hug.

Above all, Bart Giamatti was a man of integrity. He insisted upon integrity in scholarship and he demanded it in baseball.

He loved the Boston Red Sox, from his youth in South Hadley in my district in western Massachusetts to his presidency of Yale, where he reigned over the campus under a Red Sox cap. Even as president of the National League, he pulled for the Red Sox to win it all in 1986.

Just 5 short weeks ago, Bart joined his friends here in Congress for a reception in his honor. I had the privilege of introducing him at that event. He enjoyed himself and demonstrated the passion for life for which he will always be remembered.

For Bart, baseball was more than a game and academics was more than an exercise. In the game of life, Bart Giamatti hit for the cycle. We salute you Bart, and we'll miss you.

THE PRESIDENT'S DRUG POLICY

(Mr. TORRES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, we all stand ready to work with the President to go to war against the drug menace in this country as well as internationally. It is clear that the American people want action, not just talk, to combat drugs.

The President's new drug plan falls short on a number of fronts. For example, his proposals dealing with money laundering are deficient. The President, in very general terms, proposes expansion of domestic money laundering investigations and provides some additional funding for this effort. That is it; no specific policy recommendations other than increased investigations. His drug plan says that our ability to attack money laundering operations is limited. I must contest that.

I authored the antimoney laundering proposals that were enacted in the 1988 Anti-Drug Abuse Act. I can tell you now, almost 1 year after enactment, that we are still waiting for implementation of provisions to deter money laundering in this country. Immediate implementation and vigorous enforcement of these antimoney laundering statutes is necessary and would go a long way toward stopping the laundering of billions of dollars through our Nation's banks. Disrupting the flow of drug money profits is essential to winning the war on drugs.

While I applaud the tough measures the President is ready to take, he proposes to pay for them by cutting funding for some important domestic programs which the administration has opposed in the past. These include taking $50 million from a Housing Program, $40 million from a Juvenile Justice Program, and $320 million from the State Legalization Impact Assistance Grants Program. This last program, SLIAG, helps States pay for the education of newly legalized residents. Because California has so many of them, cutting funds for SLIAG would disproportionately affect California taxpayers, in particular. Congress must look at these proposals carefully to see how the budget is being "rearranged" in order to pay for the new drug plan.

Despite continuing rhetoric about the drug problem, the budget proposals presented by both President Reagan and President Bush have, time after time, sought to cut real dollar support for programs that deal with all aspects of the drug problem such as prevention, treatment, law enforcement and international drug control. President Bush's February 1989 budget proposed to fund only half of all the antidrug programs that were enacted in the 1988 Anti-Drug Abuse Act. That law authorized $2.7 billion for the war on drugs.

Major increases in spending will be needed to fund a real war on drugs. Los Angeles has become the cocaine capital of the United States. In L.A. County alone, it will take $3 billion for additional law enforcement, treatment, and counseling programs just to make a dent in this problem.

We will need tough policy initiatives, backed by the necessary resources, to reduce drug abuse and crime. The President's plan may represent a genuine effort to deal with the drug problem; however, the more we study it, I'm afraid the more apparent its limitations, both in terms of resources and policy, will become.

THANKS TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS DRUG STRATEGY

(Mr. CRAIG asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, I say to the President, "Thank you very much for developing a drug strategy to lead America in its war on drugs. As you lead in the development of an absolute and unequivocal social intolerance toward this plague, let us here in the House step aside from the partisanism that is beginning to grow, a partisanism that says we can offer more than someone else."

Let us get on with the business of funding and cooperating in the implementation of a comprehensive drug program that begins to save lives.

As we stand here in the well and play with the idea of who can win votes next November on a drug policy, the more we play with it the more lives we cost. This is not a partisan issue. It is now clearly a No. 1 national priority.

Thank you, Mr. President, for your program.

THERE HAS NEVER BEEN A WAR ON DRUGS

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, President Johnson declared war on drugs, President Nixon declared war on drugs, President Ford followed suit, President Carter declared war on drugs, President Reagan did, President Bush did. Congress has declared war on drugs. The Democrats have declared war on drugs. The Republicans have declared war on drugs.

Mr. Speaker, the fact is even Ronald McDonald has declared war on drugs. The truth is that there has never been a war on drugs.

Now, I want to try to support President Bush and I commend him and Mr. Bennett for what they are doing; but the bottom line remains that we should impose the death penalty on drug kingpins who import tons of heroin and cocaine.

Second of all, we have got to give massive amounts of money to the States. They make the bulk of the arrests, not the Feds.

Third of all, we should have mandatory drug education in this country.

And finally, I think we would be better served by putting young nonviolent offenders in a treatment program, not in jail where they are being raped.

So if we are really going to go to war, let us go to war, because Jimmy the Greek is laying odds about 40 to 1 against us again.

OUR NATIONAL DRUG CONTROL POLICY

(Mr. GUNDERSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, if President Bush were in the halls of Congress today, he would look at the national drug control strategy and ask each of us to look at the information presented to the American people last night and to begin the task of following through on legislation that we passed a year ago mandating this comprehensive strategy.

If our good friend, Congressman LARKIN SMITH, were in the halls of Congress today, he would ask us to look at the chart to my left, as he did every day when he was here in the Congress, and ask us to begin our commitment, not by criticizing the executive branch, but by eliminating the maze which exists here in the Congress.

A comprehensive drug control strategy cannot be completed with the maze that exists here in the halls of Congress over jurisdiction on this important issue.

The truth lies in what both of them have said. The war on drugs is just simply that. It is a war on drugs. It is not a Republican issue, not a Democratic issue, but an issue for all Americans to join together. We can solve our problems here in the Congress. We can enact for a starter the comprehensive strategy enacted by the President. Then if we want to debate whether we can, whether we should or whether we will fund steps above and beyond the President's request, that time will come, but let us get on with the business at hand.

THE PRESIDENT'S SPEECH ON DRUGS IS MOVING, BUT HIS COMMITMENT IS NOT

(Mrs. BOXER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, first, it is just not the same without MICKEY LELAND here, and I dedicate myself to his unfinished work.

Second, Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, on May 24 an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN] to increase drug wars and decrease star wars. It lost by eight votes, and our President opposed it.

In April, our President opposed the supplemental appropriation of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] for drugs. He said we did not need it.

Three months later the President is back with a war on drugs, and I am glad. His speech moved me, but his commitment did not.

Mr. President, your war will not give us the resources to stop the demand. If no one wants drugs in this country, the cartels will go belly-up, just like any business that no longer has any business.

The President proposes a 5-percent increase in drug education for our kids. That is no war, or maybe it is. Maybe it is a 100-year war, but we do not have a 100 years.

Mr. President, if we are going to catch more fish than you did on your vacation, you need to give us more bait and you need to pay for that bait.

A TRIBUTE TO THE LATE HONORABLE LARKIN SMITH

(Mr. COX asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, last night as I watched President Bush's drug speech on television, I could not help but think of my friend and fellow freshman fellow classmate, LARKIN SMITH. He was as ardent a champion of a drug-free America as ever served in this House. The discovery just a few weeks ago that he died in a crash in a Mississippi forest, of course stunned us all. But none are more saddened than we, his freshmen classmates. We share the memory of a man who all of us looked up to. LARKIN was before his election to Congress a Mississippi county sheriff who had spent 23 years in law enforcement. He was a man with strong beliefs, and the will to fight for these beliefs, particularly when it came to the war on drugs. As one of a handful of Congressmen with real experience in fighting a war on drugs, Sheriff SMITH saw the roadblocks in this Congress, and in a series of 28 speeches on this floor he pointed out how more than 80 committees, subcommittees, and task forces claim jurisdiction over the war on drugs.

The best thing that we can do in his memory is to eliminate that maze, to consolidate that oversight function, and to begin once and for all to fight a real war on drugs.

I would like just briefly to quote his admonition to this Congress:

> I urge my fellow soldiers not to grow weary, but to put on the full armor of battle. If we are serious about the scourge of drugs and crime in our Nation, we would be advised to adopt General MacArthur's admonition to Congress in 1951, when he stated: "In war, there is no substitute for victory."

Those were the words of LARKIN SMITH and they loom even larger in his death. Let us do justice to them.

A TRIBUTE TO THE LATE HONORABLE LARKIN SMITH

(Mr. WHITTEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to pay tribute to the memory of my friend and colleague in the Mississippi delegation, the late Congressman LARKIN SMITH.

LARKIN and I were last together at Mississippi State University, only a short time before his death, where we joined with our colleagues in paying tribute to Senator John Stennis.

Although he had only a brief 7 months to serve in the House, LARKIN had made an impact in several areas. We had worked together on several projects of interest to the people of his district and the State.

With a background in law enforcement, Congressman SMITH brought to the House an expertise in law enforcement, which served him in good stead in the war on drugs.

Although his congressional career was short, LARKIN had a long and dedicated career in public service, starting as a deputy sheriff in 1966 and working his way up to chief of police and then sheriff on the Mississippi gulf coast.

A product of the gulf coast, LARKIN was born in Poplarville, MS, went to school there and graduated from William Carey College in Gulfport. Working for more than 20 years in the field, he gained the respect of law enforcement officers throughout the coast region and the State.

To LARKIN's wife, and his family, we extend our greatest sympathies in their loss. We have lost a valued Member.

OHIOANS SUPPORT CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT ON FLAG BURNING

(Mr. WYLIE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I applaud the President for making the drug problem the subject of his first talk to the American people from the Oval Office. It is certain to raise the level of awareness among the American people on this, our No. 1 crisis issue.

The President was also right in calling for a constitutional amendment against flag burning. Mr. Paul Gelpe, owner of Swan Cleaners, felt so strongly about this issue that he put out petitions in all of his stores. He presented me with the petitions containing over 10,000 signatures and asked me to tell Members that the people in central Ohio support the President and me, since I introduced a constitutional resolution on this issue. I hold in my hand the petitions.

I think a constitutional amendment would be ratified by the States in less than a year, and if my colleagues do not think so, what is the harm in finding out?

WELCOME REPRESENTATIVE ROS-LEHTINEN

(Mr. BENNETT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I am coming to the well because I want to express my feeling of happiness. Our newest Member ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN, has come to the Florida delegation in Congress, a very competent lady from the State legislature for 8 years. She has a master's degree from Florida International and is getting a Ph.D. now from the University of Miami. She is a very outstanding person.

She is qualified in the field of child care. Members saw that she had her family with her, but she is also a legislator in that field as well, and an outstanding person.

I want her to know when she comes to Congress, as she has now, she comes to a nonpartisan spirit. We are nonpartisan from Florida, and we are for strengthening our country and the things that she and I and all of us stand for. We want to cooperate and make her career a good one here in Congress.

LEGISLATION TO MAKE TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS IN THE 1989 DISASTER ASSISTANCE ACT

(Mr. COMBEST asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COMBEST. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to make needed technical corrections in the 1989 Disaster Assistance Act that was recently signed into law. As passed by Congress, the new law was intended to eliminate the possibility of double payments, by reducing disaster payments by the "value" of the second or replacement crop.

However, there has been a gross misinterpretation of the replacement crop provision. Rather than count the "net value" of the second crop, the Department of Agriculture has taken the intent of Congress and twisted it into an unfair provision. USDA's interpretation will penalize those farmers who tried to salvage a crop year by planting a second crop in good faith. Furthermore, USDA will reward those people who did nothing but wait for Federal disaster payments.

My legislation is very simple; it would define the value of the second crop as "net value," and allows the cost of production to be determined on a county-by-county basis. Therefore, you are preventing double payments, while providing much needed relief to U.S. farmers. Let's not penalize the producer who tried to offset losses, and prevent damage to farmland caused by erosion.

In addition to my legislation, I am calling on the Department of Agriculture to make this needed change administratively. I encourage my colleagues to cosponsor this legislation, and bring the intent of Congress back into a very vital law.

KEEPING GUNS OUT OF THE HANDS OF THE DRUG LORDS

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, Sarah Brady is a very, very courageous woman, and she has pointed out a great, huge gaping hole in the President's whole drug program. That great, huge gaping hole is about where the Colombian drug cartels and drug lords are getting all of their weapons.

Guess where they are getting them? They are getting them from the United States of America, made in the USA.

It seems that the drug lords prefer the United States automatic weapons because they are easier to hide, they are lighter weight, they shoot faster, and they can wipe out more people. Now a lot of those people are ours.

I think she points out that if we do not do something about this, we are in real trouble. The President stopped the importation of foreign-made automatic weapons. It is now time to stop the exportation of domestic-made automatic weapons to the drug cartels who are shooting our own.

This is a hole, and if it is not filled we are never going to win this war. We cannot stop a war unless we get the weapons away from the other side, rather than providing them with more.

SECRETARY MOSBACHER'S LACK OF ENFORCEMENT OF THE ENDANGERED SPECIES ACT

(Mr. RAVENEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RAVENEL. Mr. Speaker, our gutless Secretary of Commerce who caved in to lawless shrimpers in the gulf and refused to enforce the Endangered Species Act as it pertains to sea turtles, now says he will enforce the law. But how many turtles have drowned because of Mosbacher's timidity in the face of threats of violence? And will the law be truly enforced or will the environmental community have to go back to court to ask the judge to see that it is enforced?

Already, this very day, death threats have come in to Department of Commerce and environmental group offices. Over the past month this Member of Congress has received several such threats at home and his local FBI office has been independently alerted as to which shrimpers are making them.

Weakness only breeds violence, Mr. Mosbacher. What a disgraceful mess your indecision and appeasement has brought.

WE NEED A MORE COURAGEOUS APPROACH ON THE DRUG WAR

(Mr. FAZIO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, last night, President Bush outlined his new plan for the war on drugs. Unfortunately, there is little new about how we are going to pay for the plan.

To offset new drug program spending, President Bush has sent a list of programs to cut, mainly domestic ones. However, these are many of the same proposals which both President Bush and former President Reagan have sent to Congress time and again and which have been overwhelmingly rejected by Members of both parties.

Taking from one program to pay for another is not new to the administration. But what about the other problems which have infected our Nation: homelessness, chronic unemployment, illiteracy, and the economic decline of our inner cities.

Should we rob other important programs which tackle these problems to pay for the war on drugs? No doubt such a course would lead to a shearing of our social fabric, a worsening of the drug problem, and an escalation in drug-related crime.

When are we going to fully fund those programs which help children to lead productive lives and not turn to drugs? Programs like Head Start, which because of a lack of funding, reach less than 20 percent of the 2.5 million eligible children. Or programs like WIC, which feed less than 20 percent of the eligible women, infants, and children. When is the President going to send a plan that attacks the drug problem at its root by offering the underprivileged something more than the hopelessness of drugs?

If we are going to win this war on drugs, then we will need more than a mere reshuffling of domestic funds. Mr. President, the Dooney Waters of this country deserve a more courageous approach.

GENERATING REVENUE FOR THE WAR ON DRUGS

(Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, last night, President Bush outlined his strategy for fighting—and winning—the war on drugs. I think we all agree that his proposals for stiffer penalties, more education, and more drug treatment facilities are necessary first steps in what will be a long and committed effort to rid our Nation of the deadly drug plague. However, it is clear from comments in the media and around the Capitol that we all do not agree on how to finance this war on drugs.

Many people around Washington, including the majority party in this Congress, would have the American people believe that the only way to finance such a war is by raising taxes. The archaic liberal ideology of tax and spend is so engraved in their minds that they feel the only way to save our schools and neighborhoods from the evils of drugs, is to punish the American citizen with higher taxes. Mr. Speaker, Americans are paying more than enough taxes. They expect—and deserve—that we allocate this money properly.

In fiscal year 1990, Federal outlays will total over $1.2 trillion. The President's proposal calls for overall spending to increase nearly $2.2 billion. That amount represents less than 1 percent of the total Federal budget. I ask my tax raising colleagues around Washington to ponder those numbers for a moment. Would any of you believe it if your son or daughter told you that they could not save 1 penny out of every dollar? No, of course you wouldn't. The question that then remains is: Why do you expect the American taxpayer to believe it?

Next week, I will hold a special order outlining and discussing several specific ways in which we can generate the necessary revenue to fight—and win—this war on drugs, without raising taxes. In the meantime, I would ask those naysayers around Washington to halt their cries for new or higher taxes. This is a war on drugs—not the taxpayers' pocketbook.

PRESIDENT'S PROPOSAL ON DRUGS DOES NOT GO FAR ENOUGH

(Mr. APPLEGATE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. APPLEGATE. Mr. Speaker, I along with many others want to congratulate the President for his speech last night and for what it is he wants to do as far as drugs are concerned. What he did say was that the drug problem is the gravest domestic threat facing our Nation, and I agree with that.

But while saying that, why are we only spending or finding $700 million in new revenues? This is like trying to bring down a herd of charging elephants with a BB gun. This is all-out war, and we have to be prepared to fight that war.

The drug war lords are killing our children's minds, they are killing our children's bodies. Can we afford not to do all that we can do?

Yes, we can try to transfer money out of some of our favorite domestic programs. But we have a trillion-dollar budget. What about the waste, abuse, and fraud in HUD and in the Defense Department, and in all of these others?

There must be $40 or $50 billion there that we can spend.

We are talking about $8 billion total in the drug program to fight it; the Colombian warlords have tens of billions of dollars in an all-out war.

What we need to do is address this with everything that we can possibly address it with.

Education is going to be the No. 1 thing that we have to deal with. We should start with our children from the time that they are born.

This came upon us in 20 years; it is going to take 20 years to get rid of it.

ANTIDISCRIMINATION STATUS FOR HOMOSEXUALS

(Mr. DANNEMEYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, during the decade of the 1980's the American people witnessed the fact that the leaders of the Democratic Party in America amended their by-laws to establish antidiscrimination status for homosexuals. They also amended their by-laws to make clear that every State Democratic Party in America must establish affirmative action in every committee and subcommittee for homosexuals.

Having done this, any Democratic Member of the House today who may be pursuing that lifestyle can probably ask any of his Democratic colleagues who are criticizing him today: "Why are you doing this to me? Didn't our party welcome this movement into its national standard as a means of achieving acceptability and equality along with the heterosexual lifestyle?" I think that is a question that the American people should be reflecting on today, namely whether we will affirm the homosexual lifestyle on a par with the heterosexual lifestyle.

THE PRESIDENT'S DRUG INITIATIVE

(Mr. GILMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, the President's narcotics message to our Nation is a reasoned, comprehensive strategy for combating our Nation's public enemy No. 1—those purveyors of poison—the drug peddlers.

I applaud the President's proposals attacking narcotics on all five major fronts: By eradication, interdiction, enforcement, education, and treatment.

Our House Select Committee on Narcotics has long recognized that our drug efforts cannot be successful by focusing on any single aspect of this epidemic, but must be waged on all five of these battlefronts simultaneously and at every level of government and by each and every one of us.

It is now up to us in the Congress, on both sides of the aisle, to get down to business and work together with the administration in making the President's antidrug strategy a reality in overcoming this scourge on our society.

HAZARDOUS MATERIALS TRANSPORTATION

(Mr. THOMAS A. LUKEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. THOMAS A. LUKEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask Members to consider the subject of hazmat [hazardous materials] transportation.

Recently, a week or two ago, in Michigan there was another derailment and a cloud of a toxic material that caused evacuation of thousands of people there. It happened in Miamisburg, OH, near my district a couple of years ago also. There, a resourceful fire chief who was universally praised for his actions in that situation, even though he was a trusted, tried and true veteran professional, could not find out what toxic materials were in that—it turned out to be sulfur—in that tank car for over 11 hours.

The question that I address to you, and it could happen in any of your districts, your constituents are aware of it: "Where will the next Bhopal actually strike?"

We have hazardous materials transportation legislation, a tame law, a bland one that is ineffective, that is merely confusing and it has not been changed in 15 years.

Mr. Speaker, the subcommittee which I chair has been studying transportation of hazardous materials. We have recommendations. We are introducing a piece of legislation within the next week or two and I earnestly ask Members to consider this because it means so much to all of your citizens, all of your constituents who are intensely interested. We hope you will cosponsor this legislation.

LET US REPEAL THE CATASTROPHIC MESS NOW

(Mr. ROTH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, last June, a few of us voted against the Medicare catastrophic bill. A small group of us saw the problems and as we predicted, it is indeed a catastrophe for the 33 million senior citizens who depend on Medicare.

Now, after hearing from your constituents, I hope every Member of Congress will vote to repeal this legislative mess.

This bill forces seniors to pay a new tax for benefits they can't choose—they don't need—and they do not want.

This bill was Big Brother at its worst—and fortunately America's senior citizens cannot be fooled or bullied into keeping quiet.

It is time to wipe the slate clean. The majority in Congress should listen to the people and join us in repealing this bad law.

COUNTING DOWN TO THE CONTINUING RESOLUTION

(Mr. PORTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, imagine that it is 3 weeks and 3 days from right now and this House is passing a continuing resolution because we have not enacted all 13 appropriation bills.

What a horrible apparition. What a profound embarrassment that would be.

Mr. Speaker, it does not have to be that way. Last year, with Presidential leadership, we passed all the appropriation bills before September 30. We can enact the spending bills on time this year, too. The House passed all 13. The Senate will soon pass its fifth. There's absolutely no reason why we cannot have 13 conference reports on the President's desk before October 1.

Mr. Speaker, I know that Members of your party have written opposing a continuing resolution. I know that Senator MITCHELL wants to meet the deadline. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. UPTON], the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] and I recently sent a letter to the President, signed by 150 Members of the House, asking to oppose any continuing resolution, and pledging to support a veto. Let Members not waste these efforts, Mr. Speaker. Let Members not disgrace this institution again. Mr. Speaker, make the timely enactment of the 13 separate appropriations bills your top priority.

AN ALTERNATIVE TO DRUGS

(Mr. POSHARD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. POSHARD. Mr. Speaker, I stand ready to assist the President and my colleagues here in Congress in the war on drugs which the President officially proclaimed last night.

I am glad to see that we are facing up to this plague affecting our families, neighborhoods, and schools.

But while we are talking about cracking down on users and sellers, and being tougher on the source of the drug supply itself, we should not forget one very simple thing.

In this war on drugs, while we ask our society to say no, we have to give it something to say yes to.

People who see high unemployment and a lack of opportunity as a disincentive to a productive life, and instead turn to drugs, must be given an alternative.

It starts with giving people the basic skills to compete for a job—offering them the opportunity to use those skills—then rewarding them for their efforts.

We have to do something immediately about the drug crisis which is turning our cities into chaos and disrupting the calm of our rural communities. But we must not forget the long-term remedy: Giving people a real reason to say no to drugs, giving them an education and a job, so they may say yes to their dreams.

NATIONAL DRUG CONTROL STRATEGY

(Mr. OXLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, the quarterback called the signals last night in America's largest and most important battle. That signal was the national drug control strategy. It was new. It was bold, it was tough, and it was innovative. We also must realize it is just one of the steps we must take to win the drug fight. As the President stated last night, the best way for America to solve the drug problem is for all Americans to remain drug free.

There is a choice to make on the issue of drug use. The choice for America is simple and straightforward: either use illegal drugs and contribute to the problem, or do not use drugs and become part of the solution.

I was particularly pleased with the President's proposal to more than double the amount of aid sent to State and local law enforcement officials, the frontline troops in the war against drugs. More than doubling of Federal grants to State and local law enforcement, amounting to over $350 million, the maximum level offered by this Congress for 1990, and more on the way in 1991 and 1992.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we have already heard from some of the naysayers, and undoubtedly we will hear from some more. However, Mr. Speaker, let us be honest. Is the strategy perfect? No. Is the strategy the silver bullet we are looking for? The answer is no. However, is the national drug control strategy, the blueprint and the guiding principle, and appropriate policy statement to fight the war on drugs? The answer, Mr. Speaker, is a resounding yes.

CONGRATULATIONS TO PRESIDENT BUSH

(Mr. HUGHES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I want to join my colleagues in offering my congratulations to the President. The President, I think, made a very significant statement yesterday. The strategy that he proposed is a good one. The very fact that the President, for the first time in at least 10 years, in both Democratic and Republican administrations, put the prestige, the credibility, and the strength of the Presidency behind a comprehensive drug program, that is a significant step forward.

I particularly applaud his commitment of additional resources. From a source country down to the user, a full court press is needed, up and down the chain of foreign countries, where the contraband is grown to the user on the street.

Mr. Speaker, we could debate all day whether or not we need new taxes or do not need new taxes. It is time to put rhetoric aside and find the money. It has been suggested that will be easy, and I submit to Members, Mr. Speaker, we have not fully funded the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988. We could not find the money. We have a $1-billion, almost $500-million shortfall. I would say to my colleagues, we need to find the money. The President, I believe, is committed to that. We need to find the money for the demand reduction side, education, and treatment, and also on the supply side where we can do much more than we have done in years past.

THE PRESIDENT'S DRUG STRATEGY NEEDS OUR SUPPORT

(Mr. HANCOCK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, a crisis exists in America today. I join the President in attacking the drug menace sweeping our Nation. I applaud President Bush and Bill Bennett on this effort. Their strategy is a comprehensive plan of attack to focus our resources.

Illegal drugs represent an illegal $200 billion underground industry. Corruption and payoffs are the name of the game. As the country of Colombia can witness, governments are collapsing at their very foundations. Citizens and public officials are being murdered in the streets by the drug lords. More severe penalties need to be implemented immediately, by increasing fines and jail sentences to users and dealers. This must be a coordinated effort involving the administration, Bill Bennett, Congress, and the American people. President Bush has proposed a strategy to lead our Nation away from this evil. Let's increase the criminal fines to help pay for this fight.

We must continue the struggle championed by the late Congressman LARKIN SMITH of Mississippi. His intense passion and prolonged commitment to fight this unending battle is a shining point of light to the American people. A lot of work needs to be done. The President must have our help and I hereby enlist in the citizens army to battle the "war on drugs."

WAR ON THE STREETS

(Mr. GUARINI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend remarks.)

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, there is a war on the streets of America, and there is a war on the streets of Colombia. The American people are ready to fight back. They want their President to lead.

Last night, George Bush took an important first step. Last night our President addressed the Nation, and unveiled a national drug control strategy.

Now George Bush needs to take a second step. The American people need more than just a national strategy, indeed. They need a national commitment.

America needs more than tough law enforcement. We need more emphasis on education, drug treatment, rehabilitation training, and research. We need to refocus our resources on reducing demand.

Our commitment still fails in this important component. Seventy-six percent of the American people say they want the Government to spend more on fighting drugs. Yet this proposal calls for only authorizing what the bipartisan report in Congress authorized 3 years ago in the 1986 omnibus drug bill. It is time for the President, for Congress, for Democrats and Republicans alike, and the American families to win this war together. Our future indeed depends on it.

GETTING SERIOUS ABOUT FIGHTING THE WAR ON DRUGS

(Mr. WALKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, this Congress last year instructed the President of the United States to appoint a drug czar to coordinate drug programs in the country, and for that drug czar, in coordination with the President to develop a plan for fighting drugs in the country.

President Bush has now done his part. Last night he proposed a strategy which is both comprehensive and tough. What we have heard since that strategy has been proposed is a chorus of criticism. It sounds to me as though some liberals are more interested in spending money and raising taxes than they are in fighting drugs.

What is really needed is for us to begin to mobilize and to get the President what he needs and what he has asked for in order to carry out his strategy.

That would involve a couple of different things. First of all, we ought to get moving on the crime bill that he sent up here earlier this year. A number of the component parts of the strategy is embodied in that crime bill. That bill has been bottled up in the Judiciary Committee and has yet to have a hearing and has yet to see the light of day. We ought to get it out on the floor and get it passed.

Second, we ought to see to it that the President's package as announced last night gets considered as a whole, not divided up among 80 different committees and subcommittees where it can be piecemealed to death but considered as a package.

Third, we ought to begin to obey the laws that are already on the books. This Congress has an obligation under the drug-free workplace provisions passed last year to have drug-free workplace rules in each and every office. Most of us do not have them to this day despite the fact that the law has been on the books for a year.

Mr. Speaker, we ought to be doing all these things if we are really serious about fighting the war on drugs.

A NEED TO TARGET LOS ANGELES IN THE WAR AGAINST DRUGS

(Mr. LEVINE of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I want my first words, as we reconvene, to be in memory of our irreplaceable friend, MICKEY LELAND. We will miss him sorely.

Mr. Speaker, last night the President appropriately engaged in the war against drugs. I am pleased that the President is taking a serious stand against this deadly scourge threatening America, but I am frustrated that the strategy still does not target resources and personnel to the source of the Nation's drug problem, southern California.

Mr. Speaker, if we do not target Los Angeles in the war on drugs, we begin our war in retreat. The picture has become tragically clear. Los Angeles leads the Nation in imports of cocaine and heroin and in production of PCP. Over 50 percent of the cocaine coming into the United States comes through Los Angeles. Los Angeles drug gangs have set up shop in over 50 cities around America, from Baltimore to Portland to Washington, DC. It is a sad but unavoidable truth that Los Angeles is now the source supplying the rest of the country. If anybody doubts that, I suggest they just look at the last 3 days of the Washington Post where headline stories have talked about the Los Angeles connection.

Mr. Speaker, I support the President's efforts to help our Andean friends, but support abroad, ignoring southern California at home, is to close our back door while leaving our front door wide open.

Mr. Speaker, in 1988 Los Angeles had 83 DEA agents and New York had over 300. If the administration does not label Los Angeles as a high-intensity drug area, then Congress must do so.

THE PRESIDENT'S DRUG PLAN

(Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I commend the President for declaring a war on drugs last night, but the plan he outlined seems more like a whimper than a war. His goal of reducing illicit drug use by 5 percent a year is modest, at best, and is even less than the reductions in the last few years without this new initiative.

Mr. Speaker, we received the President's document last night which had the subheading, "National Priorities." The American people are clear in defining their priorities, a new poll shows that 44 percent of all Americans place drugs as the No. 1 problem in this Nation. Yet, the President's plan does not begin to give the drug war the priority it deserves and requires. With the Bush plan in fiscal year 1990, there is committed only $700 million in new resources. Ironically, this Nation still spends more than $50 billion a year to keep troops stationed in the Pacific in Korea and Japan, ostensibly to fight an enemy that was defeated decades ago. But, the President would only commit one-sixth of that to fight an enemy that is on our doorsteps, in our schoolyards, and attacking our children.

Years ago another President used to say he spoke softly and carried a big stick. Well, President Bush seems to be speaking loudly and carrying a twig.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS AND TRANSPORTATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MFUME) laid before the House the following communication from the chairman of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation, which was read and, without objection, referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS AND TRANSPORTATION,
Washington, DC, July 27, 1989.

Hon. THOMAS S. FOLEY,
The Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to the provisions of the Public Buildings Act of 1959, as amended, the House Committee on Public Works and Transportation approved the following project on July 20, 1989:

Lease Prospectus: Department of Veterans Affairs, Boston, Massachusetts.

The original and one copy of the authorizing resolution are enclosed.

Sincerely,

GLENN M. ANDERSON,
Chairman.

There was no objection.

THE NECESSARY STEPS TOWARD SOLVING AMERICA'S DRUG PROBLEM

(Mr. DERRICK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I think the President did pitifully little last night, considering the fact that we consider drugs to be our No. 1 domestic problem. If this is our No. 1 domestic problem and we have a budget, why is it only less than 1 percent of our total budget if this is the No. 1 war we are fighting in this Nation domestically today?

I support the President in what he has done in Colombia. I think all the Colombian drug lords ought to be eradicated. It is nice that we are sending them 100 million dollars' worth of used military equipment, but what bothers me, quite frankly, is that we are going to sit back very comfortably after the President has made his statement and think that because we have sent $100 million down there and we have obligated ourselves to send a couple of billion dollars to Central America and South America to eradicate the manufacture of drugs, we have cured the drug problem.

As long as our country has the tremendous appetite that we have for drugs, there is going to be someone who is going to try to satisfy that appetite and make millions of dollars in the process. We as a nation have to recognize that it is not a Colombian problem, it is not a problem in South America, it is not a problem in Central America, it is our problem as a nation.

Mr. Speaker, when we are willing to make drugs socially unacceptable in this Nation—that is to say that when our neighbor takes drugs, we try to get him off of them, but if we cannot do it, he has to suffer the consequences of either public ridicule or being locked up—when we are willing to accept that sort of responsibility, when we are willing to accept the responsibility in our local communities, in our churches, in our homes, and in our schools, and when we are willing to say, "No more drugs in this country," then is when our drug problem will be solved.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE NATIONAL CORPORATION FOR HOUSING PARTNERSHIPS AND NATIONAL HOUSING PARTNERSHIP—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

(For message, see proceedings of the Senate of today, Wednesday, Sept. 6, 1989.)

A CALL FOR A BIPARTISAN APPROACH TO DEALING WITH THE DRUG PROBLEM

(Mr. DREIER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, we have seen in the past 6 months legislative packages proposed from the White House to deal with clean air, the budget deficit, Central America, crime, education, NATO, the savings and loan crisis, and a wide range of packages. Continuing that pattern, last night we saw that the President has offered us a very important program to deal with one of the major crises this Nation is facing, that of course, being the drug problem.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is important that we deal with this in a bipartisan way, and I have to say that I hope very much that the partisan rhetoric and the criticism we have heard of this program will not continue.

President Bush is a product of this body. He served as a Member of the House of Representatives. He is the first President in 13 years to have been a Member of Congress. I believe that he knows something about the legislative process.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, he knows that we are going to make some modifications in the bill, but let us address the drug crisis in a bipartisan way.

RESULTS, NOT RHETORIC, NEEDED IN THE WAR AGAINST DRUGS

(Mrs. LOWEY of New York asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. LOWEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I applauded the President's commitment when I heard him speak last night, but I think it is time for results and not rhetoric.

I just came back from a tour through my district, and I visited schools and drug treatment centers. I went to one in particular, a center called Renaissance. When you see those young people that were given back their lives through programs such as Renaissance, when you visit Renaissance and you meet with people who have given their lives as teachers and who are barely paid as much as that of a person working for McDonald's or a person working for the local hamburger heaven, you realize that there are programs that are working and there are centers that are doing the job.

Mr. Speaker, although I applaud the President's sincerity, unless we are going to put the resources behind the words, we are not going to accomplish anything.

I spoke with people from the programs this morning. How many kids' lives are going to be redeemed with a couple of more dollars? We need millions of dollars throughout the country.

So, Mr. Speaker, I hope that together in a bipartisan fashion we are going to address this war and not just of skirmishes, because our lives are at stake, our families are at stake, and our futures are at stake.

NATIONAL OCEANIC AND ATMOSPHERIC ADMINISTRATION OCEAN AND COASTAL PROGRAMS AUTHORIZATION ACT OF 1989

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 229 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 229

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 1668) to authorize appropriations for certain ocean and coastal programs of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and the amendment made in order by this resolution and which shall not exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries now printed in the bill as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule and each section shall be considered as having been read. In lieu of the amendments recommended by the Committees on Public Works and Transportation and Science, Space, and Technology, it shall be in order to consider amendments, if offered by Representative Jones of North Carolina, or his designee. Said amendments may be considered en bloc and shall not be subject to a demand for a division of the question in the House or in the Committee of the Whole. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MFUME). The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DERRICK] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. PASHAYAN] and pending that, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 229 provides for the consideration of H.R. 1668, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration Ocean and Coastal Programs Authorization Act of 1989. The rule is open and provides that the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. The rule further provides for 1 hour of general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and the amendment made in order by this resolution, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. After general debate, the rule provides that the bill shall be considered for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

The rule states that it shall be in order to consider the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries now printed in the bill as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the 5-minute rule and each section shall be considered as having been read. In lieu of the amendments recommended by the Committee on Public Works and Transportation and the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology, the rule makes it in order to consider the amendments of Representative JONES of North Carolina or his designee. Said amendments may be considered en bloc and shall not be subject to a demand for a division of the question in the House or in the Committee of the Whole.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the rule provides that at the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment, any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute and provides for one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 1668 authorizes $529 million for certain ocean and coastal programs at the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. This amount includes funding for the National Ocean Service, for oceanic and atmospheric research, and for general program support. House Resolution 229 will provide for the expeditious consideration of this bill and I urge my colleagues to adopt this rule.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 229 is an open rule under which the House will consider legislation authorizing appropriations for fiscal 1990 for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

The bill made in order by this rule, H.R. 1668, authorizes $529 million in appropriations for fiscal year 1990 for the ocean and coastal programs carried out by the NOAA.

The rule makes in order the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee's amendment in the nature of a substitute, that is now printed in the bill, as original text for the purpose of amendment under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. Speaker, the bill as reported from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries was sequentially referred to four other committees in late June.

Two of those committees, the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the Committee on Interior, did not report amendments to the bill.

The Committee on Public Works and Transportation and the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology, however, did report committee amendments.

In lieu of the amendments recommended by the Committee on Public Works and Transportation and the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology, the rule makes in order amendments to be offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES], the chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The amendments to be offered by Mr. JONES may be offered en bloc and are not subject to a demand for a division of the question in the House or in the Committee of the Whole.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the rule permits one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, this is the first time since the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration was created in 1970 that the House will have an opportunity to consider a bill covering all the various programs of the Agency.

Each of the authorization levels reported by the three committees involved, the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the Committee on Public Works and Transportation, and the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology exceed the administration's 1990 budget request.

Under this open rule, the Members will be able to consider amendments in a fair manner.

Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 229 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 1668.

The Chair designates the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CARR] as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, and requests the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DERRICK] to assume the chair temporarily.

□ 1348

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 1668) to authorize appropriations for certain ocean and coastal programs of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, with Mr. DERRICK (Chairman pro tempore) in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 229, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERTEL] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from California [Mr. SHUMWAY] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERTEL].

Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, oceans are the source and sustainer of life on our planet. Throughout our history, we have been a maritime nation. The vast majority of our country's population lives within 2 hours of our Nation's coasts. We rely on our oceans and coastal resources for security, livelihoods and recreation.

Today, we take up H.R. 1668, The Ocean and Coastal Programs Authorization Act of 1989. This bill represents the first time Congress has considered separate and comprehensive authorization legislation for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's Ocean and Coastal Programs. For the past 8 years, overall funding for NOAA has been flat, barely keeping pace with inflation. This flat funding profile has placed an unbearable squeeze on ocean and coastal programs.

In 1980, ocean and coastal programs comprised 46 percent of the total NOAA budget. In 1988 and 1989, this share decreased to only 36 percent. Since 1980, ocean programs have lost more than $500 million to inflation. The administration's budget for fiscal year 1990 would result in further reduction to NOAA's budget by 26 percent. Decreases are proposed in mapping and charting ocean circulation programs, ocean assessment activities, acquisition of new estuary research reserves and marine sanctuaries. The biggest cut is the proposed termination of the Coastal Zone Management Grants to States, slashing the budget by $33.9 million H.R. 1668 represents an outstanding bipartisan effort to exert congressional leadership to revitalize a demoralized agency. I would like to take a minute to thank my colleagues across the aisle for their cooperation and leadership. Five committees have reviewed this legislation and made their suggestions which we will incorporate shortly in an en bloc amendment. I particularly want to thank the gentleman from California [Mr. SHUMWAY], the ranking member of the Oceanography Subcommittee. Today's bill is the result of our simultaneous reactions to budget presentations earlier in this spring.

It was clear that 97 percent of NOAA's budget is included in the Operations Research and Facilities [ORF] accounts. Many of the agency's programs are not authorized by statute but are administratively determined with funding drawn from the ORF account. As a result when there is a shortfall, which happened this spring with the weather satellite program, ocean and coastal programs were raided for $29 million dollars. That would have effectively ended all ocean and coastal research by NOAA. Moreover, the Merchant Marine Committee was never notified of this decision.

H.R. 1668 does not seek to micromanage the administration of NOAA. It is a baseline bill which we believe will help the new administrator of NOAA to revitalize this critical agency. We hope to bring this measure annually to the floor to stablize funding and return the United States to world class status in oceanographic research.

There are so many important scientific questions we are only beginning to understand: Global change; biological diversity; the circulation of oceans and the transport of pollution; the creation and forecasting of storm systems at sea. We must work at these issues and we believe this bill is a good start.

BILL SUMMARY

Authorizes NOAA's ocean and coastal programs for fiscal year 1990 at levels consistent with the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries' views and estimates submitted to the Budget Committee;

Authorizes NOAA's mapping, charting, and geodesy programs at $47,092,000. These programs include nautical and aeronautical charting and survey work on the exclusive economic zone;

Authorizes the agency's observations and assessment programs at a total of $65,920,000. Most of NOAA's pollution assessment work, including its responsibilities under the National Ocean Pollution Planning Act and title II of the Marine Protection Research, and Sanctuaries Act, are conducted under this category;

Authorizes the agency's ocean and coastal management programs at $59,623,000. The Coastal Zone Management Act, the National Marine Sanctuaries Program, and the Deep Seabed Hard Minerals Resources Act are administered under this category;

Authorizes NOAA's atomospheric programs at $42,159,000;

Authorizes the agency's ocean and Great Lakes programs at $100,000,000. This category includes the National Sea Grant College Program, National Undersea Research Program, and the Great Lakes Environmental Research Laboratory. Funds are authorized for the Great Lakes Research Office established under the Clean Water Act;

Authorizes $3 million of Sea Grant funds to be used for priority oyster disease research;

Authorizes NOAA's program support efforts at $158,110,000. This category covers administration and services, facilities, marine and aircraft services and includes restoration and rehabilitation funds for NOAA ships; and Requires the agency to notify the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries and the Senate Commerce Committee of any reprogramming of funds authorized by the bill.

Mr. Chairman, there are so many speeches that have been made around the country and in this body about the environment, about the problems of global warming, about the problems of pollution, but all these speeches do not always touch on the lack of knowledge that we have, for all the things I have mentioned as far as weather, as far as atmosphere, as far as global warming, the oceans have more to do with all those issues than any other single entity. That is why we are having this authorization. That is why we are fighting the administration's cuts, because they were ill thought out, because we know that the American people and the people of the world have very grave concerns in this area. By having this authorization, the subcommittee and the full committee, joining with the other four standing committees, is called attention to the fact that we have underfunded this research, this basic research, in so many, many areas, that deal with the future of the people of our country and really of the earth itself.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, H.R. 1668 authorizes all of the ocean and coastal programs of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration for fiscal year 1990 and represents the first time that the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries has reported consolidated legislation for these programs.

I would like to thank the chairman of our Oceanography and Great Lakes Subcommittee, our colleague from Michigan [Mr. HERTEL], for introducing this bill and moving it through the committee. It is an important step for the committee to take.

Mr. Chairman, the bill totals $529.1 million in suggested funding levels for all of NOAA's ocean and coastal programs and for the agency's support costs. The numbers in this bill are consistent with our committee's recommendations to the Budget and Appropriations Committees and represent a bipartisan position in behalf of NOAA.

As reported by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, H.R. 1668:

Authorizes NOAA's mapping, charting, and geodesy programs at $47,092,000. These programs include nautical and aeronautical charting and survey work on the exclusive economic zone;

Authorizes the agency's observations and assessment programs at a total of $65,920,000. Most of NOAA's pollution assessment work, including its responsibilities under the National Ocean Pollution Planning Act and title II of the Marine Protection, Research, and Sanctuaries Act, are conducted under this category;

Authorizes the agency's ocean and coastal management programs at $59,623,000. The Coastal Zone Management Act, the National Marine Sanctuaries Programs, and the Deep Seabed Hard Mineral Resources Act are administered under this category;

Authorizes NOAA's climate and air quality programs at $55,473,000. The agency's tropical oceans and global climate change programs are included within this category;

Authorizes NOAA's atmospheric programs at $42,159,000;

Authorizes the agency's ocean and Great Lakes programs at $100 million. This category includes the National Sea Grant College Program, National Undersea Research Program, and the Great Lakes Environmental Research Laboratory. Funds are authorized for the Great Lakes Research Office established under the Clean Water Act;

Authorizes $3 million of Sea Grant funds to be used for priority oyster disease research;

Authorizes NOAA's program support efforts at $158,110,000. This category covers administration and services, facilities, marine and aircraft services and includes restoration and rehabilitation funds for NOAA ships; and Requires the agency to notify the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries and the Senate Commerce Committee of any reprogramming of funds authorized by the bill.

Recent national concern about the ongoing environmental decline of our coastal areas underscores the importance of this legislation. Unfortunately, the executive budget has not reflected this heightened public concern.

The last administration consistently recommended funding cuts in NOAA's oceans, coastal and fisheries programs, while the agency's atmospheric and satellite side has been receiving greater funding.

In 1980, for example, ocean programs accounted for 46 percent of NOAA's budget—but in 1988 and 1989, they comprised only 36 percent. Since 1981, the Nation's oceans programs have lost more than $500 million to inflation.

The situation is not much better with this administration's fiscal year 1990 proposal. The President's Commerce Department budget would cut National Ocean Service programs by 23 percent compared to the fiscal year 1989 appropriations. Decreases are proposed in mapping, charting, and geodesy; circulatory survey programs; ocean assessment activities; acquisition of new estuarine research reserve sanctuary sites; and the marine sanctuary program. The largest cut is in the proposed termination of Coastal Zone Management grants to States, −$33,900,000. Overall, the administration's budget proposal for 1990 would result in ocean programs being further reduced to 26 percent of NOAA's budget.

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries is on record in saying that this trend must stop—and that position is clearly reflected in H.R. 1668.

H.R. 1668 represents for the first time in many years that the Congress has considered separate and comprehensive authorization legislation for NOAA's ocean and coastal programs. It represents an effort to exert congressional leadership in certain of the agency's programs faced with proposed terminations or reductions by the administration.

Most of the authorization levels in the bill are based on restoring programs to their fiscal year 1989 appropriations levels with an additional inflation factor of 4 percent. Existing authorization numbers were retained for those programs already authorized for fiscal year 1990—e.g., coastal zone management grants and the National Sea Grant College program.

Mr. Chairman, each of the authorization levels contained in this bill has been thoroughly reviewed by the committee and reflects our best judgment about the fiscal requirements of this Nation's civilian ocean and coastal initiatives.

I urge the House to send a strong message that the time for short-changing our oceans programs is over by passing H.R. 1668.

□ 1350

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

Mr. Chairman, as a cosponsor of H.R. 1668, I rise in support of this legislation. I applaud the subcommittee chairman, Mr. HERTEL, for his leadership on this bill. H.R. 1668 is a new approach in dealing with NOAA's ocean and coastal programs and, I believe, it is a worthwhile approach.

As was demonstrated in the 1988 Presidential campaign, the health of our Nation's ocean and coastal resources is an increasingly important issue to all of our constituencies. The Office of Technology Assessment [OTA] estimates that by 1990, 75 percent of the U.S. population will live within 50 miles of the coast. As a result, Mr. Chairman, the importance of protecting and understanding our ocean and coastal resources is becoming a higher and higher national priority. H.R. 1668 is an important step by Congress to review our Federal programs in this area in an orderly fashion, and to set our priorities in this regard with an eye toward the future.

Historically, NOAA's ocean and coastal programs have been established administratively with their budgets being determined largely by the executive branch or the Appropriations Committee. Passing a NOAA ocean and coastal programs authorization bill will give the Congress and the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee greater control and influence over NOAA's specific programs and over their funding levels. In this fashion, we can seek out those programs which we believe are nonessential and strengthen those which we determine to be of greater priority.

Mr. Chairman, the authorization levels in this bill are, in my mind, reasonable. As a general proposition, programs are funded at either last year's appropriation level, at the administration's request, or consistent with current law. Some increases have been provided for to account for inflation.

The bill authorizes National Ocean Service programs such as mapping, charging, and geodesy; ocean observation and assessments; and ocean and coastal management, including marine sanctuaries, deep seabed mining, and coastal zone management. The bill likewise authorizes oceanic and atmospheric research programs within the jurisdiction of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, including, the Sea Grant Program, the Great Lakes Environmental Research Laboratory, undersea research programs, and global change research. Finally, the bill authorizes program support activities including NOAA agency administration; facility maintenance and construction; oceanographic fleet operations and maintenance; and aircraft operations.

The bill also improves congressional oversight of NOAA ocean and coastal program budgeting by requiring the Secretary of Commerce to notify the appropriate congressional committees regarding any proposal to reprogram funds appropriated pursuant to the authorizations in this act.

While H.R. 1668 is the first consolidated authorizing legislation regarding these NOAA programs, it is certainly envisioned that the committee will go through this reauthorization process again for the next fiscal year and subsequent years after that thereby improving congressional oversight and, in turn, improving our Nation's ocean and coastal programs and capabilities.

When the bill is open for amendment, an en block amendment will incorporate the actions taken by the House Science, Space, and Technology Committee and the House Public Works and Transportation Committee regarding this legislation. These amendments expand the legislation to authorize those additional NOAA programs under their jurisdiction. Likewise, these funding requests are reasonable and consistent with the administration request or last year's appropriation levels. In working with these committees, we have developed a comprehensive approach to authorize NOAA programs and the en bloc amendment should be supported.

Again, I congratulate Subcommittee Chairman HERTEL for his leadership on this legislation, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 1668, the NOAA Ocean and Coastal Programs Authorization Act, and in support of the committee amendments to that bill.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology shares jurisdiction with the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries on the programs and activities conducted by NOAA's Office of Oceanic and Atmospheric Research.

Mr. Chairman, the Office of Oceanic and Atmospheric Research conducts environmental monitoring and research in a number of critical areas. Their involvement in emerging global climate change research activities will become increasingly important in the future.

The Office of Oceanic and Atmospheric Research also conducts research on tornado forecasting, hurricane forecasting, and interannual and seasonal climate research.

I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

Mr. Chairman, the committee amendments include some additions approved by the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology.

We included additional money to augment several programs which were considered particularly critical during hearings held this year by the Subcommittee on Natural Resources, Agricultural Research and Environment.

Specifically, the committee included additions of: $2 million for mezoscale (tornado) severe weather forecasting research; $2 million for hurricane forecasting research; $2 million for PROFS, the program for regional observing and forecast services; $6 million for the Interannual and Seasonal Climate Program; and $2 million for the National Climate Program.

These changes reflect the actions taken by the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology last month in approving H.R. 2427, the NOAA Satellite and Atmospheric Program authorization bill.

Mr. Chairman, I urge adoption of the amendments.

□ 1400

Mr. Chairman, I might close on this point by again complimenting the committee for the extraordinary work they have done and echo the sentiments of the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERTEL] in calling to the attention of the House and the Nation the terrible underfunding and underattention that has been given to this legislation which is critical to the future of this country.

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. PURSELL].

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 1668—NOAA Authorization and Coastal Programs Authorization Act of 1989 and Congressman's HERTEL's amendment to locate the Great Lakes Research Office [GLRO] at the existing Great Lakes Environmental Research Laboratory [GLERL].

Placing this NOAA research office within GLERL will greatly strengthen Great Lakes research and vastly improve our ability to protect the Lakes.

From a cost-effectiveness standpoint, the Great Lakes Environmental Research Laboratory [GLERL] has an existing Federal Administrative Office through which the Great Lakes Research Office payroll, purchasing, et cetera, could be handled. Ample office space, complete with Government FTS phone lines is available at GLERL for immediate occupancy by GLRO.

Additionally, Ann Arbor, MI, is close to key international organizations including the International Joint Commission Great Lakes Regional Office in Windsor, ON, and the University of Windsor's Great Lakes Center. Interaction with all of these organizations can only compliment the research office and promote the treatment of the Great Lakes as an international resource.

There are several libraries specifically set up in Ann Arbor to deal with Great Lakes research, management, and planning. These are located at GLERL, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, Great Lakes Commission, and a major one at the University of Michigan.

I commend the committees on their fine work in crafting this legislation.

Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. DYSON].

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Michigan for yielding this time to me today.

Mr. Chairman, I commend the excellent work that Chairman HERTEL and the Subcommittee on Oceanography and the Great Lakes have undertaken in preparing H.R. 1668.

This is an important bill. It sets the guidelines and authorizes funding for a broad array of programs that are at the cutting edge of our effort to improve and restore the natural resources of our coastal waters.

I can supply a host of reasons, Mr. Chairman, why this House should support the work that Chairman HERTEL has accomplished. But I wish to draw the House's attention to one particular problem that this legislation addresses.

That problem is the extinction of the American oyster.

If this seems either unlikely or unimportant, I invite skeptical Members to consider for a moment a few basic facts.

In the year 1929, just over 90 million pounds of oysters were harvested in U.S. waters.

In 1988, that harvest had fallen to 40 million pounds, well below half of the weight harvested more than half a century ago.

At one time, nearly ever cove, bay, and bayou along this country's coastline contained at least a few acres of productive oyster beds.

Today, the Delaware Bay is completely barren. No oysters have been harvested in that estuary for years.

There are no oyster harvests worth mentioning along New England's coast.

Pacific Coast oyster harvests come almost exclusively from Alaska. The oyster beds that once crowded the rivers and harbors of Oregon, Washington, and Northern California have simply disappeared.

The gulf coast's oyster harvest is about half of its historic peak. But if all indications are correct, it is headed for further decline.

Mr. Chairman, I have saved the worst news for last. The Chesapeake Bay has always been the single most productive fishery lying entirely in U.S. waters. The oyster was its special bounty. The Bay's waters routinely yielded oyster harvests of 30, 35, and 40 million pounds. The Chesapeake Bay, by itself, could out-produce the oyster harvests of all our other waters combined.

Last year the Cheasapeake Bay yielded only 8.6 million pounds of oysters. This year's harvest is projected to be about the same. But thereafter, the outlook is grim. The harvest next year, and the year after, may be no more than half of this miserly amount.

Mismanagement and pollution are certainly responsible for much of the bay's oyster decline. The same is true of most natural resources found in our coastal waters.

But there is also another, more insidious culprit at work. The American oyster is now under siege by parasitic diseases that we know next to nothing about. We know that they are harmless to humans. And we know that they are lethal to productive oyster beds. And that is about all we know.

The diseases are called as MSX, DERMO, and SSO. They infest an oyster bed, and sometime during the 3 years that it takes oyster larvae to mature, the diseases simply kill their host. We do not know the mechanics of the process, but we know the result. Once productive oyster beds are turned into so many miles of broken shell.

The Chesapeake Bay has 215,000 acres of oyster beds. Three-quarters of these beds are now barren. In the remaining quarter, the diseases are making new inroads. And given the lengthy lag time between the "spatting" of oyster larvae and the harvesting of mature oysters, it is most likely that the Chesapeake's remaining oyster beds will also be transformed into useless rubble.

It doesn't have to be so, Mr. Chairman. We have the capacity to counterattack, and H.R. 1664 offers us the means. This bill contains a provision authorizing $3 million for an intensive, nationwide program of oyster disease research.

That research would be conducted under the auspices of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's Sea Grant Program. Sea Grant has been energetic in marshaling the best marine science we have on the most pressing problems that confront our coastal and ocean resources.

Their work on oyster disease has already provided most of what little we do know about MSX, DERMO, and SSO. They have begun to identify and analyze the life-cycle of these diseases. They have been able to identify some of the means by which the parasitic diseases actually attack the oysters. Sea Grant sponsored research has begun to experiment with genetically engineered, hybrid oysters that may prove to be substantially resistant to the diseases.

Mr. Chairman, I authored the provision dedicating the $3 million to oyster research because the district that I represent surrounds nearly all of the Chesapeake Bay. The watermen that harvest the bay's oysters, and its other shellfish and finfish, live in the small, isolated communities that dot the shore and inlets of the Chesapeake Bay.

Mr. Chairman, many of the Members of this Congress may not know much about life on the water. It is a solitary life. It is a life built around tradition and fierce self-sufficiency.

Like the hunters and trappers of our frontier folklore, independent watermen, by their wits and their hard work, have earned a fair living and supplied the Nation's dinner tables and restaurants with the delicacies that we take for granted.

The watermen are hardy souls willing to trade the comfort and stability of other occupations for the freedom they enjoy and earn every day they take to their small crafts.

They and the communities that sprang up along the coast have supported themselves for centuries largely on the income they pluck from the icy waters, and the oyster has been their staple. It is the principal source of their winter income.

If the parasitic diseases that now threaten to exterminate the American oyster are allowed to run their course, they will not only make the oyster extinct, they will also take with it the livelihood of these watermen, and extinguish a way of life that they have known and followed for centuries.

The research program that I have included in H.R. 1664 won't, by itself, prevent the watermen's way of life from changing. Nothing can do that. Better resource management practices will be necessary. These will undoubtedly alter the traditional methods of oyster harvesting. But all the resource management improvements, and all the antipollution efforts cannot protect the American oyster from disease, nor prevent the diseases from making the oyster extinct.

For that, we must approve the legislation and my provision to dedicate $3 million for oyster diseases research.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I once again commend Chairman HERTEL for his work on this legislation, and deeply appreciate his support for the oyster disease research program it will establish.

I urge my colleagues, from coastal States and the land-locked heartland, to support this bill and the Oyster Disease Research Program.

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SAXTON].

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 1668—NOAA and Coastal Programs Authorization Act. Currently, most of NOAA's programs are drawn from a single large operations and research account. No comprehensive NOAA authorization act exists which targets moneys for specific programs. H.R. 1668 is the first consolidated authorizing legislation for all of NOAA's ocean and coastal programs.

Therefore if Congress directs NOAA to conduct research on ocean pollution and the necessary funds are appropriated, the funds would be available for that purpose and would not be as vulnerable to fund shuffling by Commerce.

Another important feature of the bill is that it requires the Department of Commerce to notify the pertinent congressional committees of any reprogramming of funds appropriated by the bill.

This bill includes earmarking of a one time sum of $500,000 for NOAA's monitoring and research work at the 106-mile ocean dumping site. Passing legislation to end the ocean dumping of sewage sludge was a high priority of the 100th Congress. Pressing for effective implementation of this law should be a high priority of this Congress. This $500,000 represents important seed money for that purpose.

The bottom line is: This is a good bill. This is a needed bill. The authorized funding levels are reasonable if not conservative. I urge my colleagues to join me in voting for the passage of H.R. 1668.

Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. LOWEY].

Mrs. LOWEY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 1668, the Ocean and Coastal Programs Authorization Act of 1989.

I want to commend the chairman of the Subcommittee on Oceanography and Great Lakes, Mr. HERTEL, for his outstanding work in crafting a reauthorization bill that will make a solid contribution to the preservation of our Nation's coastlines.

In particular, I would like to commend him for his strong support of the Coastal Zone Management Program. I worked extensively with the Coastal Zone Management Program when I was Assistant Secretary of State for New York State. In all of my years involved in State government, I would be hard pressed to find a more efficient program than coastal zone management. With relatively little Federal expense, the States and localities have been able to develop comprehensive coastal management programs that specifically address the needs of the communities.

This bill strengthens the Coastal Zone Management Program and helps to convey to the American people the unparalleled importance of coastal management.

In addition, the report accompanying the bill directs NOAA to begin addressing one of the most important coastal preservation issues that we face today—the threat to our coastal waters that is posed by nonpoint source pollution. The committee report directs that a portion of the CZMA funds be used to prepare a report to Congress exploring how nonpoint pollution control techniques can be encouraged under the Coastal Zone Management Act.

In the Long Island Sound region, nonpoint pollution has been identified as a major contributor to the coastal pollution that continues to threaten the vitality of Long Island Sound. The report that will be prepared as a result of this legislation will provide us with a state-of-the-art assessment of the current technical capability to control nonpoint sources of coastal pollution through the Coastal Zone Management Program. This information will prove extraordinarily invaluable, not only in the Long Island Sound region, where urgent action is needed to begin cleaning up our coastal waters, but also throughout the Nation, where nonpoint source pollution is increasingly recognized as a major factor in the declining quality of our waterways.

I look forward eagerly to receiving the results of this report and also to acting on the information contained in this report to implement those pollution control techniques that are identified as viable and cost-effective.

Once again, I would like to commend the chairman for the fine work he has done in crafting this legislation, and I urge all of my colleagues from both sides of the aisle to support this legislation and ensure its swift passage.

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I hate again to be the onion in the petunia patch, and I do not mean to degrade the work of several strong committees of this House and at least the overview of several others. I am sure this is a wonderful bill in its own way, and especially to its promoters.

On the other hand, the administration feels that it is some $205 million over budget, which is pretty good for a bill that is only $529 million in total. As a matter of fact, over what the administration has requested, about $320 million, more or less, it is $205 million more. That means our committees overshot the target by about two-thirds an extraordinary spending achievement by any standard.

I am told there are good and sufficient reasons in the minds of the committees of jurisdiction for those overshoots, and they certainly know the programs more than I. But I must say at a time of severe budget deficits, when we are out talking about priorities, we never get around to setting them.

We are all saying we need to escalate the priority for our war on drugs, but, eventually, we always come back to our position where every item in the budget is a super priority for this Congress. This bill is no exception.

Mr. Chairman, if this bill, and others like it, is passed, there is no alternative for this Congress other than sequester. That is the ultimate destination toward which this kind of bill is taking us.

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to speak on one small item in H.R. 1668, the Oceans and Coastal Programs Authorization Act of 1989—the 1 year reauthorization of the Deep Seabed Hard Mineral Resources Act.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Mining and Natural Resources of the Interior Committee, I had supported an open rule on H.R. 1668 because of the possibility that H.R. 1668, which is 1-year National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration reauthorization bill, might be amended to include a 5-year reauthorization of the Deep Seabed Hard Minerals Resources Act. In my opinion, the Deep Seabed Mining Program, as administered by NOAA, is important enough to warrant more than just a 1-year reauthorization.

Stand-alone legislation to reauthorize the Deep Seabed Hard Mineral Resources Act was introduced in the form of H.R. 2120 by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. CRAIG] and I am a proud to be a cosponsor of this bill. Upon introduction, H.R. 2120 was referred jointly to the Committees on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Interior and Insular affairs, and Foreign Affairs.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Mining and Natural Resources, I sought to move as expeditiously as possible to reauthorize this fine program. In order to add stability to the Deep Seabed Program for several years, my colleague, Mr. CRAIG, and I agreed to amend H.R. 2120 to reauthorize the Deep Seabed Act for 5 years, through fiscal year 1994. The bill reported to the House by the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs on July 26, 1989.

I commend the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries for also moving quickly on this important legislation and for reporting H.R. 2120 on July 31, 1989, also with the 5-year reauthorization.

Out of deference to the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Oceanography and Great Lakes, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERTEL] an amendment to H.R. 1668 to reauthorize the Deep Seabed Hard Mineral Resources Act for 5 years will not be offered at this time.

Yet, I call on my colleagues from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries to join with me in strongly urging the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which has joint jurisdiction over H.R. 2120, to move as expeditiously as possible to act on this important legislation.

Mr. BORSKI. Mr. Chairman. I rise in strong support of H.R. 1668, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration Ocean and Coastal Programs Authorization Act. I would also like to commend Representative HERTEL and Representative SHUMWAY for their leadership and direction of these NOAA ocean and coastal programs.

It is because of such leadership that a separate and complete authorization for all NOAA ocean and coastal programs now exists.

This bill authorizes $529 million in fiscal year 1990 for ocean and coastal programs carried out by NOAA.

The NOAA budget is composed of several accounts, the primary one being the Operations, Research, and Facilities [ORF] account which accounts for 97 percent of the Administration's fiscal year 1990 funding request.

The ORF account includes: National Ocean Service; Oceanic and Atmospheric Research; National Marine Fisheries Service; National Ocean Service; National Weather Service; and National Environmental Satellite, Data, and Information Services.

If we are going to assure adequate administration of these vital activities we must assure adequate funding of these activities.

Therefore I urge all Members to support passage of H.R. 1668.

Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the bill H.R. 1668, the Ocean and Coastal Programs Authorization Act of 1989 and the amendment offered to it.

The provision in the bill which is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation is that portion of section 3(c) which authorizes $3,615,000 to be used for establishing and operating the Great Lakes Research Office, and provides that this Office shall be located at the Great Lakes Environmental Research Laboratory in Ann Arbor, MI. The laboratory is a NOAA facility and the Research Office would be operated by NOAA.

Section 118 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, added by the Water Quality Act of 1987, establishes the Great Lakes National Program Office within the Environmental Protection Agency. The responsibilities of the Office include development and implementation of plans to carry out United States responsibilities under the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement with Canada to improve Great Lakes water quality.

The 1987 act also included as part of new section 118, the establishment within NOAA of the Great Lakes Research Office to develop an environmental research program which would provide research on Great Lakes water quality programs.

Because of a lack of funding and lack of agreement on the location of the Office, it has not been established. H.R. 1668 is intended to resolve these problems by designating a location and providing for a new, direct appropriation to NOAA for the Office.

Our Committee on Public Works and Transportation adopted an amendment to the provisions of the bill relating to the Research Office which provides for coordination with the Great Lakes Program Office and reaffirms the objectives of the Research Office to achieve the goals of the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement. The provision in H.R. 1668 relating to the Research Office will go far in enabling us to restore and maintain the wate quality of the Great Lakes, and I urge passage of the bill with this important amendment.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the en bloc amendment offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. NOWAK) to H.R. 1668, the NOAA Ocean and Coastal Programs Authorization Act of 1989. The amendment makes changes to the underlying bill which were developed originally by the Committee on Public Works and Transportation and the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology during sequential referral of the bill.

The Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee reported out the bill in June and the Committee on Public Works and Transportation, as well as the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology, received a sequential referral based on our jurisdiction over provisions in the bill. With respect to the Public Works Committee, our jurisdiction was based on EPA programs and Great Lakes research generally. At full committee markup, the Public Works Committee adopted an amendment relating to the roles and functions of EPA and NOAA in their Great Lakes research efforts.

The amendments adopted by the Public Works Committee are not controversial and we were able to work out differences in language with the Merchant Marine Committee prior to floor action. The amendment by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERTEL] incorporates the substance of our committees' changes and has the support of Members on our side of the aisle. Accordingly, I urge support of the bill and the pending en bloc amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, the members of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee have always prided themselves on their legislative expertise in coastal issues. We have demonstrated this through hundreds of hearings, briefings, and bills authorizing new programs and studies, mostly conducted by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration [NOAA]. We have also appeared before the Appropriations Committee to voice our support for NOAA programs year after year.

Therefore, it is hard to believe that we have never issued a comprehensive authorization bill for NOAA's coastal activities until now. However, with the new leadership of subcommittee Chairman HERTEL, our committee has done so. It must be that Michigan spirit we've seen evidence of lately.

And speaking of Michigan and the Great Lakes, H.R. 1668 confirms NOAA's necessary presence in and along our fourth coast. The bill continues level funding for the Great Lakes Environmental Research Laboratory and for Great Lakes mapping. In addition, funding for important Great Lakes work under the National Sea Grant College Program and Coastal Zone Management Act [CZMA] will be continued. The House should know that continued funding for the CZMA is very important this year, because Ohio is a likely addition to the coastal zone management family.

In addition, H.R. 1668 also addresses a small Great Lakes problem by officially establishing a site in Ann Arbor for the NOAA Great Lakes Research Office—a regional squabble which has hindered the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement of 1978.

H.R. 1668 represents a great degree of cooperation between majority and minority, especially in setting fair but realistic limits on funding. Congressman SHUMWAY and HERTEL should be applauded for laying this groundwork for the future of our oceans and Great Lakes. I urge support for the bill.

Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 1668, the NOAA Ocean and Coastal Programs Authorization Act of 1989.

First, let me thank the leadership of our Committee on Public Works and Transportation—Chairman GLENN ANDERSON, ranking minority member, JOHN PAUL HAMMERSCHMIDT, and subcommittee Chairman HENRY NOWAK—for their cooperation in moving this legislation. Let me also congratulate the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, as well as members of the Great Lakes delegation, for their leadership and bipartisan cooperation.

The Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee reported out the bill in June and we received a sequential referral—expiring August 4—based on our jurisdiction over EPA programs and Great Lakes research generally. At our August 3 markup, the Public Works Committee included language to encourage greater coordination between EPA and NOAA and to give the NOAA Research Office guidance related to the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement of 1978.

During this process, Water Resources Subcommittee Chairman HENRY NOWAK and I received considerable input and guidance from members of the Great Lakes delegation—particularly regarding the location of the NOAA Office. I think our bill takes a sound approach. Regardless of the final language used, however, I believe we should make use of existing facilties and personnel, select the most central and cost-effective location possible, and avoid duplication between EPA and NOAA. The en bloc amendment would include our committee's changes and, I believe, embody these principles.

Mr. Chariman, I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 1668 and the pending en bloc amendment. It's a relatively noncontroversial, modest effort to increase NOAA's ability to protect and monitor Great Lakes' water quality. It's meant to increase coordination between NOAA and EPA, thereby leading to more environmental protection and greater efficiency.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 1668, legislation to authorize NOAA's vital ocean and coastal programs. This bill represents bipartisan effort and cooperation, which has been necessary to ensure the funding of such important programs as Sea Grant, the Coastal Zone Management Program, and the National Undersea Research Program.

This legislation sets funding authorizations using the fiscal year 1989 appropriation level with an inflationary increase of 4 percent.

Among the specific provisions contained in H.R. 1668, is $500,000 for pollution monitoring and research at the 106 mile ocean dump site. This one-time funding will make up NOAA's shortfall in funds, which is necessary to carry out it's responsibilities in implementing the Ocean Dumping Ban Act.

In addition, H.R. 1668 authorizes $20 million for climate and global research. And, it strengthens committee oversight over programs by requiring the Secretary of Commerce to notify specific committees of any reprogramming of funds.

It is time for Congress to show its support for an agency whose constituency is the whole Earth. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, recommended by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries now printed in the reported bill, shall be considered by sections as an original bill for the purpose of amendment, and each section shall be considered as having been read.

In lieu of the amendments recommended by the Committee on Public Works and Transportation and the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology, it shall be in order to consider the amendments offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES] or his designee. Said amendments may be considered en bloc and shall not be subject to a demand for a division of the question.

The Clerk will designate section 1.

Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute be printed in the RECORD and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The text of the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute is as follows:

H.R. 1668

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Untied States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration Ocean and Coastal Programs Authorization Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. NATIONAL OCEAN SERVICE.

(a) MAPPING, CHARTING, AND GEODESY.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Commerce for carrying out mapping, charting, and geodesy activities of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (including geodetic data collection and analysis) under the Act entitled "An Act to define the functions and duties of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and for other purposes", approved August 6, 1947 (33 U.S.C. 883a et seq.), and any other law involving those activities, not more than $47,092,000 for fiscal year 1990.

(b) OBSERVATIONS AND ASSESSMENTS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Commerce for carrying out observation and assessment activities of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration—

(1) under the Act entitled "An Act to define the functions and duties of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and or other purposes", approved August 6, 1947 (33 U.S.C. 883a et seq.), and any other law involving those activities, not more than $48,170,000 for fiscal year 1990;

(2) under the National Ocean Pollution Planning Act of 1978 (33 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.), not more than $4,000,000 for fiscal year 1990; and

(3) under title II of the Marine Protection, Research, and Sanctuaries Act of 1972 (33 U.S.C. 1441 et seq.), not more than $14,500,000 for fiscal year 1990.

(c) OCEAN AND COASTAL MANAGEMENT.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Commerce for carrying out ocean and coastal management activities of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration under title III of the Marine Protection, Research, and Sanctuaries Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1431 et seq.), the Coastal Zone Management Act (33 U.S.C. 1451 et seq.), the Deep Seabed Hard Mineral Resources Act (30 U.S.C. 1401 et seq.), and any other law involving those activities, not more than $59,623,000 for fiscal year 1990.

SEC. 3. OCEANIC AND ATMOSPHERIC RESEARCH.

(a) CLIMATE AND AIR QUALITY PROGRAMS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Commerce for carrying out climate and air quality research activities of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration authorized under any law involving those activities, not more than $55,473,000 for fiscal year 1990.

(b) ATMOSPHERIC PROGRAMS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Commerce for carrying out atmospheric research activities of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration authorized under any law involving those activities, not more than $42,159,000 for fiscal year 1990.

(c) OCEAN AND GREAT LAKES PROGRAMS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Commerce for carrying out ocean and Great Lakes research activities of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration under the Act entitled "An Act to define the functions and duties of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and for other purposes", approved August 6, 1947 (33 U.S.C. 833a et seq.), the Act entitled "An Act to increase the efficiency and reduce the expenses of the Signal Corps of the Army, and to transfer the Weather Service to the Department of Agriculture", approved October 1, 1890 (15 U.S.C. 311 et seq.), the National Sea Grant College Program Act (33 U.S.C. 1121 et seq.), and any other law involving those activities, not more than $100,000,000 for fiscal year 1990, including not more than $3,615,000 for use for establishing and operating the Great Lakes Research Office, which shall be located at the Great Lakes Environmental Research Laboratory in Ann Arbor, Michigan.

(d) OYSTER DISEASE RESEARCH.—Pursuant to section 206 of the National Sea Grant College Program Act (33 U.S.C. 1131(b)(3)), $3,000,000 may be appropriated for priority oyster disease research in fiscal year 1990.

SEC. 4. PROGRAM SUPPORT.

(a) ADMINISTRATION AND SERVICES.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Commerce for carrying out executive direction and administrative activities of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (including management, administrative support, provision of retired pay of National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration commissioned officers, and policy development) under the Act entitled "An Act to clarify the status and benefits of commissioned officers of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, and for other purposes", approved December 31, 1970 (33 U.S.C. 857-1 et seq.), and any other law involving those activities, not more than $76,954,000 for fiscal year 1990.

(b) FACILITIES.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Commerce for acquisition, construction, maintenance, and operation of facilities of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration under any law involving those activities, not more than $750,000 for fiscal year 1990.

(c) MARINE SERVICES.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Commerce for carrying out marine services activities of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (including ship operations, maintenance, and support) under the Act entitled "An Act to define the functions and duties of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and for other purposes", approved August 6, 1947 (33 U.S.C. 883a et seq.), and any other law involving those activities, not more than $71,960,000 for fiscal year 1990.

(d) AIRCRAFT SERVICES.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Commerce for carrying out aircraft services activities of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (including aircraft operations, maintenance, and support) under the Act entitled "An Act to increase the efficiency and reduce the expenses of the Signal Corps of the Army, and to transfer the Weather Service to the Department of Agriculture", approved October 12, 1890 (15 U.S.C. 311 et seq.), and any other law involving those activities, not more than $8,446,000 for fiscal year 1990.

SEC. 5. REQUIREMENT OF NOTICE OF REPROGRAMMING.

The Secretary of Commerce shall not reprogram an amount appropriated under the authority of this Act unless, before carrying out that reprogramming, the Secretary provides notice of that reprogramming to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives and to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate.

AMENDMENTS EN BLOC OFFERED BY MR. NOWAK

Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Chairman, I offer amendments en bloc.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from New York the designee of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES]?

Mr. NOWAK. I am, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments en bloc.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments en bloc offered by Mr. NOWAK:

Page 3, line 22, strike "(33 U.S.C. 1451 et seq.)" and insert in lieu thereof "(16 U.S.C. 1451 et seq.)".

Page 4, line 13, strike "$42,159,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$46,328,000".

Amend subsection (c) of section 3 as follows:

(2) Page 5, beginning at line 7, strike ", which shall be located at the Great Lakes Environmental Research Laboratory in Ann Arbor, Michigan".

(3) Add at the end of the subsection the following:

(2) LOCATION OF RESEARCH OFFICE.—The Great Lakes Research Office shall be located at the existing Great Lakes Environmental Research Laboratory in Ann Arbor, Michigan.

(3) COORDINATION OF ACTIVITIES.—The Great Lakes Research Office shall coordinate its activities under section 118 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act with the activities of the Great Lakes National Program Office and the Environmental Research Laboratory—Duluth of the Environmental Protection Agency.

(4) OBJECTIVES OF RESEARCH OFFICE.—The objectives of the Great Lakes Research Office shall be to achieve the goals embodied in the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement of 1978, as amended by the Water Quality Agreement of 1987 and any other agreements and amendments.

(4) Indent the paragraph created by paragraph (1) of this amendment, and align such paragraph with paragraph (2) as added by paragraph (3) of this amendment.

Page 8, line 2, insert "and the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology" after "Fisheries".

Mr. NOWAK (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments en bloc be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the amendments en bloc are not subject to a demand for a division of the question.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. NOWAK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Chairman, this amendment represents a consolidated version of the amendments reported by the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology and the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

The Science Committee changes include an increase in the authorization level for NOAA's climate and air quality programs of $5.874 million, an increase in its atmospheric programs of $4.169 million, and a requirement that the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology be one of the committees designated to receive reprogramming notices.

The Public Works Committee amendment requires, as does the version reported by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, that the Great Lakes Research Office be located at an existing NOAA facility, the Great Lakes Environmental Research Laboratory in Ann Arbor, MI. In addition, the Public Works Committee version requires that the Research Office coordinate its activities with the Great Lakes National Programs Office and the EPA Laboratory and achieve the goals embodied in the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement of 1978, as amended.

We support this amendment and would like to thank the bipartisan leadership on both committees for their help on the bill and this meritorious amendment.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON], chairman of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to join my colleagues in support of the bill H.R. 1668, the Ocean and Coastal Programs Authorization Act of 1989 and the amendment which has been offered to the bill.

This bill was sequentially referred to the Public Works and Transportation Committee after being reported by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The provision in the bill which is of interest to our committee is that portion of section 3(c) which authorizes $3,615,000 for use for establishing and operating the Great Lakes Research Office at a NOAA Laboratory in Ann Arbor, MI. This research office was authorized in the Water Quality Act of 1987. Because of a lack of funding and a lack of agreement on the location of the office, it has not been established. H.R. 1668 is intended to resolve these problems by designating the existing NOAA laboratory and providing for a new, direct appropriation to NOAA for the office.

Our Committee on Public Works and Transportation adopted an amendment to the provision of the bill relating to the research office which provides for coordination with the Great Lakes Program Office and reaffirms the objectives of the research office to achieve the goals of the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement. The Public Works and Transportation amendment is incorporated in the amendment to the bill, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERTEL. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology strongly affirms and supports the legislation, particularly the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. NOWAK], to the merchant marine and fisheries legislation.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERTEL. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the committee on its work. I take this time to announce that the Coral Reef Research and Management Workshop, which was made possible by NOAA, has resulted in notable success.

The Marine Resources Development Foundation of Key Largo, FL, has been successful in administering the Semi-Tropical Research Facility as an important part of the National Undersea Research Programs of NOAA.

Due to the success of the program, the MacArthur Foundation has announced a grant of $789,000 with which to continue sustained ecological research related to the management of the Florida Keys seascape.

Mr. Chairman, this is important because the Coral Reef adjacent to the Florida shore is the only living reef adjacent to the continental United States. It has been neglected for many years—until 1988 when NOAA took the initiative to preserve the reef by sponsoring the research program administered by the Marine Resources Development Foundation.

I applaud NOAA and the Ian Koblick, president of the Marine Resources Development Foundation.

FLORIDA INSTITUTE OF OCEANOGRAPHY,
St. Petersburg, FL, July 27, 1989.

Mr. IAN KOBLICK,
President, Marine Resources Development Foundation, Key Largo, FL

DEAR IAN: We have received a grant in the amount of $789,000. from the MacArthur Foundation for a two year program entitled: "Sustained ecological research related to management of the Florida Keys seascape." This proposal grew out of the workshop of marine scientists held at Marine Resources Development Foundation last year. Enclosed is a brief description of the program to refresh your memory.

Our charge from the Foundation is to be as broadly cooperative as possible. You will see that the program involves the University of Miami, the University of Georgia, Harbor Branch Oceanographic Institution, the Florida Department of Natural Resources, the National Park Service, the NOAA Marine Sanctuaries at Key Largo and Long Key, and a television film producer. It will also involve the MRDF as the Upper Keys support facility for this Keys-wide program.

I invite you to participate in a planning meeting for the program, tentatively scheduled for the latter half of September at Long Key.

The core of our program is the development of a series of interlinked automated environmental monitoring stations. This is not off-the-shelf equipment. We will seek help in design and implementation of this aspect of the program. I appreciate your suggestions and will be contacting the Weather Service in Miami.

Glad to hear that the teacher program is going so well. I will write again in early September regarding the meeting.

Best regards,

JOHN C. OGDEN,
Director.

Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his support.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments en bloc offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. NOWAK].

The amendments en bloc were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to the bill?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MCMILLEN OF MARYLAND

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I offer and amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MCMILLEN of Maryland: Add at the end of the bill the following:

SEC. 6. CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS CENTER FOR MARINE RESEARCH AND EXPLORATION.

For establishing, constructing, and supporting a center for marine research and exploration at Baltimore, Maryland, to be known as the Christopher Columbus Center for Marine Research and Exploration, there are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Commerce not more than $54,000,000 for the fiscal years 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, and 1994.

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, today I am offering along with Mrs. BENTLEY of the Merchant Marine Committee an amendment to authorize funding for an exciting marine sciences initiative, the Christopher Columbus Center of Marine Research and Exploration. To be located in Baltimore's inner harbor area. This center is sure to be one of the focal points of the Nation's marine science research efforts. Combined with it will be the Nation's if the world's most comprehensive maritime exhibition facility. At the Columbus Center, scientists will probe the vast potential of the oceans in an effort to better the human condition and restore the Earth's environment. They will, among other things, investigate methods of solving the problems surrounding worldwide ocean toxics pollutions study of ways in which we can increase and improve our food supply from the sea, and hopefully develop life-saving drugs and pharmaceuticals that can combat such diseases as AIDS and cancer.

The promise of the Columbus Center, as you can see, is very real especially in terms of its potential to better the human condition. It also has the potential to contribute greatly to our country's economic standing abroad by adding significantly to this Nation's competitiveness in the global marketplace. Currently we have a 5- to 10-year headstart over the Japanese, our nearest competitors, in the area of applied marine biotechnology. However, the Japanese are quickly closing the gap in this economically promising field. Recently the Japanese Ministry of Industry and International Trade disclosed that that country has embarked on a $500-million campaign to shore up their research capabilities in this critical scientific area. This will be accomplished by two state-of-the-art research facilities, both of which are slated for completion in 1990. We cannot let the economic promise of marine biotechnology and its many useful applications go the way of the semiconductor. Decisive action on the part of this body is necessary to safeguard our competitive advantage in this exciting and potentially beneficial scientific area.

Also it is important to consider that we are asking for a relatively minor commitment from the Federal Government—in fact the State of Maryland, the city of Baltimore, and local and private concerns will be footing a lion's share of the $200-million tab for construction and operation of this facility—to be precise, 75 percent of the costs will be borne by funding sources outside the Federal Government. My amendment calls for a $54-million authorization from the Federal Government.

One critical factor that I ask you to consider is that there are at least two Federal executive agencies that come to mind that will be able to utilize the resources of Columbus Center. Both the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration [NOAA] and the EPA have expressed strong interest in locating facilities at this Baltimore-based center. NOAA's constructive progress in the field of marine archeology will be greatly enhanced by the work that they could accomplish at the Columbus Center. Additionally, I am pleased to learn that the EPA is considering basing their National Center for Excellence in Coastal Environmental Protection at the Columbus Center.

Representative BENTLEY and I look forward to your support of this exciting marine science endeavor. The Science Committee has lent its support to our efforts since we first approached them earlier this year. The Subcommittee on Natural Resources conducted a very successful field hearing in which maritime experts testified as to the worthiness of our proposal. This, combined with the general support of Federal agencies that might use the facilities led the Science Committee to recommend favorable action on this auhorization request. In 1989, 3 full years prior to out Nation's celebration of the 500th anniversary of the discovery of the New World by Christopher Columbus, I cannot think of anything more appropriate than to begin construction of a marine sciences center dedicated in his memory. It is sure to embody much of the sense of discovery and vision that Columbus himself displayed during his rich and varied life. Ladies and gentlemen, I ask that you support this amendment to H.R. 1668.

Mr. Chairman, I ask all Members to support this amendment to H.R. 1668.

U.S. ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY,
Philadelphia, PA, July 17, 1989.

Mr. STANLEY HEUISLER,
Chairman, Executive Committee, The Christopher Columbus Center of Marine Research and Exploration, Baltimore, MD.

DEAR MR. HEUISLER: In response to our recent discussions concerning the Christopher Columbus Center, EPA Region III supports the concept and would be pleased to have such a facility located in our Region. Concerning funding, however, please be advised that we must respectfully stress that there are no funds available within our budget, either currently planned or available at the expense of other environmental programs, to contribute to the Center. Any EPA funding which you may obtain must be an add-on to our current budget.

We encourage you to proceed with your plans to begin architectural designs and specifications for the project. As the Center will set a national example as an environmental effort, we encourage you to ensure that all Federal and State environmental regulations are satisfied and that environmental conditions are suitable for a project such as this as part of your evaluation of the site you have selected and all plans for the Center's construction and future use.

I look forward to hearing more about the Center as it becomes a reality. Please contact me if you would like any additional information.

Sincerely,

EDWIN B. ERICKSON,
Regional Administrator.

NATIONAL OCEANIC AND ATMOSPHERIC ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, DC, July 5, 1989.

Hon. STENY H. HOYER,
House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

Dear Mr. HOYER: I am pleased to comment regarding the specific interests of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) in the proposed Christopher Columbus Center for Marine Research and Exploration. NOAA has testified before the House Committee on Science and Technology regarding our general interest in the Center. We find the project to be both exciting and very relevant to NOAA's progam objectives.

In terms of specific assistance and a NOAA presence in the Center, I offer the following observations:

1. To the extent that resources permit, NOAA is prepared to offer assistance in completing the required Environmental Impact Study. This work would be handled by our Office of Coastal Resource Management, Marine & Estuarine Management Division.

2. In conjunction with the State of Maryland we plan to house the new National Center for Maritime Preservation Technology in the Center for Marine Archeology—one of the major new facilities to be constructed as part of the Christopher Columbus Center.

3. The NOAA Office of Sea Grant has had a long standing interest in marine biotechnology and a history of cooperation with the University of Maryland in this area. While we have not had any direct discussions regarding the Center for Marine Biotechnology, we would certainly envision a direct relationship in this area.

We will be working closely with the Center developers to explore further how NOAA may be of assistance. The idea of a national center devoted to marine research and exploration is very timely, given the mounting problems that we face in our coastal areas and our need to remain competitive in the emerging international arena of marine technology.

Thank you for the opportunity to provide these comments.

Sincerely,

B. KENT BURTON,
Deputy Administrator.

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. I yield to the gentlewoman from Maryland.

Mrs. BENTLEY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by my colleague from Maryland, Mr. McMILLEN, and myself; but before I speak to it, I want to take a moment to congratulate the leadership on H.R. 1668. It is a most important bill.

The creation of the Christopher Columbus Center of Marine Research and Exploration in Baltimore is charting a course for the future.

The Columbus Center will be comprised of the Center of Marine Biotechnology, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's National Institute of Maritime Preservation Technology, the Environmental Protection Agency's Center of Excellence for Coastal Environmental Protection, the National Aquarium's Mammal Pavilion, and a Maritime Museum and Conference Center.

Mr. Chairman, it is important to note that a vast majority of the funding of this $200 million center will be borne by the State of Maryland, the city of Baltimore, and private concerns—three-fourths of the funding.

The Columbus Center will be the ideal private-State-local-Federal partnership from which great national benefits will be derived.

The cornerstone of the Columbus Center is the Center of Marine Biotechnology. The center is the world's most prestigious laboratory of its type and is critical to the United States efforts to maintain leadership in this economically promising scientific area.

This is important, as the Japanese have targeted marine biotechnology as a growth industry for the 1990's and beyond.

Recently, the Japanese indicated that they would be committing nearly $500 million to construct their own marine biotechnology facility.

This center in Baltimore will help the United States to maintain the 5-to-10-year jump over competitors that we currently have in the applied marine sciences. In fact, the Center of Marine Biotechnology has already achieved tremendous success in industrial, human health, environmental, and aquaculture applications.

Marine biotechnology undoubtedly is one of the world's most important emerging sciences. It offers exciting possibilities for dealing with problems from disease prevention to pollution cleanup, to enhancing the world's food supply, to improving industrial processes. It offers real hope in dealing with some of man's more intractable problems.

Mr. Chairman, I want to reiterate that the State of Maryland, the city of Baltimore, and private interests will be providing the majority of the funding necessary for this very worthwhile project. Federal involvement, while minimal, is absolutely essential to its success.

And, I might add, Federal participation in the Columbus Center is warranted because of the potential for significant benefits to the Nation.

Mr. Chairman, I want to commend my colleague from Maryland, Mr. McMILLEN, for his assistance in bringing this amendment to the floor of the House today; and I want to pledge my wholehearted support for this project.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McMILLEN] has expired.

(By unanimous consent Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. I yield to the gentlewoman from Maryland.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BENTLEY] for showing the kind of support that Maryland and I believe the Nation have in supporting this particular amendment.

I also want to particularly commend the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERTEL] for his work on this bill, and also the ranking member, the gentleman from California [Mr. SHUMWAY] for his work on this bill. I think they put together a great package.

This is a really important amendment.

Mr. Chairman, with the establishment of the Center for Marine Biotechnology, the Christopher Columbus Center of Marine Research and Exploration charts a course for the future. As we know, marine biotechnology is one of the world's most important emerging sciences. It offers exciting possibilities for dealing with problems from disease prevention to pollution cleanup, to enhancing the world's food supply, to improving industrial processes. The Center of Marine Biotechnology is the acknowledged leader in this crucial area.

The center will be part of the Christopher Columbus Center of Marine Research and Exploration at Baltimore's Inner Harbor. Sharing the site with the center will be a new Center of Marine Archeology, a Maritime Museum, a new Marine Mammal Pavilion as an addition to the National Aquarium, and a Center of Marine Archeology. The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's new National Center for Excellence in Coastal Environmental Protection will also be located at this site. The entire project is expected to cost some $200 million. State and local governments and the private sector are expected to fund three-fourths of this project. Thus, the total $54 million in Federal funding represents a particularly effective use of Federal funds to leverage State, local, and private financing.

Marine biotechnology has emerged as a scientific discipline in the last decade. It offers real hope in dealing with some of man's more intractable problems. In the health sciences, marine pharmacology promises to make substantial contributions. The flora and fauna of the ocean can produce pharmaceutical chemicals, but their use heretofore has been limited by laborious and inefficient methods of collection. Marine biotechnology allows scientists to isolate useful compounds produced by marine organisms and to produce those compounds in large quantities, aiding in the processing of commercial drugs. Another area in which the center is actively involved is the production of diagnostic test kits to measure purity of drinking water. Such kits could prove invaluable in helping stem the thousands of deaths that occur each day in developing countries, deaths attributable to intestinal disorders brought on by unacceptably impure drinking water.

The frighteningly lethal Exxon Valdez oilspill which killed tens of thousands of seabirds and sea otters dramatically highlights the importance of another research program at the center. Naturally occurring organisms can be altered to enable them to clean up ocean pollutants. These microorganisms would, in the case of an oilspill, actually eat the toxic chemicals found in oil. They can be programmed with suicide genes which would ensure their destruction once their task was done—also ensuring that the organisms do not cause unintended harm to the environment.

Marine biotechnology can help bring us closer to the goal of feeding the world's hungry. Aquaculture can help grow fish faster and bigger, can rid food fish of disease, and can improve fish harvests. A new bacterium discovered at the center could play a large role in restoring the previously faltering Chesapeake Bay oyster population.

Business Week magazine recently reported on the center's successful experiment in transferring growth genes from one species of fish to another—and producing fish which were 22 percent larger than normal. The center's scientists are working to alter the genetic makeup of native stocks to improve vigor, and to produce fish which spawn on demand, allowing for maximum efficiency in harvests.

Marine biofouling is the encrusting of ship hulls and other structures with barnacles and other organisms. Biofouling slows and damage ships and can ruin piers, docks, and other marine structures. The costs are estimated to be approximately $1 billion annually. Center scientists are studying the genetics of such biofouling in an effort to control it. The Department of Defense is funding studies in this area.

The center is the leading marine biotechnology facility in the world, but is not without competition. A recently announced project by the Japanese Ministry of International Trade and Industry represents the most serious challenge to America's preeminence of this field. The Japanese plan to spend $6 billion yen (some $500 million) to build two research centers by 1990.

The Center of Marine Biotechnology is receiving enthusiastic support from Federal agencies. The Environmental Protection Agency had expressed its support and NOAA testified in support of the project before the House Committee on Science and Technology. The support of the Congress during the coming months is crucial to protect the center's unique position as the world leader in marine biotechnology.

Marine biotechnology is already a proven producer. The benefits of a $50 million Federal contribution to this applied science are enormous, particularly when compared with the massive Federal investment in undoubtedly worthwhile pure research projects—such as the $14 to $15 billion superconducting supercollider—projects which have yet to produce tangible results.

□ 1430

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which Mr. McMILLEN offers today will authorize the necessary funds for the construction and establishment of the Christopher Columbus Center for Marine Research and Exploration.

The Christopher Columbus Center has been sanctioned as an official project for 1992 by the President's Christopher Columbus Quincentenary Commission. The center is expected to open in Baltimore sometime during the fall of 1992 to commemorate the 500th anniversary of Columbus' arrival in America.

The center will be the most comprehensive focus of marine research and public maritime exhibits in the world. The cornerstone of this facility will be the Center of Marine Biotechnology which will be one of five major components of the Christopher Columbus Center.

The Center of Marine Biotechnology was established in 1985 to tap the vast potential of the world's oceans by exploring the technological applications of marine science. The center has only been in existence for several years, yet it has already gained international recognition.

Recently, the President's Commission on Industrial Competitiveness reached the conclusion that the Nation's ability to compete has declined over the last 20 years. The Nation is currently a leader in marine biotechnology, but with this lead dwindling, the Federal Government cannot be complacent.

The Federal Government is being asked to provide only 25 percent of the costs of the Christopher Columbus Center while the remaining costs of this $200 million center will be borne by the State of Maryland, the city of Baltimore, and private interests.

The committee is aware of the value of marine research and is particularly impressed by the potential of the Christopher Columbus Center to contribute to a national marine biotechnology research capability. Marine biotechnology promises to be a significant economic force in the coming years, and the proposed center could enable the United States to gain a competitive edge over its international competitors in the emerging technology.

The committee is further impressed by the willingness of State and local authorities to contribute to the project. The committee supports the development of the center, and encourages the appropriate authorizing and Appropriations Committees to consider ways to support this worthwhile project.

By investing in the Christopher Columbus Center, we are investigating in research and technological development that will improve our international competitiveness and create a new wealth of knowledge in marine science research and application.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank my colleague for yielding, and want to compliment my colleague for introducing this amendment which provides Members a unique opportunity to move forward with the Christopher Columbus Center, and provides a unique opportunity for partnership between the Federal Government, the State and local governments, and between the private sector.

Mr. Chairman, as has been pointed out, the center will be one of several structures, all of which are in some phase of construction, already to be completed, or under substantial construction by 1992, which is the 500th anniversary of Christopher Columbus' discovery of America.

Clearly the Center for Marine Biotechnology is the centerpiece of the Christopher Columbus Center, where we need the Federal partnership, and where my colleague's amendment really addresses the Federal participation. It will house a world class research facility, mainly for applied use research, following scientific advances in the field.

Mr. Chairman, we will talk about the expanded facility, so that we can really take advantage of the opportunities that are there today, so that we can move forward in biotech in the competitive needs of this Nation. The center will operate under the auspices of the University of Maryland. The University of Maryland has five biotechnology centers in the State, and has developed a reputation of excellence around this Nation as being in the forefront in developing the biotechnology research that this Nation so badly needs.

Mr. Chairman, as I have indicated, this is a partnership, as part of the Christopher Columbus Center, of the National Aquarium and Marine Mammal Pavilion is well along in construction and funded through Baltimore City. A private developer is also participating in the center. The center of marine archeology construction is coming from the State of Maryland, and they are putting up their funds in this venture. The conference center will principally be funded through the city of Baltimore. The Maritime Museum, which we built with State and local funds, is also part of this venture.

Mr. Chairman, we have a unique opportunity to move forward in a very important area, and I compliment my colleagues for bringing this issue to the House.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by Mr. McMILLEN and Mrs. BENTLEY.

I also want to congratulate the chairman for bringing a bill reauthorizing these programs to the floor. As the chairman knows, NOAA funds many programs critically important to the State of Maryland.

This amendment would authorize a facility that will house the best minds and the best research in the emerging field of marine biotechnology.

The Center for Marine Biotechnology, a component of the Christopher Columbus Center of Marine Research and Exploration at Baltimore's Inner Harbor will house laboratories on the frontiers of a science in which our Nation must maintain its preeminence.

Marine science may hold answers to environmental hazards, like cleaning up oilspills with altered organisms that "eat" toxic chemicals or feeding the world's hungry by improving fish harvests and eliminating marine parasites and diseases. Marine biotechnology holds the promise of producing more effective and efficient pharmaceuticals to improve human health, as well.

The Center for Marine Biotechnology will share the site of the Christopher Columbus Center with the center on marine archeology, a new marine mammal pavilion, the EPA's planned national center for excellence in coastal environmental protection and a maritime museum.

This massive $200 million investment in our Nation's future science and technology base is funded principally by the State of Maryland, the city of Baltimore, and private sources.

The Federal Government is being asked to supplement this effort by supporting the construction of a facility to house the Center for Marine Biotechnology.

The center, which broadly expands the potential for advancing our understanding of the world around us has received enthusiastic support from within Federal agencies. More importantly, the farsighted individuals understand the enormous potential for the practical application of what we are learning in marine science.

But Mr. Chairman, make no mistake, foresight, like the driving force of future economic productivity, knowledge, knows no international boundaries.

The Japanese Ministry of International Trade and Industry has invested $500 million, four times the capital sought under this amendment, for two similar facilities.

This amendment supports an exciting venture in a new science. It is cost-effective and protects a vested national interest in a field that is critically important to our economic future.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to approve the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCMILLEN].

□ 1440

Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I am very impressed by the unity of the Maryland delegation on this subject and all the work they have done on it, and especially I am impressed by my colleague the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCMILLEN] and my colleague, the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BENTLEY] for their very hard work in this area.

I am very impressed by the Christopher Columbus Center, the project itself, and all the research and activities it will bring to Maryland and to the Nation.

Unfortunately, this NOAA budget cannot fund it. The Federal involvement appears to require $54 million in new outlays, with $10 million required for this year. The full Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries has not yet received and been able to review this amendment at this time.

As we can see, this is an enormous outlay for capital expenditures, $10 million in this year, because H.R. 1668 has a total of only $750,000 for acquisition, construction, operation, and maintenance of NOAA facilities, $3 million less than the administration itself requested. The amount of $10 million this year for construction of a new center at Baltimore is greatly disproportionate in this budget.

The bipartisan consensus behind H.R. 1668 has been for research activities.

In fact, when we looked at the en bloc amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. NOWAK] regarding Great Lakes research, we found that that amendment specifically said that new research had to be done and all coordination had to be done in existing facilities because we do not have the money in this budget and the authorization for any new construction.

We need people doing research on the water and under it. We desperately need $400 million to rehabilitate the NOAA oceanographic fleet, and we will soon be moving a bill to the floor on this very matter. Unfortunately, for the purposes of this bill, we could only provide $16 million for full operation of the existing 23 oceanographic ships and the rehabilitation of only 2 vessels. So we are very far behind. The administration has proposed to mothball six of our ships and reduce days at sea for seven additional ships. More than one-half the fleet would have, under the administration's proposal, been idled. Therefore, clearly, $54 million in construction costs is just too great a burden on NOAA at this time, after all the cuts they have had over the last 8 years and the cuts the administration has tried to put upon them again this year.

Mr. Chairman, I really do appreciate the enthusiasm for the project, as shown by the sponsor of the amendment, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCMILLEN] and also the entire Maryland delegation, including the gentlewomen from Maryland [Mrs. BENTLEY]. They have been highly unified and have offered so many good points in this discussion on the amendment today. I want to assure all of them that the subcommittee is interested in this whole matter of marine research centers for this country.

I believe the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BRENNAN], a member of the subcommittee, has legislation on this matter and has worked on it for quite some time, to address the entire question of marine research centers and marine affairs. This proposal could fit into the national scheme of this legislation, I believe, and I have promised him I would conduct hearings on this bill as proposed by the gentleman from Maine. This could easily accommodate the concerns of the Maryland delegation specifically, and we could also have a hearing on the Christopher Columbus Center that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCMILLEN] has proposed.

Mr. Chairman, I think I can assure the gentleman that the committee will move expeditiously on having a hearing this fall on this proposal, and very possibly we could have a hearing in Baltimore itself so we could get a good lay of the land, as outlined by the Members who spoke on this subject this afternoon.

Mr. MFUME. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the establishment of the Christopher Columbus Center of Marine Research and Exploration. Marine biotechnology has emerged as one of the world's preeminent sciences. Marine biotechnology offers a plethora of possibilities for man's more obstinate problems such as disease prevention, pollution clean-up, enhancing the world's food supply, and improving industrial processes.

The proposed site of the Christopher Columbus Center—Baltimore's Inner Harbor—will also house a new Center of Marine Archeology, a Maritime Museum, a new Marine Mammal Pavilion as an addition to the National Aquarium and the Environmental Protection Agency's new National Center for Excellence in Coastal Environmental Protection. The entire project is estimated to cost some $200 million. The State of Maryland, Baltimore, and the private sector are expected to fund three-fourths of this project.

In the last decade, Marine biotechnology emerged as a scientific discipline. In the area of health, marine pharmacology stands to make substantial contributions. Marine biotechnology allows scientists to isolate useful compounds produced by marine organisms and to produce these compounds in large quantities, aiding in the processing of commercial drugs. The center is also actively involved in the production of diagnostic kits to measure purity of drinking water. These kits will eventually help stem thousands of deaths that occur each day in the developing world which are largely attributed to intestinal disorders brought on by impure drinking water.

Mr. Chairman, marine biotechnology can also help us achieve our goal of feeding the millions of hungry people of the world. Aquaculture can assist fish to not only grow bigger and faster, but rid fish of disease, improve fish harvests, produce fish which spawn upon demand and allow for maximum efficiency in harvests. The center is presently experimenting with a new bacterium discovery that could eventually help the previously faltering Chesapeak Bay oyster population.

Presently, the center is the leading marine biotechnology facility in the world, but already we find that there is new competition from the Japanese. Japan's Ministry of International Trade and Industry recently announced their plan to spend $500 million to build two researcher centers by 1990.

In closing, I am pleased that the Center for Marine Biotechnology has received enthusiastic support from key Federal agencies. The Environmental Protection Agency and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration [NOAA] have both expressed their support for this innovative center. The support of the Congress at this juncture is very crucial and I hope that our distinguished colleagues will join me and the champion of the Christopher Columbus Center, Representative TOM MCMILLEN, in funding this worldwide national endeavor.

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Michigan for his indulgence and for his support in suggesting hearings on the Christopher Columbus Center.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this amendment be withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to the bill?

If not, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose, and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. ALEXANDER), having assumed the chair, Mr. CARR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 1668) to authorize appropriations for certain ocean and coastal programs of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, pursuant to House Resolution 229, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on the amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole? If not, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 343, nays 44, not voting 43, as follows:

Messrs. HEFLEY, DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS, and HASTERT changed their vote from "yea" to "nay."

Messrs. COX, DORNAN of California, and BARTON of Texas changed their vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, due to illness I was absent on rcollcall no. 221. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye."

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 1668, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALEXANDER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 2406

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my name be removed from the list of cosponsors of H.R. 2406.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL OCEANIC AND ATMOSPHERIC ADMINISTRATION ATMOSPHERIC AND SATELLITE PROGRAMS AUTHORIZATION

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 230 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 230

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 2427) to authorize certain atmospheric and satellite programs and functions of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, and for other purposes, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and which shall not exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology now printed in the bill as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule, said substitute shall be considered for amendment by titles instead of by sections and each title shall be considered as having been read. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORDON] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 230 is an open rule providing for consideration of H.R. 2427 to authorize appropriations for certain atmospheric and satellite programs and functions of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

The rule provides for 1 hour of general debate to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology. The bill shall be considered under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 230 makes in order the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology as original text for the purpose of amendment under the 5-minute rule.

The substitute shall be considered by titles, rather than by sections and each title shall be considered as having been read.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the rule provides that at the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment, the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted.

Any Member may demand a separate vote on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the Committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, as I said this is an open rule affording all Members the opportunity to offer germane amendments. I urge my colleagues to support this rule so we may proceed with consideration of the merits of this legislation.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by commending the committee chairman. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE] and the committee vice chairman. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] for their work on this legislation.

I would also like to commend my colleagues on the Rules Committee for providing an open rule with no waivers of the House rules and no waivers of the Budget Act. This is the kind of rule we should be using for most bills. Under the new chairman of the Rules Committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOAKLEY] we have taken some steps in the right direction. I hope we will move increasingly to this kind of an open amending process, and away from closed rules which deny Members an opportunity to have their ideas considered on the House floor.

Mr. Speaker, the bill made in order by this rule is important legislation. It provides authorization over the next 3 years for programs such as the National Weather Service, which is responsible for weather forecasts along with hurricane, tornado and flash flood warnings and alerts.

Atmospheric research on subjects such as ozone depletion, and climate change is included in this bill.

Provisions for our weather satellites and the establishment of an agricultural weather office are also a part of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I should note that the administration opposes this bill unless it is amended in several ways. For example, the administration wants to delete title IV which provides for the establishment of a National Agricultural Weather Information System. The administration would also like to reduce the overall cost of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, the rule before us today will allow the House to make any necessary changes in this legislation. I support the rule so that the House can get down to business and move this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

□ 1520

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALEXANDER). Pursuant to House Resolution 230 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 2427.

□ 1521

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 2427) to authorize appropriations for certain atmospheric and satellite programs and functions of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, and for other purposes, with Mr. LANCASTER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE].

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the time I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, as Hurricane Gabrielle grows steadily stronger and turns its 135-mph winds toward the east coast, it is appropriate that we consider the agency that provides the advanced warning of this devastating storm, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration [NOAA].

We often take for granted the hurricane tracking research that enables us to project the possible routes of hurricanes, the hurricane reconnaissance aircraft that track and monitor the strengths of hurricanes, and the weather satellites that provide early warning of hurricane development. All these programs are provided through the efforts of the men and women who work for and with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before us today, H.R. 2427, is a fiscally responsible bill. It is well within the Congressional Budget Office's fiscal year 1990 baseline allowance. At the same time, however, the bill clearly provides adequate funding authorization increases for:

Continued operation of all Weather Service offices with simultaneous modernization of weather forecasting technology;

All scheduled weather satellite procurements including additional funding for a planned 1990 launch of the geostationary environmental satellite to replace the weather satellite that failed last January;

Continuation and completion of the Landsat commercialization program and operational support activities;

And expanded atmospheric research in support of the global climate change program.

Mr. Chairman, this bill reflects solid consensus in support of NOAA's activities, yet at the same time it is a realistic compromise given the current budget limitations.

Mr. Chairman, I want to emphasize that this is a 3-year bill. This is critical in order to enable NOAA to plan its research programs, and perhaps even more importantly, to provide for an orderly implementation of their plan to modernize the equipment of the National Weather Service.

The United States experiences more severe weather than any other nation on Earth. On average, we can expect 10 hurricanes or severe tropical storms and over 1,000 tornados every year.

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration operates a system of two geostationary weather satellites, the Geostationary Operational Environmental Satellite [GOES] System.

The satellites produce the images that we see every night on local television weather reports.

Last January, the GOES-west satellite failed. That was the satellite which covered the west coast of the United States. As a result of that satellite failure, due primarily to old age, we have only one operational geostationary weather satellite.

To compensate for the failure of GOES-West, the GOES-East satellite was repositioned over the central Western Hemisphere so that both the west coast and the east coast would have satellite coverage.

Having only one geostationary satellite delays by a day or more our capability to detect hurricane formation beyond Hawaii or near Africa.

The next GOES satellite is not scheduled to be launched before late 1990.

Should the second GOES satellite fail, we would be totally without geostationary weather satellite coverage.

Funding for this program is so tight that money for the GOES satellite was included in the dire emergency supplemental appropriations bill earlier this summer.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 2427 would provide additional funding authorization so if we are to maintain the Satellite Development Program on schedule and to minimize the possibility of experiencing a period of time with no geostationary weather satellite coverage.

Mr. Chairman, it is also critical that we authorize sufficient funds to enable the National Weather Service to modernize its vintage equipment. The equipment currently in use is representative of the technology of the 1950's. It is outdated, outmoded, and in many cases, unreliable and inoperative. It is essential that we move as rapidly as possible to take advantage of improved forecasting capabilities through modernization of the weather service.

The key component in this modernization effort is the next generation radar system [NEXRAD] which is designed to replace the aged radar systems currently used to provide short-term warnings and forecasts of severe weather and precipitation.

The current radar system has been increasingly troubled by breakdowns, outages, a lack of spare parts, and delay in the delivery of modification kits often needed to enable spare parts to fit outdated and outmoded radar equipment.

For example, on November 28, 1988, tornadoes in North Carolina killed four people, injured 157 people, left 982 people homeless, and caused $77 million in damage. The National Weather Service offices in North Carolina did not provide any advance warning of the tornadoes, and no watch was issued prior to the initial tornado.

In fact, the Raleigh-Durham radar had been out of service for 8 days, due to the lack of spare parts and spare part modification kits, as well as problems with the spare part distribution system.

The National Weather Service's internal investigation of the incident, the natural disaster survey report of the North Carolina tornadoes of November 28, 1988, made a number of recommendations to improve the NWS hazardous weather warning system. The final recommendation in the report concluded:

> Overriding all is a compelling, almost desperate, need to upgrade and replace the nation's aged system of weather radars. These actions must be expedited to prevent another devastating surprise such as we witnessed on November 28, 1988.

Mr. Chairman, the NEXRAD Radar Program and the overall plan to modernize the equipment used by the National Weather Service is a critical national priority.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 2427 also authorizes the Landsat Program.

As you know, land remote-sensing satellites have been used to provide information on oil and mineral deposits, hydrological patterns, vegetation patterns for agricultural applications and forest management, wildlife habitat analysis, coastal zone management, global climate change research, environmental monitoring, and information on other renewable and nonrenewable resources.

In recent years, Landsat data have also been increasingly useful in the defense and intelligence communities. In fact, civilian land remote-sensing photographs have appeared in Defense Department studies of Soviet military power.

The Science, Space, and Technology Committee played a major role in drafting and passing the Land Remote-Sensing Commercialization Act of 1984 (Public Law 98-365), which provided for a subsidized 10-year transition of Landsat operations from the Government to the private sector.

Since the very day the contract was signed, however, funding for the follow-on system has been a major problem. The administration requested no funding for the EOSAT contract in fiscal year 1986 or fiscal year 1987. The administration did seek funding in the fiscal year 1988 budget for a one-satellite (Landsat 6 only) system, but the plan was rejected as inadequate by the Senate Appropriations Committee in January 1987.

Mr. Chairman, in March 1989, the Landsat Program once again faced a funding crisis. For fiscal year 1989, the administration "zeroed out" funding for Landsat operations, proposing a $26 million reduction in funding for Landsat operations.

Congress, in the conference agreement for the fiscal year 1989 Commerce, Justice, State, and Judiciary appropriations bill had provided only 6 months of funding ($9.4 million) for the operation of the Landsat 4 and Landsat 5 satellites. That funding level was the result of continuing budgetary restraints and the assumption that one or both of the satellites would fail during the first 6 months of the fiscal year.

Both satellites, however, are continuing to operate beyond their designed lives; and recent evaluations indicate that, barring any unforeseen circumstances, one or both of the satellites may continue to operate through 1990 or beyond.

The committee is gratified that the Vice President and the National Space Council were willing to undertake a review of the Landsat Program earlier this year. Through their intervention, the council was able to secure a stable funding profile for Landsats 4 and 5 for fiscal year 1989. Funding for fiscal year 1990, however, is still in doubt since no funding was provided in the House version of the appropriations bill.

The loss of these Landsat satellites would interrupt the availability of remote sensing data for key government, scientific and foreign users; abandon the substantial Federal investment ($1.5 billion) in a highly valuable data acquisition system; and severely damage, if not destroy, the Landsat commercialization initiative.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support the Landsat Program as authorized in H.R. 2427.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank: Congressman SCHEUER, the chairman of the Natural Resources, Agricultural Research, and Environment Subcommittee; Congresswoman SCHNEIDER, the ranking Republican of that subcommittee; and Congressman WALKER, the ranking Republican of the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology for their hard work in putting together this bipartisan package.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

□ 1530

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes. Mr. Chairman, H.R. 2427 is really a pretty good bill. It is a bipartisan package that was originally negotiated by the Subcommittee on Natural Resources, Agricultural Research and Environment and its chairman, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SCHEUER] and the ranking Republican on that subcommittee, the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SCHNEIDER].

It is a fiscally responsible bill which meets the CBO 1990 baseline allowance which is approximately $850 million. I want to greatly commend the subcommittee chairman and the vice chairman for working this out.

Mr. ROE and I were very happy to proceed ahead with the work that they originally accomplished. I think amongst us we have come up with a pretty good piece of legislation.

In fact, I think we ought to point out that this bill is fiscally responsible. The fiscal year 1990 level in this bill is $20 million lower than the $880 million currently authorized in 1989.

This is a 3-year authorization which allows for sound, long-term planning and decreases in fiscal year 1992 which would allow for certain fluctuations in satellite costs.

This is a bill that does allow for completion of the land remote sensing satellite system, the commercialization of that system and continuation of Landsat operations consistent with Vice President QUAYLE's National Space Council plan.

It is a bill which meets requested levels for the global climate-to-change research, and it is a bill which I think presents us with a credible, useful blueprint. Such a blueprint was presented to the House Committee on Appropriations back in the spring. It resulted in adequate funding being given in 1990 to the National Weather Service operations, unlike the situation that had held there in recent years.

Unfortunately, in my opinion, there remains one serious shortfall in the House appropriations bill, as passed this House for 1990. That is for the operation of the Landsat system.

That Landsat system is absolutely critical to oil, gas and mineral exploration, agricultural planning, global environmental monitoring, and it seems to me that we ought to restore the system and maintain it until the private sector is able to assume full control.

Passage of this bill today will send a strong message of support to the Senate that the Landsat funding in their appropriations bill should be such that we accomplish all those things.

You know when you look at what you are able to get out of the Landsat satellite, it is phenomenal the amount of technical information we can receive.

For example, information relating to the drought and famine is something which can be gotten from this satellite. When we praise our colleague MICKEY LELAND, who was on his mission to Ethiopia when he was killed, it is interesting to note that some of the information that we can get about the spreading problems in Africa with regard to drought can be obtained from the Landsat satellite.

It is also technology which could help us in the drug war if it was adequately applied.

You can spot certain kinds of drug growth or crop growths that would allow you to pinpoint where drugs are being grown in various parts of the world through use of this satellite technology if we were to use it effectively.

I might also point out that back at the time of Chernobyl, one of the places where our media was able to get information about the extent of the damage at the Chernobyl site was through the images from the Landsat satellite.

To lose such a system would be tragic. I would hope that we would proceed ahead, as this bill that we have before us envisions, and allow that satellite system to continue to remain in operation so that the wealth of information it provides to humanity can continue to be available.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from Rhode Island [Ms. SCHNEIDER].

Ms. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Chairman, NOAA is an agency with a mission indispensable to the adequate understanding and management of our world's resources. H.R. 2427 provides adequate funding for important NOAA programs at the CBO-baseline. It is therefore a fiscally responsible proposal which I am glad to support.

This bill contains many valuable programs. However, I want to take a few minutes to briefly discuss three programs in particular: Research on global warming, Landsat, and the weather stations of the National Weather Service.

GLOBAL CHANGE

This bill fulfills the administration request for a substantial increase in the Global Change Program (including studies on the greenhouse effect) from $9 million in fiscal year 1989 to $20 million in fiscal year 1990.

Few issues could affect the state of the world as drastically as extensive global warming: 15 of the world's largest 25 cities are on the coast; 75 percent of the population of the United States lives within 50 miles of the ocean.

In addition to flooding, global warming could result in drought and severe storms, permanently changing climate patterns.

NATIONAL WEATHER SERVICE

Earlier this year, the administration proposed closing nearly 100 weather stations throughout the country. However this bill authorizes a level of funding sufficient to ensure that we can keep our weather stations open until the badly needed modernization of the Weather Service is completed.

Stations at airports are especially important. Weather has been cited as a factor in a third of all fatal air carrier accidents. This is why I authored an amendment, included in this legislation, which would prevent the closing of any weather station at an airport, unless an air safety appraisal shows there will be no loss of air safety.

LANDSAT

Landsat provides us with an eye that watches over the state of the world resources. Without Landsat, we would lose sight of vital events ranging from agricultural production, to mineral exploration, to the spread of tropical deforestation.

In conclusion, I would like to note that this bill is a carefully crafted proposal worked out through the thoughtful hard work of subcommittee Chairman JAMES SCHEUER and full committee Chairman ROBERT ROE. Furthermore, this is a bipartisan compromise made possible in large part by the dedication of BOB WALKER, the Science Committee's ranking Republican. I therefore urge all of my colleagues to join in support of it.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PRICE].

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 2427, and want to commend the chairman of the Natural Resources Subcommittee, Mr. SCHEUER, and full committee Chairman ROE, and ranking Republican members WALKER and SCHNEIDER for their work in bringing this bill before the House today.

In my brief remarks, I would like to address one program within the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration—the National Weather Service. Over the last 6 months, our subcommittee has conducted a careful investigation of the National Weather Service's ability to detect hazardous weather and issue timely warnings to the affected areas. Our scrutiny was prompted in part by a devastating tornado that tore through 9 North Carolina counties on November 28, 1989, killing 4 people, injuring 157 others and damaging hundreds of homes and businesses. Our subcommittee convened hearings in my district in March and again last month in South Carolina after yet another tornado ripped through the Spartanburg area.

During the course of our hearings, it has become apparent that the weather patterns in the southern coastal plain of the United States are changing. North and South Carolina have had a substantial increase in tornado sightings. By May of this year North Carolina experienced 15 actual tornadoes, and since then, we have had another 21 reported sightings. This is a substantial increase when one considers that in past years North Carolina averaged 10 tornadoes a year.

We also determined that eastern storm cells possess a unique character. They are smaller and much harder to detect than storm cells in the West and Midwest. This is important when we consider that currently all tornado research is conducted in the West and Midwest.

The Congress has made a commitment to implement the most advanced technology available to provide better storm warnings—and save lives. The underpinning of any technology is good research and this bill will allow the National Weather Service to move aggressively forward in this area. To address specifically the needs of the southeast region, my colleague, TIM VALENTINE, and I offered an amendment to focus a portion of severe storm research funding on the particular problem of storms in our region. I commend the committee for strengthening overall research funding for the National Weather Service for severe storms and tornadoes and for specifically allocating funds for research in the southeast.

I also want to commend the committee for the level of funding authorized for the next generation doppler radar or NEXRAD. We have seen, over and over again, incidents where forecast office staff were hamstrung by outdated technology, missing parts, and failures in surrounding weather backup radars. Such failures typify the deplorable condition of our current radar system. There is good evidence that the Doppler radar will detect severe storms and tornadoes more quickly than our current system. In fact, NEXRAD may increase our present lead time of 2 to 3 minutes to 25 or 30 minutes. This increased lead time could save hundreds of lives each year.

It is important that NEXRAD be given adequate funding so we can bring this new technology on line as quickly as possible. I am disappointed at the funding levels provided recently for NEXRAD and hope we can improve this situation with the cooperation of the administration and the appropriations committee in coming months. In the meantime, it is critically important that the National Weather Service and NOAA respect the admonition in our committee report against reprogramming or diverting funds that have been appropriated for NEXRAD development and deployment.

I urge my colleagues to support the passage of this important legislation and I yield back the balance of my time.

□ 1540

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 2427, the NOAA atmospheric and Satellite Authorization bill and to commend the leadership of the committee for their efforts in bringing this legislation to the floor.

I also want to alert my colleagues to language in this bill that would help ensure public safety, by preventing the loss of valuable weather services across the country.

Specifically, I refer to a provision of H.R. 2427 which prevents the closure, consolidation, automation, or relocation of National Weather Service offices unless the Commerce Department can first certify that there would be no resulting loss in weather service or aircraft safety. This language would safeguard stations targeted for closure in many States under the administration's new plan to modernize the National Weather Service.

Natural disasters threaten life and property in the United States on a regular basis, making it essential that we maintain adequate weather coverage. Hearings before the House this session have amply demonstrated the value of weather service stations in meeting this goal.

Shutting down weather stations in sole-station States could vastly reduce the reliability and timeliness of weather forecasts that many States now receive. During the particularly severe winters in my home State of New Hampshire, for example, our only weather station in Concord gives highway officials very specific assistance, including information about which ice reducing chemicals to use and when to apply them during a storm. These essential services may not adapt easily to automation or consolidation.

Passage of H.R. 2427 will ensure that State agencies, as well as firemen, policemen, and airline pilots continue to receive the critical information on which they now rely to do their jobs effectively in severe weather and emergency situations. With this in mind, I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VALENTINE].

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Chairman, H.R. 2427 is important legislation that will be essential to fulfilling NOAA's congressional mandate. The funds requested in the fiscal year 1990 authorization bill will enable NOAA to continue ongoing program activities and program increases in the high-priority areas of weather service modernization, climate and global change, and coastal ocean sciences. There are many significant provisions included in this bill, all of which I support, but I want to speak briefly about a section of the bill that is particularly important to me and to the Southeastern United States.

Because of the lack of existing research on severe storms and tornadoes in the Southeastern United States, the legislation authorizes $650,000 over a 3-year period beginning in fiscal year 1990 for weather research activities in the southeastern coastal plain region of the United States to be conducted by universities in this part of the country. Research into the unusual patterns of severe storm formation in this area will help us to better understand their development and thus provide better and more accurate public warnings.

During my first term in the House, the worst series of tornadoes in the Southeastern United States in 60 years claimed 59 lives and caused hundreds of millions of dollars in damage in both North and South Carolina. This scene has become all too familiar to me and to those of us whose congressional districts in the Southeast have suffered devastation as a result of these natural catastrophes.

Mr. Chairman, certainly we cannot prevent the occurrences of severe and sudden weather outbursts. We can, however, provide mechanisms to ensure that we can forecast these changes accurately and disseminate our predictions in a timely manner. One way is to ensure that we understand weather phenomena in the southeastern part of the country.

It is important to recognize the extent of this problem in North Carolina and neighboring States. For example, from January through the end of May 1989, the National Severe Storm Research Center in Kansas City reported a total of 15 tornadoes in North Carolina. Preliminary data from the Center also indicate that during the period between June and September 4, 1989, a total of 21 tornadoes were reported. The number of tornadoes and severe thunderstorms for the entire Southeast, which includes the States of Alabama, Florida, Georgia, South Carolina, Virginia, and North Carolina, has been unsually high with a total number of 86 occurrences between January and May 1989, compared with actual occurrences and reported sightings in "Tornado Alley," the Midwest.

During field hearings in North Carolina, the Subcommittee on Natural Resources learned that the conditions that produce tornadoes east of the Appalachians are entirely different from conditions that produce tornadoes in the Plains and Midwestern States. In the East, the air is more stable. When severe weather develops in this area, it usually occurs in a low pressure cell, near the weather front, and upper level winds are generally on top of the low pressure. These conditions make it impossible to detect tornado cells and thus prevent advanced warnings using current technology.

In the West and Midwest, on the other hand, moist air traveling up from the Gulf of Mexico and dry air coming in from the desert and West, create conditions conducive to severe storms and tornadoes.

Almost all of our federally funded tornado research has been done at the University of Oklahoma, where the types of tornadoes which occur west of the Appalachians have been studied. Radar criteria used by the National Weather Service to determine if a storm can produce tornadoes was basically developed in the Plains States and used in that area. Storms that produce tornadoes east of the Appalachians do not fit this radar criteria. Because of this, these weather conditions are usually categorized as "nonsevere," when in fact they very well might be developing devastating tornadoes.

The increase in severe storm activities in the Southeastern Plains region of the United States, make the research program authorized by this bill vital. It will help meteorologists understand more about these weather phenomena and, therefore, enable the public to take the necessary precautions to ensure safety.

The legislation before the House is fiscally responsible. In addition, the level of funds authorized will enable both the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and the National Weather Service to modernize equipment and operations to ensure better weather predictions and forecasts. These services are an essential part of our daily lives, and this legislation is critical to maintaining confidence in Government agencies that are directly involved with public safety and emergency preparedness.

I commend the chairman of the full Committee, Mr. ROE, for his diligent and tireless efforts in bringing this matter before the House. I also commend the members of the House Science Committee for their bipartisan cooperation in getting this bill to the floor. I urge my colleagues in the House to support this bill.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 2427, and congratulate subcommittee Chairman SCHUMER and the ranking Republican, gentlewoman from Rhode Island [Ms. SCHNEIDER] for their work on this bill. H.R. 2427 contains several important measures, including title IV—dealing with agriculture weather stations.

Title IV establishes a national agriculture weather information system within the Department of Agriculture.

This legislation will coordinate information gathering between universities, the National Weather Service, and the private sector, so that farmers may respond more rapidly to weather extremes.

Agriculture weather stations play a vital role within Florida. We consider ourselves fortunate to have one of the Nation's agriculture and fruit frost warning systems.

The weather system offers daily temperature forecasts, weekly weather summaries, and fire weather information. An additional purpose is the improvement of pest management and the efficiency of on-farm use of agriculture chemicals through timely weather information.

Producers will be able to make less frequent chemical applications, thereby reducing potential problems, such as ground-water contamination. I recommend that my colleagues vote in favor of H.R. 2427 and help to establish the national agriculture weather information system.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SKAGGS].

Mr. SKAGGS. Mr. Chairman, I want to express my strong support for the legislation before the House today to authorize funds for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration [NOAA].

I would like to take this opportunity to point out to my colleagues just how critical some of NOAA's research is to preserving the quality of our global environment—or, more profoundly, to preserving any global environment at all.

Last summer, the growing dangers of global warming and of a possible greenhouse effect became very evident when temperatures reached record highs across the country. It led both the public and researchers to ask—was that simply a classic summer scorcher, or has the greenhouse effect begun?

This is a critical question that affects our economy, the public health, and our international security. Many billions of dollars in agricultural production are at stake just in the United States. The lives of many Americans and of people all around the world could be greatly affected by changes in current global climate patterns. That's particularly true along the coastal areas where so much of the world's population is concentrated and where we're most vulnerable to changes in sea level caused by global warming.

Fortunately, NOAA has been working on key parts of this question for years. It is one of a few Federal and private institutions that has been playing a leading role in providing sound scientific answers to questions about global climate change. Especially as our country begins to take actions to counter undesirable long-term changes in the global climate, it's clear that knowing the exact nature of the challenge that faces us is vital.

I am glad to report that the legislation before us today fully funds the President's request for $20 million in fiscal year 1990 for NOAA's research into global climate change. This is an important program, and well-worth funding.

In addition, I am very encouraged that this legislation would increase funding above the President's request in two other research areas which are also vital to the overall program of global change research.

In particular, the legislation would boost funding for atmospheric research by about $6 million above the President's request, and increase funding for climate and air-quality research by $8 million above the President's request. Research in these areas has been of great significance in understanding the physical and chemical nature of global climate change, which in turn is essential to figuring out how we can act to avoid environmental damage to our atmosphere on a global scale. These are important research programs that should receive more funds even in these times of tight budgets.

I recently met with some of our leading atmospheric scientists. The gripping message they delivered was this: We don't now know whether human activity may have already fouled the biosphere beyond its natural ability to recover and sustain itself—that is, whether we've pushed the planet past the point of no return. There is no more fundamental question to which to apply our scientific resources, and no more fundamental area of public policy to which to devote our public resources.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation, which is critical to our continued study and understanding of the global climate.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, as the ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on VA, HUD, and Independent Agencies, which initiates appropriations for NASA, I have taken a great interest in the "Mission to Planet Earth" proposal.

As Members know, that proposal envisions a series of polar and geosynchronous satellites that would monitor environmental changes on Earth. NOAA will play an active role in that program.

Recently, the Congress received two reports that shed some light on the resources needed for the program. "Technology for the Mission to Planet Earth" deals with the needs within NASA. The second report, "Our Changing Planet, Fiscal Year 1990 Research Plan," lists the resources within each Federal agency—there are eight in all—that are needed for global change research.

Within NOAA, the report indicates that a total of $20 million in focused research money is required for fiscal year 1990, more than double that in fiscal year 1989 funding.

The Committee on Science, Space, and Technology has met that target of $20 million in fiscal year 1990 and proposes to go to $30 million in fiscal year 1991 and $40 million in fiscal year 1992. I congratulate them for that.

However, it concerns me that funds for other NOAA programs relevant to the mission to planet Earth seem to be dropping. I note especially that the satellite observing systems line, which is being proposed for an authorization level of $300.2 million in fiscal year 1990, is down from the appropriated level of $350 million in fiscal year 1989, although, in fairness to the committee, the level in the bill is well above the President's request. It seems to me that if we are to be moving forward on programs such as the mission to planet Earth, items such as that should actually be increasing.

This is a serious problem. The distinguished chairman of the committee has already described the difficult situation in which the Geosynchronous Operational Environmental Satellite Program finds itself. I think it is important that NOAA, with its existing infrastructure and experience in remote-observation satellites, play a significant role in mission to planet Earth.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology will keep a benevolent eye on the program as the years go by.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. SARPALIUS].

Mr. SARPALIUS. Mr. Chairman, earlier this year Wichita Falls, a city in my district in Texas, celebrated a solemn anniversary, the 10th anniversary of a tornado that destroyed homes, businesses, and families.

Scientists say it hit with the force of an atomic bomb, and it cut through the very heart of the city leaving behind a path of destruction unequaled in the history of violent weather.

Yet at the very time the citizens of Wichita Falls were remembering those who lost lives in the terrible tornado, and celebrating the city's amazing recovery from the tragedy, their only defense against future tornadoes was under attack.

The National Weather Service actually was considering closing its station in Wichita Falls. Bit by bit, officials at the Weather Service and the Commerce Department began to realize this wasn't the wisest of moves. By May, we had secured a promise from the Secretary not to close the Wichita Falls station or 130 other threatened stations around the country.

Today, on the floor of this House, we have the opportunity to translate that promise into action. With the passage of H.R. 2427, we will provide the Commerce Department with the funding authorization necessary to keep these vital stations open.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the Members to join me in passing H.R. 2427, so that the citizens of Wichita Falls and many other cities can have the best possible protection against tornados like the one that affected so many lives 10 years ago.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ROBERTS].

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the National Agricultural Weather Information System Act, title IV of H.R. 2427 which we are now considering. This act is intended to stimulate cooperation between the States, private weather companies, and various agencies of the Federal Government for the purpose of improving the availability of agricultural weather and climate information for producers. A very similar version of this act passed the House twice in 1988, first as title V of the Drought Relief Act (H.R. 5015), and then as title V of the Agricultural Research Act (H.R. 5056). The weather title was one of several measures dropped from the conference version of H.R. 5015, and H.R. 5056 was never acted on by the Senate in the 100th Congress.

This agricultural weather legislation, sponsored by Mr. BROWN of California, and cosponsored by myself and others, would set up a National Agricultural Weather Information System, to be operated by the USDA. During hearings on this act by my Agricultural Research Subcommittee, we heard that we are not making optimum use of the technology and knowledge currently relevant to agricultural weather and climate information.

Our agricultural sector is tremendously affected by weather extremes. It is thus prudent for the USDA, the States, and the private sector to work together to have the best possible agricultural weather information system. What this bill essentially does is to provide some structure and money for research, planning, developing, and coordinating an information system on agricultural weather and climate data. The key participants will be the USDA, the National Weather Service, State climate programs, and State agricultural experiment stations, and the private weather sector. The end-users of the information system will be agricultural producers and agribusinesses.

There has been some concern among certain private weather consulting firms that this bill may set up a system which would compete with them. That is not the intent at all. The private weather sector is intended to be an important component of the information system, and the overall information system, including the private weather firms, will then be able to deliver appropriate and useful information to the end-users. None of the funding specified in the bill goes toward hiring Federal or State meteorologists to do forecasting.

By making higher quality weather and climate data available, and making it readily accessible, private companies will be able to spend more time utilizing the data and packaging it in a useful form, and spend less time trying to obtain the data. With a higher quality product, the private sector should be able to develop a larger customer base. Also, this weather and climate information system will fit into the general trend in agriculture to develop management information systems that can be utilized by producers, typically in consultation with specialists.

This legislation, by helping agricultural producers obtain better weather information, will allow producers to apply agricultural chemicals in a more timely and efficient fashion, and to optimize other management decisions in regards to crops and livestock. I urge my colleagues to support the National Agricultural Weather Information System Act, and vote in favor of H.R. 2427.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CARPER].

Mr. CARPER. Mr. Chairman, the bill authorizes a lot of money—a lot of money to modernize our National Weather Service. In 1990, we are authorizing $125 million, in 1991 over $130 million, and in 1992 in excess of $110 million.

Why would we authorize all that money? Well, some of the things we are going to be buying are pretty expensive. State-of-the-art Doppler radars are not cheap, nor are automatic weather observation stations, nor are some of the super computers that are available and that we need; nor is it cheap to install and operate the new computerized display systems.

There are a number of weather stations around the country that the administration has shown some interest in closing. They have looked at about 130 or 132 of them, as I recall. The Secretary of Commerce has withheld, and I think prudently, from closing any of those stations until the new automated systems are in place. The bill that is before us today provides continued funding for these 132 weather stations for now. It does not deny in the future the ability of the Secretary of Commerce to certify some of those stations can be closed as long as those closings do not adversely affect weather services therein.

There are a number of small States, among those small States Vermont, New Hampshire, and Delaware, which have only one station, a single, solitary weather station in the entire State. The residents of our States, as the Members might understand, are particularly sensitive and concerned about those weather stations being precipitously closed by the Secretary of Commerce. This legislation is, I think, appropriately sensitive to those concerns, and I want to thank the chairman and the ranking Republican member and the members of the committee who have crafted this legislation and have structured and demonstrated that sensitivity.

The legislation says that not only must the Secretary certify that a closing of a station in one of those small States would not adversely affect weather services available, but it goes beyond that. It says the Secretary must first evaluate the effect on weather services that are provided to in-State users, and the legislation goes on to mention some of those in-State users, such as State services, civil defense officials, and local public safety officials. And the legislation further requires—and I am especially pleased to see this—that with any certification to close a weather station in a State with only one weather station the Secretary must certify that a comparable level of weather services be provided to in-State users in the future, services that are almost as good, not nearly as good but comparable.

Mr. Chairman, again I want to thank the committee for the way this language has been structured, and I urge adoption of the legislation.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from South Carolina [Mrs. PATTERSON].

Mrs. PATTERSON. Mr. Chairman, today we are considering an important piece of legislation which will authorize the National Weather Service for the next 3 years. As my colleagues know, the Weather Service is in the midst of a modernization plan which will incorporate state-of-the-art Doppler radar systems, automated weather observation stations, supercomputers, and new computerized display systems.

But, Mr. Chairman, as good as this new, modernized weather service plan appears, I have serious concerns about the safety of American lives and property if we come to rely completely on an automated weather system.

Thanks to committee Chairman ROE and subcommittee Chairman SCHEUER, I recently held a hearing in the Fourth Congressional District of South Carolina which sought to gather information about the affect of the weather service modernization program on an area which could lose its local weather forecasting station. At that hearing, we heard from local emergency preparedness officers and airport officials. They expressed the grave importance of accurate, up-to-date weather service information during a severe weather crisis. Neither they, nor I, were convinced that such information could be made available through a completely automated system controlled from a distant location.

At that same hearing, we heard from experts in the field of meteorology who questioned the abilities of the new Nexrad radar system to spot certain types of severe weather at extreme distances. Estimates of the effective range of the new radar systems vary from as high as 125 miles to as low as 30 miles.

That is why I am pleased to note that this bill contains provisions requiring that the Weather Service provide proof to Congress that there will be no degradation of service to any affected area before a weather service office is closed. The bill further prohibits the closure of any office located at an airport until the Commerce Secretary certifies that there will be no degradation of aircraft safety.

I also want to commend my colleagues Mr. PRICE and Mr. VALENTINE for incorporating language in the bill which will provide much needed funding for research into tornadoes and severe thunderstorms in the Southeastern United States. Over the past few years this region has experienced a significant increase in severe weather activity. Already this year, 86 tornadoes have been confirmed in southeastern States, with another 84 unconfirmed sitings still under investigation. Research is desperately needed to help understand and predict the possibility of these hazardous storms. The information gained from this research will help us to predict these storms, saving lives and reducing the millions of dollars in property damage suffered each year.

Mr. Chairman, each of these worthy proposals has my full support. I am committed to seeing that this country continues to get the best possible weather service in the future. I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 2427.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 2427, the 1990 NOAA authorization bill.

As a pilot, I would like to point out two areas in the bill where the subcommittee's work will save lives.

First, the bill provides that no currently operating weather station, located at an airport, may be closed, unless, after an air safety appraisal, the National Weather Service can certify to Congress that there will be no decrease in aircraft safety.

Second, the subcommittee has recommended that the Weather Service reopen certain contract weather observation stations that were closed in mountain passes of the Pacific Northwest during the last budget crunch. We have already lost one pilot in the area in what appears to be a weather-related accident. His plane has yet to be located. The work of the subcommittee will help prevent further such accidents.

I would like to thank the subcommittee chairman [Mr. SCHEUER], the ranking member [Mrs. SCHNEIDER], and the subcommittee staff for putting together such a farsighted bill. The Natural Resources Subcommittee has an important responsibility and has carried its responsibility very thoughtfully and well.

I would also like to thank the chairman of the full committee [Mr. ROE], and the ranking member [Mr. WALKER], for their followup work with the National Weather Service. Through personal experience, the chairman is familiar with the weather problems in our area. I deeply appreciate his help.

H.R. 2427 is a well-drafted bill that I again emphasize will save lives. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, in regard to the proposed NOAA Atmospheric and Satellite Programs authorization, H.R. 2427, I would like to congratulate the committee for its wisdom in providing sufficient funding to keep open the 132 National Weather Service offices that the administration wanted to close. I also would like to point out some concerns that I have about the NWS plans to upgrade their system with the Next Generation Weather Radar—Nexrad.

In the March 1989 Strategic Plan for National Weather Service modernization, I would like to quote the following paragraph from page 3:

> The most deadly of our Nation's weather events—tornados, severe thunderstorms, and flash floods—are also the most difficult to detect and forecast. They form and exist at the small atmospheric scale . . . and are measured in minutes and tens of miles.

Although the Weather Service has put together a map showing the Nation's weather radar coverage—at 10,000 feet—with the Nexrad system in place, as being fairly complete, I worry about the lower level coverage and the potential impact on civil aviation in communities where the distances involved makes air travel an essential component in the transportation infrastructure.

Mr. Chairman, while the National Weather Service does not call for the changes at any NWS facilities in my district in the next fiscal year, the NWS modernization plan calls for the eventual elimination of the NWS weather radar at Williston, ND. This concerns me greatly since the nearest weather service radar will be at Minot—which is over 100 miles from Williston. The next closest Nexrad facility will be at Glassgow, MT—135 miles away. For the communities in this part of North Dakota and Montana the distances between these radars is very troubling indeed.

Mr. Chairman, I hope you will agree that complete weather radar coverage is essential for rural America. Under its modernization plan, I fear that the NWS may be saving money at the expense of adequate coverage for rural America.

Therefore, I urge the Science, Space, and Technology Committee not to allow the administration to close any of the rural NWS facilities unless the Weather Service can clearly demonstrate that these communities will receive adequate Nexrad weather radar coverage.

Mr. ROBERT F. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, today I rise in strong support of H.R. 2427, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration Atmospheric and Satellite Programs authorization. This authorization includes funding to keep open up to 132 weather offices that the administration had considered closing. Although Secretary Mosbacher wisely decreed earlier this year that no Weather Service station would be closed immediately, he would have been compelled to close the stations unless given adequate authorization by Congress. H.R. 2427 provides the funding mechanism to carry out Secretary Mosbacher's pledge. Two weather stations in my district, in Klamath Falls and Burns, OR, have historically been on the Commerce Department's closure list.

The Weather Service stations in Klamath Falls and Burns provide valuable agricultural forecasts to the producers in the area. If these stations are closed, many people are concerned that long-range forecasts from other stations with radically different weather conditions will not give farmers accurate forecasts that are so crucial to their existence.

The weather station in Klamath Falls recently sent out radio warnings to the nearby community of Merrill of pending thunderstorms. One hour later the entire area was ravaged by 100-mile winds and hail, destroying buildings, uprooting trees, and causing major damage to area farmers and ranchers. Furthermore, in areas like Klamath Falls, the station is a help to the local economy, particularly with the increased emphasis on air traffic and development at Klamath Falls International Airport. The airport is one of the major underpinnings of Klamath Falls future economic growth and a weather facility that helps air traffic is a tremendous benefit.

In Burns, the Weather Service station is not only important to agriculture, it is a major asset to its health care system. With a small population in a rural area, Burns is short on doctors and relies on the Air-Life system to transport patients to hospitals hundreds of miles away. Without the weather forecasts, these planes could not safely utilize the airport.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I commend Secretary Mosbacher's understanding of this issue and urge my colleagues to support H.R. 2427.

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Chairman, I rise to share with my colleagues information I recently gathered concerning the National Weather Service's Modernization Program. As chairman of the Post Office and Civil Service Subcommittee on Human Resources, I have had occasion to begin reviewing the modernization plans underway at the Weather Service, particularly as they relate to both staffing levels and the utilization of National Weather Service employees.

Based upon my preliminary review, it seems clear that much of the technology and the new systems planned for utilization by the Weather Service under its modernization plan will make important contributions to the quantity and quality of data collected for weather forecasting.

Nevertheless, I am concerned that the goal of these improvements does not appear to be limited to enhancing our data collection and weather forecasting. There also seems to be a strong motivation to drastically reduce the number of National Weather Service employees. Much of the funding necessary for the procurement of these advanced systems has apparently been earmarked to come from savings to be achieved by major personnel reductions. In fact, it has been estimated that there may be a 75-percent reduction in the number of National Weather Service employees by the time the modernization program is fully implemented.

This raises serious questions about the extent to which we will actually be achieving the full measure of weather forecasting enhancements which could be possible with the introduction of more sophisticated equipment. In addition, concerns have appropriately been raised that while broad-scale forecasting may be improved, it may also be more difficult for citizens to obtain the kind of quality localized weather information upon which they have come to depend.

This may be especially true in areas such as Alaska where weather patterns may be highly localized and timely local information is crucial to public safety. From my subcommittee's investigation, it is clear that in many coastal and interior parts of Alaska, highly variable weather conditions frequently present pilots and fishermen with life-threatening decisions. The shifting of manned weather observation stations, where people can call to obtain up-to-the-minute information and advice, to unmanned automated observation stations may save money, but it may also deprive individuals with the type of area-specific data which could save lives.

The bill before us today contains several important provisions relating to the implementation of the modernization program. For example, section 103 requires the Secretary of Commerce to submit a thorough plan detailing the requirements for the new equipment and technologies to be utilized, the necessary staffing levels, and funding requirements.

Of particular importance are the provisions of section 104 restricting the authority of the Secretary to close field offices. As the committee report accompanying this legislation notes:

The restrictions in section 104 regarding the Secretary's authority 'to automate' weather offices is not intended to restrict use of modern technology at weather offices, but only to prohibit the substantial or complete reduction of personnel and replacement with machinery operating in a manner essentially independent of external control.

Mr. Chairman, as we move forward with the unquestionably important goal of enhancing our weather forecasting system, we must also be mindful that there are additional important weather services performed by real people at our various weather observation stations. There very well may be personnel reduction which should appropriately accompany the adoption of new technologies. However, our goal should be in providing the best possible weather forecasting and information dissemination system.

The decision should not solely be a dollar and cents one of either updating our technology or protecting the jobs of Weather Service personnel. I am sure that some positions will and should be eliminated as a part of the modernization program. At the same time, however, I am very skeptical that we will not suffer any degradation in our weather services by eliminating 75 percent of the personnel.

The restraints imposed under this legislation make a valuable and extremely important contribution to our goal of improving our weather services, and I commend the committee for its foresight in this area.

Mr. Chairman, in the course of my subcommittee's investigation of the vital role the National Weather Service plays in providing timely information to the residents and key military installations in Alaska, I was interested that many of the comments we heard from Weather Service personnel and concerned citizens in Alaska were precisely the same sentiments expressed in my congressional district in northeastern Pennsylvania when rumors surfaced that our local Weather Service station at the Wilkes-Barre/Scranton International Airport might close. My constituents and I made it clear to the Secretary of Commerce that before we shut the doors of any weather stations, we must make sure that such actions will not result in a degradation of services to the local area.

While weather conditions in Alaska differ significantly from those in Avoca, PA, and the Wyoming Valley, the residents in both areas speak with one voice on this important issue: As plans are underway for technological improvements in Weather Service offices, we must not in the process sacrifice or in any way jeopardize the safety of those who live and travel in the affected regions.

That is why I am especially pleased that this bill before us includes specific language prohibiting the closure or relocation of any Weather Service field office without the Secretary's certification that the action will not adversely affect a particular region.

From Alaska to northeastern Pennsylvania, I have learned first-hand about the importance and work of these Weather Service field offices. I look forward to working further to make sure that we enhance our weather forecasting system without deleteriously affecting Weather Service employees and the communities that rely on this information.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute now printed in the reported bill shall be considered by titles as an original bill for the purpose of amendment, and each title shall be considered as having been read.

The Clerk will designate section 1.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute be printed in the RECORD and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The text of the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute is as follows:

H.R. 2427

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLE I—NATIONAL WEATHER SERVICE

SEC. 101. OPERATIONS AND RESEARCH.

(a) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Commerce (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Secretary") to enable the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration to carry out the operations and research duties of the National Weather Service, $229,686,000 for fiscal year 1990, $310,406,000 for fiscal year 1991, and $321,090,000 for fiscal year 1992. Such duties include meteorological, hydrological, and oceanographic public warnings and forecasts, as well as applied research in support of such warnings and forecasts, but do not include duties described in section 102.

(b)(1) The Secretary shall direct the Office of the Chief Scientist of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration to establish an advisory committee of tropical cyclone research experts to make recommendations for Atlantic tropical cyclone research activities and Atlantic tropical cyclone reconnaissance procedures.

(2) The Secretary, working jointly with other agencies as appropriate and utilizing the expertise of the advisory committee established under paragraph (1), shall establish a 5-year program for collecting operational and reconnaissance data, conducting research, and analyzing data on Atlantic tropical cyclones to assist the forecast and warning program and increase the understanding of the causes and behavior of Atlantic tropical cyclones.

(3) Within one hundred and twenty days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall develop and submit to the Congress a management plan for the program established under paragraph (2) which shall include organizational structure, goals, major tasks, and funding profiles for the five year duration of the program.

(c) Of the sums authorized under subsection (a) of this section, $250,000 for fiscal year 1990, $500,000 for fiscal year 1991, and $250,000 for fiscal year 1992 are authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of implementing subsection (b) of this section.

(d) Of the sums authorized under subsection (a) of this section, $5,000,000 for fiscal year 1990, $4,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, and $3,000,000 for fiscal year 1992 are authorized to be appropriated for the Stormscale Operational and Research Meteorology (STORM) program.

SEC. 102. SYSTEMS ACQUISITION.

There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary to enable the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration to carry out the public warning and forecast systems duties of the National Weather Service, $125,117,000 for fiscal year 1990, $132,100,000 for fiscal year 1991, and $113,100,000 for fiscal year 1992. Such duties include the development, acquisition, and implementation of major public warning and forecast systems.

SEC. 103. WEATHER SERVICE MODERNIZATION.

(a) The Secretary shall prepare and submit to Congress before October 1, 1989, a National Implementation Plan for the modernization of the National Weather Service. The National Implementation Plan shall include—

(1) an overall schedule for modernization;

(2) detailed requirements for new technologies, facilities, staffing levels, and funding during the next two fiscal years beginning after the date of such submission, in accordance with the overall schedule for modernization;

(3) detailed plans and schedules for facility site procurement and preparation in accordance with the overall schedule for modernization;

(4) special measures to test, evaluate, and demonstrate key elements of the modernized National Weather Service operations before national implementation, including a multistation operational demonstration which tests the performance of all components of the modernization in an integrated manner for a sustained period; and

(5) detailed plans and funding requirements for meteorological research described in title II of this Act to assure that new techniques in forecasting will be developed to utilize the new technologies being implemented in the modernization.

(b) The Secretary shall submit a revised National Implementation Plan to the Congress before the beginning of each successive fiscal year, after consultation, as appropriate, with other Federal and public agencies responsible for providing or utilizing weather services.

(c) The Secretary shall include as part of the National Implementation Plan for fiscal year 1991 a description of the resources needed to conduct a demonstration of modernized weather forecasting technologies at a site in the northeastern United States. The description shall include a schedule for completion of the demonstration, estimates for necessary equipment and personnel, and an assessment of the value of conducting such a demonstration.

SEC. 104. CLOSURE, AUTOMATION, OR RELOCATION OF FIELD OFFICES.

(a) The Secretary shall not close, consolidate, automate, or relocate any National Weather Service Office or National Weather Service Forecast Office unless the Secretary has certified to the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate that such action will not result in any degradation of weather services provided to the affected area. Such certification shall include—

(1) a detailed comparison of services provided to the affected area and the services to be provided after such action;

(2) any recent or expected modernization of National Weather Service operations which will enhance services in the affected area; and

(3) evidence, based upon operational demonstration of modernized National Weather Service operations, which supports the conclusion that no degradation in services will result from such action.

(b) The Secretary shall not close, consolidate, automate, or relocate any National Weather Service Office or National Weather Service Forecast Office located at an airport unless the Secretary first conducts an air safety appraisal to determine the effect of such action on aircraft safety, and includes in the certification required under subsection (a) a certification that such action will not result in a decrease in aircraft safety.

(c) The Secretary shall not close, consolidate, automate, or relocate any National Weather Service Office which is the only office in a State, unless the Secretary first evaluates the effect on weather services provided to in-State users, such as State agencies, civil defense officials, and local public safety offices, and includes in the certification required under subsection (a) a certification that a comparable level of weather services provided to such in-State users will remain.

TITLE II—ATMOSPHERIC RESEARCH

SEC. 201. CLIMATE AND AIR QUALITY RESEARCH.

(a) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary to enable the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration to carry out its climate and air quality research duties, $61,347,000 for fiscal year 1990, $74,762,000 for fiscal year 1991, and $83,481,000 for fiscal year 1992. Such duties include interannual and seasonal climate research, long-term climate and air quality research, and the National Climate Program.

(b) Of the sums authorized under subsection (a) of this section, $6,000,000 for fiscal year 1990, $8,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, and $6,000,000 for fiscal year 1992 are authorized to be appropriated for the implementation of a nationwide climate services system and applied climatology program.

(c) Of the sums authorized under subsection (a) of this section, $3,100,000 for fiscal year 1990, $3,700,000 for fiscal year 1991, and $3,700,000 for fiscal year 1992 are authorized to be appropriated for the activities of the National Climate Program and the Regional Climate Centers.

SEC. 202. ATMOSPHERIC PROGRAMS.

(a) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary to enable the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration to carry out its atmospheric research duties, $46,328,000 for fiscal year 1990, $48,172,000 for fiscal year 1991, and $49,521,000 for fiscal year 1992. Such duties include research for developing improved prediction capabilities for atmospheric processes, as well as solar-terrestrial services and research.

(b) Of the sums authorized under subsection (a) of this section, $250,000 for fiscal year 1990, $250,000 for fiscal year 1991, and $150,000 for fiscal year 1992 are authorized to be appropriated for tornado and severe thunderstorm weather research activities in the southeastern coastal plain region of the United States.

SEC. 203. CLIMATE SERVICES SYSTEM MODERNIZATION.

(a) The Secretary shall direct the Office of the Chief Scientist of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration to prepare and submit to Congress, not later than one year after the date of enactment of this Act, a plan for the implementation of a nationwide climate services system and applied climatology program. Such plan shall include detailed requirements and schedules for the improvement of (1) the timeliness of climate services, (2) the spatial coverage of weather observational networks, (3) the quality control of climate data, (4) access to climate data, (5) the use of climate data, (6) the coordination of Regional Climate Centers with Federal climate centers, and (7) private sector participation in providing climate services.

(b) Of the sums authorized under section 201(a), $200,000 are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1990 for the purposes of implementing subsection (a) of this section.

TITLE III—NATIONAL ENVIRONMENTAL SATELLITE, DATA, AND INFORMATION SERVICE

SEC. 301. SATELLITE OBSERVING SYSTEMS.

(a) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary to enable the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration to carry out its satellite observing systems duties $300,297,000 for fiscal year 1990, $324,055,000 for fiscal year 1991, and $241,789,000 for fiscal year 1992. Such duties include spacecraft procurement, launch, and associated ground station system changes involving polar orbiting and geostationary environmental satellites and land remote sensing satellites, as well as the operation of such satellites.

(b) The authorization provided for under subsection (a) of this section shall be in addition to funds authorized under the Land Remote-Sensing Commercialization Act of 1984 (15 U.S.C. 4201 et seq.) for the purpose of carrying out such duties relating to satellite observing systems.

(c) Of the sums authorized under subsection (a) of this section, $350,000 for fiscal year 1990, $250,000 for fiscal year 1991, and $250,000 for fiscal year 1992 are authorized to be appropriated for geologic sea surface research and basic geologic remote sensing for energy resources at the Cooperative Institute for Applied Remote Sensing.

SEC. 302. ENVIRONMENTAL DATA MANAGEMENT.

There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary to enable the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration to fund those duties relating to data and information services, $30,000,000 for fiscal year 1990, $31,200,000 for fiscal year 1991, and $32,448,000 for fiscal year 1992. Such duties include climate data services, ocean data services, geophysical data services, and environmental assessment and information services.

TITLE IV—AGRICULTURAL WEATHER INFORMATION

SEC. 401. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "National Agricultural Weather Information System Act of 1989".

SEC. 402. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) a major cause of variability and losses in agricultural production is weather and climate factors;

(2) extreme weather conditions, such as drought, appear to be occurring more frequently, and further climate changes are likely;

(3) the Federal Government has repeatedly assumed responsibility for emergency aid to agricultural producers who suffer losses due to weather;

(4) it would be prudent and cost effective to prevent or reduce agricultural losses due to weather factors through better use of weather and climate information;

(5) current agricultural weather and climate information and its delivery to agricultural producers are not adequate; and

(6) better application of weather and climate information will help conserve water resources, allow agricultural chemicals to be applied in a more efficient fashion with less stress on the environment, and reduce energy consumption by improved management decision making.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) provide a nationally coordinated agricultural weather information system, based on the participation of universities, State programs, Federal agencies, and the private weather consulting sector, and aimed at meeting the weather and climate information needs of agricultural producers;

(2) facilitate the collection, organization, and dissemination of advisory weather and climate information relevant to agricultural producers, through the participation of the private sector and otherwise;

(3) provide for research and education on agricultural weather and climate information, aimed at improving the quality and quantity of weather and climate information available to agricultural producers, including research on short-term forecasts of thunderstorms and on extended weather forecasting techniques and models;

(4) encourage, where feasible, greater private sector participation in providing agricultural weather and climate information, to encourage private sector participation in educating and training farmers and others in the proper utilization of agricultural weather and climate information, and to strengthen their ability to provide site-specific weather forecasting for farmers and the agricultural sector in general; and

(5) ensure that the weather and climate databases needed by the agricultural sector are of the highest scientific accuracy and thoroughly documented, and that such databases are easily accessible for remote computer access.

SEC. 403. AGRICULTURAL WEATHER OFFICE.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF THE OFFICE AND ADMINISTRATION OF THE SYSTEM.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall establish in the Department of Agriculture an Agricultural Weather Office to plan and administer the National Agricultural Weather Information System. The System shall be comprised of the Office established under this section and the activities of the State agricultural weather information systems described in section 406(b)(1).

(b) AUTHORITY.—The Secretary, acting through the Office, may—

(1) enter into cooperative projects with the National Weather Service, for support of operational weather forecasting and observation useful in agriculture, for joint workshops to train agriculturalists about the optimum utilization of agricultural weather and climate data, for joint development of improved computer models and computing capacity, and for efforts to enhance the quality and availability of weather and climate information needed by agriculturalists;

(2) obtain standardized weather observation data collected in near real time through State agricultural weather information systems;

(3) provide, through the Cooperative State Research Service, competitive grants under section 405 for research in atmospheric sciences and climatology;

(4) provide grants to eligible States under section 406 to plan and administer State agricultural weather information systems;

(5) coordinate the activities of the Office with the weather and climate research activities of the Cooperative State Research Service, the National Academy of Sciences, the National Science Foundation Atmospheric Services Program, and the National Climate Program;

(6) encourage private sector participation in the National Agricultural Weather Information System through mutually beneficial cooperation with the private sector, particularly in generating weather and climate data useful for site-specific agricultural weather forecasting; and

(7) represent the Department of Agriculture on agrometeorology and climate matters with the World Meteorological Organization, the Intergovernmental Program on Climate Change, and relevant science and technology agreements.

(c) APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTOR.—The Secretary shall appoint a Director to manage the activities of the Agricultural Weather Office and to advise the Secretary on scientific and programmatic coordination for climate, weather, and remote sensing.

SEC. 404. NATIONAL ADVISORY BOARD ON AGRICULTURAL WEATHER.

(a) ADVISORY BOARD.—

(1) The Secretary of Agriculture shall establish the Advisory Board on Agricultural Weather to advise the Director of the Agricultural Weather Office with respect to carrying out this title.

(2) The Board shall have nine members, appointed by the Secretary in consultation with the Director of the National Weather Service, of which two members shall be from each of the four Cooperative Extension Service Regions. Of the two members from each region, one shall be an agricultural producer and one shall be an agricultural or atmospheric scientist. At least two members of the Board shall be appointed from among individuals who are engaged in providing private meteorology services or consulting with a private meteorology firm.

(3) The Board shall elect a chairperson from among its members.

(4) Each board member shall be appointed for a three year term, except that to ensure that members of the Board serve staggered terms, the Secretary shall appoint three of the original members of the Board to appointments for one year, and three of the original members to appointments for two years.

(5) The Board shall meet not less than twice annually.

(6) Members of the Board shall serve without compensation, but while away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the Board, members of the Board shall be allowed travel expenses, including a per diem allowance in lieu of subsistence, in the same manner as individuals employed in Government service are allowed travel expenses under section 5703 of title 5, United States Code.

(b) FEDERAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE ACT.—Section 14(a)(2) of the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App. 2 section 14(a)(2)) shall not apply with respect to the Board.

SEC. 405. COMPETITIVE GRANTS PROGRAM.

(a) GRANTS.—With funds allocated to carry out this section, the Secretary of Agriculture may make grants, on a competitive basis, to State agricultural experiment stations, all colleges and universities, other research institutions and organizations, Federal agencies, private organizations and corporations, and individuals to carry out research in all aspects of atmospheric sciences and climatology that can be shown to be important in both a basic and developmental way to understanding, forecasting, and delivering agricultural weather information.

(b) PRIORITY.—In selecting among applications for grants under subsection (a), the Secretary shall give priority to proposals which emphasize—

(1) techniques and processes that relate to weather-induced agricultural losses, and to improving the advisory information on weather extremes such as drought, floods, freezes, and storms well in advance of their actual occurrence;

(2) improvement of site-specific weather data collection and forecasting; or

(3) impact of weather on economic and environmental costs in agricultural production.

SEC. 406. STATE AGRICULTURAL WEATHER INFORMATION SYSTEMS.

(a) GRANTS.—

(1) With funds allocated to carry out this section, the Secretary of Agriculture shall make grants to not fewer than 10 eligible States to plan and administer, in cooperation with the Director of the Agricultural Weather Office, the Administrator of the Cooperative Extension Service, the Administrator of the Cooperative State Research Service, and others as appropriate (such as the directors of the appropriate State agricultural experiment stations and State extension programs), advisory programs for State agricultural weather information systems.

(2) For purposes of selecting among applications submitted by States for such grants, the Secretary shall take into consideration the recommendation of the Advisory Board on Agricultural Weather and consult with the Director.

(b) ELIGIBILITY TO RECEIVE GRANTS.—To be eligible to receive a grant under subsection (a), the chief executive officer of a State shall submit to the Secretary an application that contains—

(1) assurances that the State will expend such grant to plan and administer a State agricultural weather system that will—

(A) collect observational weather data throughout the State and provide such data to the National Weather Service and the Agricultural Weather Office;

(B) develop methods for packaging information received from the National System for use by agricultural products (with State extension services and the private sector to serve as the primary conduit of agricultural weather forecasts and climatic information to producers); and

(C) develop programs to educate agricultural producers on how to best use weather and climate information to improve management decisions; and

(2) other assurances and information as the Secretary may require by rule.

SEC. 407. FUNDING.

(a) ALLOCATION OF FUNDS.—Not less than 15 percent and not more than 25 percent of the funds appropriated for a fiscal year to carry out this title shall be used for cooperative work with the National Weather Service entered into under section 403(b)(1). Not less than 15 percent and not more than 25 percent of the funds shall be used by the Cooperative State Research Program for a competitive grants program under section 405. Not less than 25 percent and not more than 35 percent of the funds shall be divided equally between the participating States under section 406. The remaining funds shall be allocated for use by the Agricultural Weather Office and the Cooperative Extension Service in carrying out generally the provisions of this title.

(b) LIMITATIONS ON USE OF FUNDS.—Funds provided under the authority of this title shall not be used for the construction of facilities. Each State or agency receiving funds shall not use more than 30 percent of such funds for equipment purchases. Any use of the funds in facilitating the distribution of agricultural and climate information to producers shall be done with consideration for the role that the private meteorological sector can play in such information delivery.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is hereby authorized to be appropriated $5,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992 to carry out this title.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to the bill?

AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. LEWIS OF FLORIDA

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEWIS of Florida: On 20, following line 17, add the following new title:

TITLE V—TROPICAL CYCLONE RESEARCH PROGRAM

SEC. 501. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Tropical Cyclone Research of 1989".

SEC. 502. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) many areas of the United States, including those bordering the Atlantic Ocean and Gulf of Mexico, rely on data provided by the Department of Defense through the Air Force WC-130 weather reconnaissance aircraft to predict the intensity, speed, and direction of movement of tropical cyclones, including hurricanes and tropical storms;

(2) these same areas also rely on data collected by the Department of Commerce through the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's satellite, radar, aircraft, and buoy technologies to predict tropical cyclone behavior and to conduct research on improving forecasts and warnings;

(3) satellites, including the Geostationary Operational Environmental Satellites, are an important source of tropical cyclone information, but they cannot provide the same quality of information as is supplied by weather reconnaissance aircraft;

(4) there is currently only one Geostationary Operational Environmental Satellite positioned over the United States and the loss of its ability to collect data would severely restrict tropical cyclone information gathering; and

(5) a vigorous research program in tropical cyclone behavior and forecasting is important if the accuracy of prediction of tropical cyclones is to be significantly improved.

SEC. 503. ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.

The Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of Commerce shall establish a 5-year joint program which expands the plan established in section 101(b) for collecting operational and reconnaissance data, conducting research, and analyzing data on tropical cyclones to assist the forecast and warning program and increase the understanding of the causes and behavoir of tropical cyclones.

SEC. 504. RESPONSIBILITIES.

(a) The Secretary of Defense shall have the responsibility for maintaining, flying, and funding tropical cyclone reconnaissance aircraft to accomplish the program established under section 2 and to transfer the data to the Secretary of Commerce, unless a joint agreement is reached, with the approval of both the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of Commerce, for the transfer of such responsibility to an appropriate federal agency or department.

(b) The Secretary of Commerce shall have the responsibility of funding and carrying out data gathering and research by remote sensing, ground sensing, and other technologies necessary to accomplish the program established under section 503.

SEC. 505. MANAGEMENT PLANS.

(a) The Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of Commerce shall jointly develop, and, within 120 days after the date of enactment of this Act, submit to the Congress, a management plan for the program established under section 503 and section 101(b), which shall include organizational structure, goals, major tasks, and funding profiles for the 5-year duration of the program.

(b) The Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of Commerce shall jointly development, and, within 4 years after the date of enactment of this Act, submit to the Congress, a management plan providing for continued tropical cyclone surveillance and reconnaissance which will adequately protect the citizens of the coastal areas of the United States.

(c) The management plan and program shall provide for a minimum of the same level and quality of protection as the current tropical cyclone surveillance and reconnaissance program. The management plan and program shall in no way allow any reduction in the level, quality, timeliness, sustainability and area served, including the Hawaiian Islands, of both the existing principal and back-up severe storm reconnaissance and tracking systems.

Mr. LEWIS of Florida (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I would like to express my appreciation to Mr. ROE, the chairman of the committee, for his support regarding the field hearing in West Palm Beach this April, and for this program in general.

I also want to thank the subcommittee chairman, Mr. SCHEUER, for his leadership in holding hearings on hurricane surveillance research. Mr. WALKER, Mr. ASPIN, Mr. YOUNG, Mr. HUTTO, and others have also provided strong and valuable support for this program.

The field hearing was the first one ever held to examine hurricane research in depth, and its results were startling. Several expert witnesses testified that the accuracy of hurricane prediction has only marginally improved in the last 20 years.

To address this problem, I introduced H.R. 2479, the Tropical Cyclone Research Act. This bill, which is virtually identical to my amendment today, has attracted the bipartisan support of 22 cosponsors, including three committee chairmen.

My amendment will establish a 5-year interagency program to collect reconnaissance data, conduct research, and analyze data on tropical cyclones to assist in forecasting and increase the understanding of tropical cyclones.

My amendment does not call for any additional funds. It merely calls on the agencies to continue the funding already in place through 1990, and to initiate a study to design a management plan which will be reported to Congress within 120 days.

We need the Hurricane Hunters. We need better * * * more durable weather satellites. We need better land radar. In short, we need whatever it takes to adequately warn more than 100 million Americans living in harm's way.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly urge the passage of this amendment. This research program is essential if we are to improve hurricane forecasting to a level that is acceptable to the millions of coastal residents who rely on this data to warn them of life threatening storms.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, will the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEWIS] yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEWIS] extensively on his extraordinary work, not only on this amendment, but other amendments which he has offered over a period of time. I find myself again on behalf of the majority complimenting him on his work and accepting his amendment which he has added to the work of the committee.

Mr. Chairman, we will accept the amendment of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEWIS] as it is.

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE].

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I know that this amendment has been accepted, but I just want to compliment the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEWIS] for his work on this. What this really means is 30-miles better accuracy in trying to determine where a hurricane is going to hit. Especially along our coast areas this can save lives and mean lots of dollars in saving for citizens that live in those areas that are so vulnerable.

Mr. Chairman, in Mexico last year, Hurricane Gilbert struck and killed over 300 people, and it left destruction of about $5 billion plus. Our ability to get into that hurricane and anticipate where it was going to strike meant so much and saved many lives.

Mr. Chairman, I compliment the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. Chairman, I want to praise Congressman LEWIS for introducing this amendment. It is urgently needed to insure that the coastal communities of our Nation receive protection from hurricanes. Currently, the Air Force and NOAA operate a Weather Reconnaissance Program which provides vital information regarding the exact location, strength, and wind distribution of hurricanes.

However, this program is in danger—danger we cannot afford. The Air Force—after agreeing to keep flying the Hurricane Hunters for 2 more years—has now indicated that they will drop the funding for these planes after the 1990 hurricane season.

This bill would mandate a 5-year program between the NOAA and the Air Force to monitor and collect data on hurricanes using Air Force aircraft and NOAA satellites.

So far we have been fortunate this hurricane season and have not experienced what is easily the most devastating force in nature. However, Texans and our neighbors along the gulf coast can well remember each of the hurricanes that pounded our shores.

Anyone who has ever lived through a hurricane has a healthy respect for them. In Mexico last year, Hurricane Gilbert left $5 billion in destruction and 318 deaths in its wake. Although this damage was devastating, it would have been worse if we did not have the fair warning. Without the reconnaissance missions flown by the Air Force Hurricane Hunters, the path of Hurricane Gilbert would have been unpredictable. The Hurricane Hunters improve the accuracy of prediction by as much as 30 miles.

It is absolutely essential that we show respect for hurricanes and vote today to ensure that this Government has a plan to keep flying the Hurricane Hunters.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 2427, the 1990 NOAA authorization bill.

As a pilot, I would like to point out two areas in the bill where the subcommittee's work will save lives.

First, the bill provides that no currently operating weather station, located at an airport, may be closed, unless, after an air safety appraisal, the National Weather Service can certify to Congress that there will be no decrease in aircraft safety.

Second, the subcommittee has recommended that the Weather Service reopen certain contract weather observation stations that were closed in mountain passes of the Pacific Northwest during the last budget crunch. We have already lost one pilot in the area in what appears to be a weather-related accident. His plane has yet to be located. The work of the subcommittee will help prevent further such accidents.

I would like to thank the subcommittee chairman [Mr. SCHEUER], the ranking member [Ms. SCHNEIDER], and the subcommittee staff for putting together such a farsighted bill. The Natural Resources Subcommittee has an important responsibility and has carried its responsibility very thoughtfully and well.

I would also like to thank the chairman of the full committee, Mr. ROE, and the ranking member, Mr. WALKER, for their followup work with the National Weather Service. Through personal experience, the chairman is familiar with the weather problems in our area. I deeply appreciate his help.

H.R. 2427 is a well-drafted bill that I again emphasize will save lives. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I rise to commend the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology for its leadership in establishing the Agriculture Weather Office and Information System. The program is being initiated as part of the authorization for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, although it actually will be administered by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, under terms of H.R. 2427.

The committee wisely determined that we need to give increased attention to agriculture weather information because of the variability and losses in agricultural production due to climatic factors. It would certainly make good sense if we could reduce crop losses through a nationally coordinated agricultural weather information system.

I believe this is possible. The University of North Dakota's Center for Aerospace Sciences has pioneered work on cloud seeding and hail suppression, to cite a couple of examples. It has also made strides in predicting lightning and severe storms. Moreover, it has developed coordinated approaches to weather research involving both governmental agencies and the private sector.

UND's leadership has resulted in the establishment of a new Earth Systems Science Institute. The institute will utilize the resources of the nationally recognized Center for Aerospace Sciences to provide agricultural planners and food producers with more complete, timely, and versatile information about climate, weather, and water supply. The center will also take advantage of the presently untapped resource of satellite information and remote sensing for agricultural management and crop production. It further expects to play a key role in helping to track the impact of the greenhouse effect on farming.

As the Agriculture Weather Office gets underway, I certainly urge it to work closely with university programs and State weather agencies in developing accurate and useful agricultural weather information. There presently is no focused way to do this and this bill will help to fill the void. So I ask my colleagues to support this new venture.

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Chairman, although the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration [NOAA] is a little known agency outside of the Beltway, its activities have a significant positive impact on our lives every day.

Through the weather forecasting and warning network of the National Weather Service, NOAA provides the hurricane, tornado, thunderstorm and flash flood warnings so vital to the safety of all Americans.

Through their satellite information service, NOAA provides early warnings of hurricane development; search and rescue services for downed aircraft and ships in distress; and global environmental monitoring services.

Through the oceanic and atmospheric research conducted by NOAA, we have a better understanding of the impact of ocean pollution on our environment and of the global warming processes which may be causing major changes in our weather and climate.

Yet, this important agency, instead of being allowed to take its proper leadership role at the forefront of atmospheric and environmental science, has been reduced to fighting to maintain its very existence.

Mr. Chairman, NOAA's budget request for fiscal year 1990 is almost $100 million less than the amount that was appropriated for fiscal year 1989. And the funding level for fiscal year 1989 was clearly insufficient as Congress just recently approved dire emergency supplemental appropriations of $13.1 million for the National Weather Service and $13.2 million for the Geostationary weather satellite program.

These dire emergency supplemental appropriations were necessary in order to prevent the closure of 70–132 weather offices in fiscal years 1989–90, and to keep the Geostationary weather satellite program on schedule for a 1990 launch.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 2427 authorizes us a total of $862 million for NOAA's programs under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology. While that is an increase of $144 million over the budget request, it is only $11 million more than what was appropriated for fiscal year 1989, and is within the Congressional Budget Office's fiscal year 1990 baseline allowance.

H.R. 2427 authorizes appropriations for the progams of the National Weather Service; the National Environmental Satellite, Data, and Information Service, and the Office of Oceanic and Atmospheric Research.

The bill authorizes a number of especially critical programs including first, full funding in support of National Weather Service operations and technology modernization; second, additional funding for the Geostationary Operational Environmental Satellite [GOES] program; third, the Landsat 6 commercialization program and operational support for Landsats 4 and 5; and funding authorization for global climate change research activities.

The details of the funding authorizations contained in H.R. 2427 are shown in the following table:

While this legislation authorizes less money than I would have preferred, I do think it is a realistic compromise given current budget constraints.

This bill represents a solid consensus and is offered in the spirit of bipartisanship.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank Chairman ROBERT ROE, Congresswoman SCHNEIDER, Congressman WALKER, and their staffs for their assistance in putting together this bipartisan package.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I just want to congratulate the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEWIS] for his amendment and say for the minority side that we certainly support the gentleman's efforts.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEWIS].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MS. SCHNEIDER

Ms. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Ms. SCHNEIDER: Page 10, after line 22, insert the following new section:

SEC. 303. TRANSFER OF ARCHIVING RESPONSIBILITY FOR LAND REMOTE-SENSING DATA.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) section 602 of the Land Remote-Sensing Commercialization Act of 1984 (15 U.S.C. 4272) directs the Secretary of Commerce to provide for the archiving of land remote-sensing data for historical, scientific, and technical purposes, including long-term global environmental monitoring;

(2) the Secretary of Commerce currently provides for the archiving of Landsat data at the Department of the Interior's EROS Data Center, which is consistent with the requirement of such section 602(g) to use existing Federal Government facilities to the maximum extent practicable in carrying out this archiving responsibility;

(3) the Landsat data collected since 1972 are an important global data set for monitoring and assessing land resources and global change;

(4) the Secretary of the Interior maintains archives of aerial photography, digital cartographic data, and other Earth science data at the EROS Data Center that also are important data sets for monitoring and assessing land resources and global change;

(5) it is appropriate to transfer authority for section 602 of the Land Remote-Sensing Commercialization Act of 1984 to the Secretary of the Interior; and

(6) the Secretary of the Interior should explore ways to facilitate the use of archiving data for research purposes consistent with other provisions of such Act.

(b) AMENDMENTS.—The Land Remote-Sensing Commercialization Act of 1984 is amended—

(1) in section 402(b)(4), by inserting "of the Interior" after "Secretary";

(2) in section 602 (b), (c), (d), (f), and (g), by inserting "of the Interior" after "Secretary" each place it appears; and

(3) by adding at the end of section 602 the following new subsection:

"(h) In carrying out the functions of this section, the Secretary of the Interior shall consult with the Secretary to ensure that archiving activities are consistent with the terms and conditions of any contract or agreement entered into under title II, III, or V of this Act and with any license issued under title IV of this Act.".

Ms. SCHNEIDER (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

Ms. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to H.R. 2427 that would change the Land Remote-Sensing Commercialization Act of 1984 (P.L. 98-365). This amendment would transfer responsibility for archiving land remote-sensing data from the Department of Commerce to the Department of the Interior.

This amendment is based on a bill, H.R. 2873, which I introduced on July 12 at the request of the administration. H.R. 2873 has been cosponsored by key members of the Science, Space, and Technology Committee and the Interior Committee. These members include Representatives JAMES SCHEUER, BOB WALKER, MORRIS UDALL, DON YOUNG, and NICK JOE RAHALL. I thank them for their support.

Land remote-sensing data is important for a number of reasons including scientific research, environmental monitoring, and natural resource exploration. Any interruption in our ability to store or retrieve such data would be a serious loss. Therefore, the Secretary of the Department of Commerce has been given the responsibility to ensure the reliable and assessable archiving of Landsat data.

Currently, the Secretary of Commerce discharges this responsibility by passthrough funding to the Department of the Interior, which also maintains archives of aerial photography, digital mapping data, and related forms of information.

Because the Department of the Interior has handled this work in a satisfactory manner, the administration, with the support of the Department of Commerce, has requested that the Department be given direct responsibility for this function. By legislating this transfer in authority, this bill would streamline agency operations, increase efficiency, and help to ensure access to Landsat data in the future.

In conclusion, I believe that this is a good-government amendment on behalf of a very valuable program and urge its adoption.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. SCHNEIDER. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, again I want to thank the gentlewoman from Rhode Island [Mrs. SCHNEIDER] profusely for her splendid work on this legislation and particularly this amendment. The majority reviewed it, and it is perfectly in accord with what we think should be done, and we thank the gentlewoman and accept her amendment.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. SCHNEIDER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman from Rhode Island [Ms. SCHNEIDER] for all the work she put in on this bill. This bill is largely the result of a compromise she reached with the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHEUER], and, as for her amendment, it is an excellent amendment, and the minority is very happy to accept it.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. SCHNEIDER. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, I also want to take this opportunity to thank the gentlewoman from Rhode Island [Ms. SCHNEIDER] as the ranking member on the subcommittee for the very exceptional job she has done in helping to coordinate and really put together what I believe to be, even though this is the first day back, the opening of the session, and maybe some people are not quite sure about how important a bill this is, but this is an extremely important bill to the country.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman from Rhode Island [Ms. SCHNEIDER] very much.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by my colleague, the gentlelady from Rhode Island [Ms. SCHNEIDER]. This amendment seeks to transfer the funding responsibility for archiving land remote-sensing data to the Department of the Interior from the Department of Commerce.

Under current law, the National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration has funding authority over the archiving of remotely sensed data. But the actual archiving of this data is carried out by the U.S. Geological Survey at their Earth Resources Observation Systems Data Center through a memorandum of understanding with NOAA.

However, in the past few years, NOAA has neglected to include the funding for this activity as a budget item in its annual budget proposals and USGS has to seek other avenues to obtain the funding. Basically, this has become an administrative nightmare with one agency being tied to another for yearly funding requests.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Mining and Natural Resources which has jurisdiction over the archiving activity of the U.S. Geological Survey, I strongly support adoption of this amendment.

The gentlewoman's amendment is aimed at transferring funding authority over archiving of land remote-sensing data from NOAA to the USGS, which will result in administrative simplicity by placing both archiving authority and operation at the USGS.

This action will also serve to further expedite the budget process by allowing the USGS to include this activity in its annual budget proposals to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Rhode Island [Ms. SCHNEIDER].

The amendment was agreed to.

□ 1610

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments? If not, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore. (Mr. KANJORSKI) having assumed the chair, Mr. LANCASTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that the Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 2427) to authorize appropriations for certain atmospheric and satellite programs and functions of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, and for other purposes pursuant to House Resolution 230, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole? If not, the question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 380, nays 1, not voting 49, as follows:

Messrs. CRANE, HANSEN, DANNEMEYER, and NIELSON of Utah changed their vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, due to illness I was absent on rolcall no. 222. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye".

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous matter on H.R. 2427, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KANJORSKI). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

EXPRESSING SORROW OF THE HOUSE AT THE DEATH OF THE HONORABLE LARKIN SMITH, REPRESENTATIVE FROM THE STATE OF MISSISSIPPI

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 232) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 232

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Honorable LARKIN I. SMITH, a Representative from the State of Mississippi.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That when the House adjourns today, it adjourn as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, LARKIN and I were last together at Mississippi State University, only a short time before his death, where we joined with our colleagues in paying tribute to Senator John Stennis.

Although he had only a brief 7 months to serve in the House, LARKIN had made an impact in several areas. We had worked together on several projects of interest to the people of his district and the State.

With a background in law enforcement, Congressman SMITH brought to the House an expertise in law enforcement which served him in good stead in the war on drugs.

Although his congressional career was short, LARKIN had a long and dedicated career in public service.

To LARKIN's wife, and his family, we extend our greatest sympathies in their loss. We have lost a valued Member.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY].

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN], dean of the Mississippi congressional delegation and also dean of House of Representatives, for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would inform the gentleman from Mississippi, if he has no objection, that I will call for a special order for LARKIN SMITH on September 12, Tuesday next.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that there will be a memorial service today at 6:30 at the St. Peter's Catholic Church which is at 2d and C Streets, about three blocks from the Capitol, in memory of LARKIN SMITH.

I certainly hope on Tuesday next during the special order that Members from both sides of the aisle will participate, and again I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

Mr. WHITTEN. I thank the gentleman, and we are glad to have those remarks from our colleague.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois, the minority leader.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the distinguished dean of the House for yielding.

I regret that earlier in the day when there was a moment of silence given in eulogy to our late departed friends, LARKIN SMITH and MICKEY LELAND, that I was unavoidably called form the floor of the House.

As was indicated by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] there will be a memorial service for LARKIN at 6:30 this evening.

□ 1640

Both the gentleman from Mississippi and I were privileged to be present at the funeral itself during the recess. I do not know that I have attended any larger funeral for a Member of Congress than I did the one for the gentleman from Mississippi, LARKIN SMITH.

It was held in the Civic Center in Biloxi. The entire arena was encircled with floral memorabilia from Members and loved ones from around the country. There were visitors from neighboring States in the law enforcement area.

LARKIN was indeed, in his relatively short period of time in this House, the possessor of an outstanding record. It is not always longevity that counts in the House but rather the quality of one's service.

LARKIN certainly demeanored himself beautifully as he served in this body. And those who still serve in this body regret very much that we are not going to be able to continue that valued service.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I thank the gentleman for yielding further.

Mr. Speaker, I found out from the dean of the Texas delegation, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] that there has been a request for a special order for Tuesday for MICKEY LELAND. I think that it would be best if I would probably request mine on Wednesday instead of Tuesday. I will make that request at a later time.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on Representative LARKIN SMITH. I did not notice in the press any comment about his activity on the Committee on Government Operations. As a freshman he became a ranking member on the Human Resources and Intergovernmental Relations Subcommittee, which is a fine achievement for a freshman Representative.

We liked him very much on that committee. I just wanted to add that to the RECORD.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the resolution just adopted.

Mr. Speaker, I realize special services will be held later but numerous of our colleagues have paid tribute today to his memory.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

EXPRESSING SORROW OF THE HOUSE AT THE DEATH OF HON. MICKEY LELAND, A REPRESENTATIVE FROM THE STATE OF TEXAS

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 233), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 233

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Honorable Mickey Leland, a Representative from the State of Texas.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That when the House adjourns today, it adjourn as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution because of the great service that MICKEY LELAND has rendered this Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I also will ask unanimous consent that I have a 1 hour special order at the close of business on Tuesday next in which other Members may make their statements and revise and extend them. I advise Members of that request at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

Ther SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

APPOINTMENT AS MEMBERS OF FUNERAL COMMITTEE OF THE LATE HONORABLE MICKEY LELAND

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of August 4, 1989, empowering the Speaker to appoint commissions, boards, and committees authorized by law or by the House, the Speaker did on August 19, 1989, appoint the following Members to attend the funeral of the late Honorable MICKEY LELAND:

THE VANDAL FLEETS OF THE PACIFIC

(Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the New York Times for its editorial commentary of yesterday concerning a very serious problem affecting marine life and mammals. Mr. Speaker, I am referring to drift net fishing that is now being conducted by some 800 fishing vessels from the countries of Japan and Taiwan.

Mr. Speaker, I do not have to be a mathematician, but if you figure that 1 vessel strings for about 60 miles, with 800 of these vessels doing this every day, that is 48,000 miles of drift net fishing.

Mr. Speaker, the dangers of drift net fishing are obvious—30 feet deep, 60 miles per stretch, this netting does not discriminate whether it catches albacore, dolphins, sharks, whales, whatever there is in existence. These nets are nets of death.

Mr. Speaker, these nets are sometimes broken and released accidentally from the mother vessels. What happens? The net continues to fish without any control since it is made of nylon and almost totally indestructible.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the President to put pressure on Japan and Taiwan to stop this insane method of fishing, and I hope my colleagues will join me in introducing legislation to control this.

[From the New York Times, Sept. 5, 1989]

VANDAL FLEETS OF THE PACIFIC

Driftnets, gigantic traps 30 miles long and 30 feet deep, are being deployed in great numbers by the fishing fleets of Japan, South Korea and Taiwan. These indiscriminate maws threaten to become a scourge of all animals that use the ocean's surface waters. Under pressure from Washington, Japan and Taiwan have at last agreed to station observers on their fishing vessels to measure what the nets do, but South Korea still truculently resists taking even this basic step.

Driftnets are cast in the evening, when fish rise to the surface, and retrieved the next day. Every animal larger than the mesh size is at risk. Seabirds, seals and dolphins are trapped along with the fish. No one yet knows what damage the nets do, but it could be considerable. Driftnets are now cast and retrieved some 50,000 times a year. In areas where fleets concentrate, the waters could be thoroughly depleted of all species caught by the nets, a loss that seems certain to affect the ocean's ecology.

The driftnet fleets seem already to be devastating Alaska's precious salmon fisheries. Though squid are the main target, some vessels deliberately set their nets in places where they take salmon, despite an international convention that migrating fish belong to the country of their home rivers. Alaskan fishermen predicted a catch of 40 million pink salmon last year, but only 12 million were taken. There were no biological reasons to explain the shortfall, and numerous immature salmon appeared for sale on Asian markets.

The uncontrolled behavior of the Japanese, South Korean and Taiwanese fleets suggests a policy of fishing out an area regardless of its sustainable yield and then moving elsewhere. Even if these countries have little respect for nature's balance, it's in their own interest to assess the effect of their fishing practices.

Fortunately Washington has a means of persuasion. In 1987 Congress passed a driftnet fishing law calling for an embargo on the fishery products of any country that undermines international conservation. Under this threat Japan has agreed to take nine observers on its 520 squid vessels. But it insisted on designating the vessels, and refused to accept radio transponders that would indicate if ships were straying into salmon migration routes. Last month, just at the deadline, Taiwan agreed to accept both observers and transponders. South Korea is now the only holdout.

The observers will share data with all countries involved and enable their biologists to assess and mitigate the impact of driftnets. Instead of stalling, the driftnet fishers would do better to take the initiative in agreeing on responsible management practices that respect the environment and foster maximum sustainable yields. The oceans may be large but not large enough to endure unfettered greed.

STANDING ALONE

The region is again awash with worries. The assassination of Malipu Balakau in Papua New Guinea and the Bougainville crisis are drawing the country deeper into trouble. Fiji is still striving to find a new constitution. The French are continuing nuclear testing in French Polynesia. The tiny atolls are facing being swamped by rising seas. And a drug haul points to a new heroin route through Vanuatu. But none of these is grabbing as much attention as the attempt to stop the use of driftnets in the rich South Pacific albacore fisheries.

The war against the "wall of death", as driftnets are now commonly known, is uniting the Pacific Island states like never before. Their fear is genuine; a collapse of fisheries in the south will deprive their canneries of stock and deny struggling economies much-needed foreign revenue. But as they unite against Japan and Taiwan they also expose the weakness of the small states to stand alone at a time of over-dependence on foreign economic aid. Japan and Taiwan are big aid donors to the region. Japan, in particular, has acquired a powerful influence. What they failed to conquer in World War Two they now buy with aid. This is why the struggle to remove Asian driftnetters from the South Pacific will be difficult.

It can be argued that Japan and Taiwan are using economic aid as leverage in their stand against a ban on driftnets. But it would be wrong to condemn individual island nations, some of which are among the poorest in the world, when they accept development aid funds from Taiwan and Japan. Albacore tuna is one thing. Financing development in countries where money is scarce, is another.

The Asians view the "wall of death" saga as an overreaction based on no concrete evidence from an indepth study of the southern fisheries. They want such a study made, the result of which can form the framework on an agreement on driftnets. This is one of the things that will be considered at the South Pacific Forum meeting in Tarawa this month. The politicians in that meeting might draw up an agreement for a regional ban on driftnets from the region's Economic Zones. There is little else they can do. Most in the Forum meeting know their countries have other worries. Back home they will be looking for money to fund essential development projects. When the time comes to find that money, it is most likely Japan and Taiwan will be the ones signing the cheques.

TRYING TO STOP THE SLAUGHTER

(The Pacific Islands are uniting like never before to eliminate the use of the destructive driftnets from the southern albacore fisheries. The issue will feature in discussions at the Forum meeting in Tarawa this month.)

Imagine if the Pacific fishing fleets of Taiwan and Japan dropped their driftnets end-to-end in one night from west to east. They would stretch from Sydney past Papeete, providing a 15-metre deep curtain that would hook fish, whales, turtles, ships' propellers, and even birds. Such is the frightening ability of the driftnets to "stripmine" the sea and empty it of its stock, hook line and sinker. This is why the nations of the Pacific are uniting like never before against its use in the rich southern albacore fishery and the Tasman Sea.

Now commonly known as the "wall of death", driftnets or gillnets are made of fine mono-multifilament nylon mesh deployed in straight lines to hang in the water like large curtains. They can be eight to 15 metres deep and are up to 60 kilometres long. Small floats keep them perpendicular to the surface and lead weights keep the bottom edge hanging straight down in the water.

Marine environmentalists say this is the most damaging method of fishing and causes irreversible ecological damage. "It's like dropping a bomb in the ocean, killing everything within reach and people come in, take what they want and throw the rest back into the sea," said research biologist Samuel LaBudde, of the international environmental organisation Earthtrust. "Few people can imagine how damaging this technology is to the resources of the sea. It's like stripmining the ocean."

The issue, now so sensitive it has overshadowed French nuclear testing in French Polynesia, will be the focus of the South Pacific Forum meeting in Tarawa this month. Consensus will be sought for a regional treaty backed by all member countries banning the use of driftnets in their economic zones and putting a black ban on all driftnet vessels needing harbour facilities for transhipment, refuelling and other services. Regional canneries will also be asked to stop buying albacore tuna from driftnet vessels.

The islands are getting the full backing of New Zealand and Australia. Both have imposed territorial restrictions including the banning of driftnets from economic zones, the denial of access to foreign driftnet vessels and a ban on transhipment. New Zealand warned that ships could be confiscated if they carried driftnets in New Zealand waters. And the Auckland Harbour Board has voted unanimously to ban driftnet vessels.

In Nairobi on May 29 New Zealand environmental expert John Gilbert told a United Nations environmental panel that driftnet fishing is fast depleting Pacific Islands marine resources and threatening the diversity of life in the sea. "With its large by-catch of unwanted fish marine mammals and birds, drift gillnetting is devastating marine resources," he said. He called for it to be outlawed, and immediately won the support of Australia and the international environmental organisation, Greenpeace. A month later Taiwan succumbed to an American ultimatum and agreed to sign a North Pacific driftnet agreement with the United States. The agreement, among other things, will allow for "high seas boarding" of Taiwanese driftnet vessels and requires satellite transponders placed on all Taiwanese ships so the U.S. can keep track of fishing vessels.

While the United States was able to flex its muscles and force Taiwan to an agreement, the tiny, aid-department Pacific Island nations are finding the battle tougher without the same political and economic advantages. A conference in Suva on June 26-28 between Pacific Island countries, Taiwan, South Korea and Japan magnified the weakness of the small states to stand alone. South Korea agreed in that meeting to withdraw its driftnet research vessel from the South Pacific. But Taiwan and Japan bluntly refused to compromise and forced an impasse in the negotiation.

Both these Asian economic powers enjoy a lot of influence in the region. Japan, for example has become one of the bigger aid donors to the Pacific Islands, providing financial assistance for a variety of projects with particular attention to the development of the fishing industry. Within hours of Japan telling the Suva conference it would not stop the use of driftnets in the South Pacific, Western Samoa announced it was accepting nearly U.S. $11.4 million from Japan to pay for the second phase of the Apia port development. (Japan provides nearly 50 percent of Western Samoa's total aid programme). The same day Japan and the Solomon Islands signed an agreement in Honiara for the Japanese government to provide U.S. $7.4 million to pay for the construction of a fishing project at Noro. The facilities include a cold storage, a wharf, ice-making plant and workshop. It will be the new base for an expanded cannery owned jointly by the Solomons government and a Japanese company. In Tonga, Taiwan is spending U.S. $1.8 million for the construction of an indoor stadium in Nuku'alofa to be used for the Mini South Pacific Games next month.

The list doesn't end there. Last month Taiwan shipped into Suva the first of the Hyundai Sonatas it's giving Fiji for use by government ministers. Japan at about the same time agreed to provide a further grant of U.S. $1.7 million to buy fishing equipment for the rural areas. Fiji's fisheries department is seeking another U.S. $1.6 million, again to buy fishing equipment. Japanese and Taiwanese aid funds are financing projects throughout the Pacific Islands. It was noted at the Suva conference, for example, that Fiji, which usually provides a pivotal role in regional decisions, was non-committal on the driftnet issue.

The albacore fishery between latitude 30 and 40 south, is one of the richest in the world having been newly-discovered by the Asian driftnetters who once concentrated in the North Pacific. The number of driftnet vessels has grown from 10 Japanese and seven Taiwanese in the 1987/88 season to at least 50 Japanese and 130 Taiwanese ships this year. The attraction is the highly-priced albacore tuna whose white flesh is fetching U.S. $1,000 a tonne in the United States. Forum Fisheries Agency estimates, however, predict a collapse of the fishery within five years if driftnetting is allowed to continue at its current rate. Such a situation would be disastrous for the longline industries in Fiji, Tonga, French Polynesia, Solomon Islands, the Cook Islands and Vanuatu.

Japan argues that the Forum Fisheries Agency does not have concrete evidence to back its argument on the albacore stock available and the sustainable level of exploitation. The agency admits such a lack of data and points only at the history of driftnet fishing in the North Pacific to draw parallels in the south. It also accuses Taiwanese and Japanese fleets in the south of not providing complete information on the amount of catch being taken.

For Asians, driftnets are essential. They are economical. Ships do not require the large crews needed by the longliners. Japan pointed out that a workshop on South Pacific Albacore Resource (SPAR) in Suva in June determined that the damage to the albacore fisheries caused by driftnets was "unclear". It is therefore necessary to do an indepth study, which Japan is prepared to help, into "all kinds of fisheries". This was supported by Taiwan which said that while it was "very much concerned about the possibility of over-exploitation of the southern albacore stock" they had very little information on the available stock. "We shall very much like to realize the exact stock status of this species before something on the conservation can be done," a Taiwan statement said. It offered to provide scientists to help in a study to determine the Maximum Sustainable Yield of the stock. Based only on such a scientific evaluation will it go into a conservation and management agreement concerning the southern albacore stock.

PACIFIC NATIONS SEEK HELP TO STOP DRIFT-NETTING

(By B.J. Cutler)

WASHINGTON.—Fifteen South Pacific nations have uttered a cry for help against ecological and economic disaster, but because they are tiny and remote their plea has gone virtually unheard by the rest of the world.

The 15, among them Micronesia, Fiji, Nauru, Tonga and Vanuatu, say their fisheries are being ravaged by high-tech fleets from three economically powerful Asian countries: Japan, South Korea and Taiwan.

Through their regional group—the Pacific Forum—the mini-states complain that their waters are being denuded of fish, birds and mammals by about 160 foreign boats using huge drift nets, which environmentalists call the "wall of death."

Each fishing vessel trails as much as 30 miles of nylon mesh. The 50-foot-deep nets, supported by floats on the surface and held down by lead weights at the bottom, entrap and kill everything they encounter: small whales, sea lions, seals, dolphins, squid, seabirds and their prey, albacore tuna.

Known as "strip mining the sea," the drift-net technique is an efficient but indiscriminate killer. The foreign boats keep the more valuable fish and throw back into the ocean about 40 percent of their catch—dead.

At a recent meeting of the Pacific Forum, Cook Islands Prime Minister Geoffrey Henry said the Southern Pacific albacore tuna would be extinct in two years if driftnet fishing were not halted. He assailed Japan's "intransigence" in refusing to end the destructive practice.

Australia, which keeps a neighborly eye on the island specks to its north, has proposed an international convention banning drift nets, which imperiled members of the forum strongly endorse. The United States and other nations with a distaste for ecocide ought to support the effort.

As North American fishermen can testify, it will be hard to get Japan, South Korea and Taiwan to fold up the death nets. Under international agreements, Pacific salmon belong to their countries of origin, the United States and Canada, and Asian fleets should not be taking them.

But under the guise of fishing for squid, the three countries have sent about 700 boats into the North Pacific that together drift more than 35,000 miles of net. The piracy of salmon heading back to native streams to spawn has cut the North American catch by half.

Threatened with economic sanctions, Japan has agreed to restrict its activities in the North Pacific. But the area in question is vast—the size of the United States—and the Coast Guard has only a few ships and planes to patrol it. West Coast fishermen worry that the future will see piracy as usual.

If the plight of whales in Antarctic waters is a model, the fishermen's fears are well grounded.

Under intense international pressure, Japan reluctantly agreed to a five-year moratorium on commercial whaling.

But each year it sends government-subsidized whalers to kill hundreds of minke whales in a "research" project. South Korea has a similar "scientific" program. Whale meat from both fleets is sold as a delicacy in Japan.

Thus, the nations that care about preserving marine life and preventing the impoverishment of South Pacific islanders have a double challenge: outlawing the wall of death by a treaty and seeing that economic predators abide by it.

REMEMBERING MICKEY LELAND

(Mr. McDERMOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I want to join my colleagues in honoring our friend MICKEY LELAND.

MICKEY will be remembered by millions of people throughout the world whose lives he touched—by bringing nourishment to those without food, concern to those without love, and hope to those without faith. He made a difference—not only to the hungry in Sudan, but to the poor in Seattle too. I want to submit for the RECORD editorials from our Seattle papers recognizing his important work on behalf of the less fortunate everywhere.

Some people wonder these days where our heroes are. They are men and women like MICKEY LELAND, Patrice Johnson, and the others on that tragic mission who, in a 100 daily sacrifices and a 1,000 quiet efforts, devoted themselves to bettering the lives of others. They are men and women of gentle hearts and ten us spirits whose simple courage a enduring dedication grace our wor too rarely and too briefly. Their wo will be remembered, and their dreams w be honored, and their inspiration will be deeply missed by us all.

LELAND AIDED HUNGRY

The death of U.S. Rep. Mickey Leland, 44, killed in a plane crash in Ethiopia, is a loss to the nation and to the suffering refugees on the African continent.

The five-term Texas congressman, former head of the Congressional Black Caucus, spearheaded the formation of the House Select Committee on Hunger, which he chaired. Largely because of his tireless efforts, Congress appropriated $800 million to hunger relief near the height of the Ethiopian famine. His committee also obtained funding for the hungry and homeless at home when the White House was turning a blind eye to such problems.

Leland, born into poverty and deserted as a child by his father, successfully pursued an education as a pharmacist and served in the Texas Legislature.

After he was elected to Congress, the plight of the world's starving made a deep impression on him, and he frequently explained his self-described "passion" for the hungry by recounting watching a 14-year old Ethiopian girl, who appeared to be about 70 years old, die before his eyes.

"In his search to look into the plight of the world's most desperate and hungry individuals, Rep. Leland represented the best in compassion that we as a nation possess," said House Speaker Tom Foley, D-Wash.

Congress could do Leland no more appropriate honor than to continue to carry out the important work he began.

[From the Seattle Times, Aug. 15, 1989]

A LOSS FOR THE NATION

In recent years, Rep. Mickey Leland, D-Texas, had ventured into Ethiopia at least a half-dozen times, entering an environmentally and politically hostile environment not on anyone's destination list for your everyday congressional junket. Leland was not one for pleasure excursions; his trips to famine-stricken African regions were borne of an almost obesssive determination to channel U.S. resources to suffering peoples there.

Now, Leland and 15 others are dead in the crash of an airplane into a western Ethiopian mountain. Leland's death during what a friend called "a mission of the heart" represents a particular loss because black Americans are vastly underrepresented in Congress. Leland's performance there had been effective enough that many expected he might become the first black U.S. senator from Texas in modern times.

But more is involved than the ranks of black leadership. As President Bush noted, Leland's death will be mourned in many places, "from Houston to Addis Ababa." And, as Rep. John Lewis, D-Ga., an important civil-rights figure, pointed out, "it's a loss for black leadership, but it's a loss for American leadership as well."

BUSH STRATEGY ON ILLEGAL DRUGS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. SCHROEDER). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ALEXANDER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Madam Speaker, I rise today to congratulate President Bush on the initiatives he announced last night in the war against drugs.

I was particularly interested in the President's call for more effort in the area of educating our people to the dangers of illegal drugs.

The President is taking action—an encouraging change from the last 8 years; where we saw more acting than action on illegal drugs preventions.

I believe that the President's proposal is a step in the right direction—although in some respects I don't believe it goes far enough and I am also concerned about the President's plans for funding the initiatives.

Improvements can be made but the plan gives us a basis to work from in the coming days.

The internal threat of illegal drugs—drugs which flow from Latin America, across our borders and into the bloodstreams of our citizens—is currently more dangerous to our country than the threat of any external attack.

We must take the message to our citizens that drug use cannot be tolerated. Until we make clear that drug trafficking and drug abuse are social crimes as well as criminal acts, there can be to final victory in this war.

Put another way, as long as there is demand, there will be supply—from some source.

I believe the President has charted the correct course. And, we have started the trip none too soon.

REMARKS OF THE HON. BILL ALEXANDER, LABOR DAY 1989, RECTOR, AR

I am happy to be here on the day set-aside to honor the American Worker and to celebrate his productivity and contribution to our nation. As one who has labored on the farm and in factories, I know first hand what it is to earn a living by the sweat of your brow.

Our ability to produce goods and services is the engine which keeps our economy running and when it is endangered, our entire system and way of life is threatened—for strength is more than defense, it is economic and moral as well.

Today, our nation's ability to produce is being challenged by drug abuse and, therefore, our national security is also challenged.

The internal threat of illegal drugs—drugs which flow from Latin America, across our borders and into the bloodstreams of American workers—is currently more dangerous to our country than the threat of any external attack.

These drugs not only rob us of productivity, but also of our young people and the future contributions to the welfare of the nation which they might have made, if they had not fallen victim to this vile plague.

Our greatest national asset is our workforce. Our prosperity and future prospects depend on our people. More than technology, capital, plant and equipment our workforce makes possible all of the social and economic progress we enjoy as Americans.

Therefore, it is essential that we protect this asset—that we not allow this precious resource to be wasted in a haze of mind destroying drugs.

Workers have always needed protection from hazards that arise in the course of earning a living. We have done much to protect working men and women from those hazards and to see to it that if an accident does occur their pocketbooks are not drained until they can return to the job.

We can do no less in the area of illegal drug use. It represents a very real hazard, one which we must protect our workforce against if we are to remain competitive in this most competitive world economy.

One of the Columbian drug lords—who holds no love for this country—has said that he can bring America down by flooding it with illegal drugs while growing very rich in the process.

We spend billions and billions of dollars to protect ourselves from external threats but, as one social scientist recently put it, he wouldn't send tanks and airplanes and guns to destroy America, he would simply send more cocaine or crack or marijuana.

The problem is a major one.

According to research made public recently by Attorney General Thornburgh, the cost of drug abuse in this country—including lost productivity, treatment for users, increased law enforcement and more prison space—exceeds $100 billion.

Now, I want you to listen to that figure—more than $100 billion, that's about double this country's net farm income in 1987.

With that $100 billion we could have better educated our children, built rural water systems, highways or new plants to give our people jobs.

While no one has discovered a way in which to do a census of illicit drug use, reliable estimates place the number of drug abusers well into the millions. It is a sad and sickening statistic.

I am tired of hearing about billions of dollars going into the pockets of Columbian drug lords and their confederates like the tinhorn dictator Manuel Noriega in Panama. I want it stopped and I want it stopped now!

In the report complied by the Attorney General he says that drug abuse in the workplace "is a problem of crisis proportions." His report indicates that the annual cost of unrealized productivity due to drug use exceeds $33 billion every year!

And, we cannot comfort ourselves believing that drug abuse is a big city problem. We all know that people are being gunned down in the streets regularly in Washington in the drug wars raging within site of the Capitol Building.

A survey of U.S. Attorneys in all 50 states indicates clearly that the problem has infiltrated the entire country—from the biggest cities to the smallest villages and towns—and that it touches all of us from Wall Street to Main Street.

Let me quote from the Attorney General's report: "We knew the country was awash in cocaine and crack, but we did not expect to find significant cocaine organizations in Wyoming, heroin trafficking in Iowa or LSD consumption in rural Georgia." But find it they did.

You also cannot say that because no one you know has a drug problem that you are untouched by the problem. The drug user must have money to sustain his habit and he is making more and more of us victims of his habit-sustaining crimes.

For example, thefts from the workplace have risen dramatically, according to the Attorney General's report, and many of those thefts are directly related to drug use.

Law enforcement officials have said that if a person uses crack four or five times a day, he may well have to steal four or five times a day.

In 1987, cocaine, heroin and other illegal drugs were identified as the direct cause of death of more than 3,000 Americans and the number is growing. Of course, this figure does not count the hundreds of people murdered in drug-related cases.

It also does not count the lives and families ruined by drugs.

Money is tight in Washington these days. Mr. Reagan left us with the largest deficit in the history of the country and we are living with the consequences of his economic polices every day.

But, we cannot afford to under fund the war on drugs.

How much is a young life worth, how much is the lifetime productivity of a worker lost to a drug-related disability worth? It boils down to how much our country is worth to us.

I am going to work with every ounce of my strength to see that we fight this war on drugs to the fullest extent possible.

We are facing a grave threat to our national security and we must treat it as such.

What can the individual do? He can seek out programs in his community and volunteer to help in the effort. If there is no such program, why not work to found one?

Dropping bombs on Columbia won't solve the problem. Until we in America make clear that illegal drug trafficking and drug abuse are social crimes as well as criminal acts, there will be no final victory in this war.

Put another way, as long as there is demand, there will be supply—from some source.

And we all have a role to play in ending this problem. No one can remain on the sidelines in this war. Daily, more and more of our citizens are injecting or ingesting these deadly drugs. They die a slow death . . . and we are all the worse for it.

Tinhorn, drug dealing dictators like Manuel Noriega and their masters—the Columbian drug lords—seem to think they will continue to operate unfettered forever. I say they are wrong. We won't allow them to continue to kill our young people, rob us of the productivity of our workforce and fill our prisons to overflowing.

Their day is coming. A day when all of their money and guns and private armies won't be able to withstand the wrath of the American people. I say hasten that day—end this plague that threatens us all.

We must reclaim our workers, children, streets, work places, schools and homes from the drug sellers and their death-dealing merchandise.

It's a big job, but together we can do it.

I have offered my congratulations to President Bush for appointing William Bennett as the country's drug czar and I wish him only the best in his task.

Recently at Mr. Bennett's request, I made recommendations for changes at the national level which I believe will help facilitate our war on drugs.

Those recommendations included:

The implementation of a single, clear anti-drug policy. What the nation has now is a multiplicity of directives.

Executive coordination of the nearly three dozen federal agencies and departments having anti-drug jurisdiction.

Improved cooperation among federal agencies and between these agencies and state and local governments. There must be an end to selfish turf fights and bureaucratic road blocks.

U.S. foreign policy and policies of U.S. intelligence agencies must be made compatible with the national interest in winning the war against illegal drugs.

Anti-illegal drug law enforcement efforts must be expanded, including more federal assistance to local government agencies.

Drug abuse resistance education programs must be expanded, including federal aid to local schools.

I might say that the latter recommendation is especially vital in the area of decreasing demand for these drugs.

We have faced many challenges and overcome many problems in this country. I am confident that we will do the same in the area of drug abuse.

ANNUNZIO PREDICTED THAT $50 BILLION WOULD BE INSUFFICIENT FOR S&L BAILOUT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, during the district work period last month, the Bush administration suggested that the $50 billion Congress earmarked to rescue the savings and loan industry may not be enough to cover the necessary costs of the bailout. This is depressing, but not surprising. When Congress debated the legislation, I predicted that the administration's estimates were much too low, and that we would have to come back in the fall to look at the need for additional funds for the industry.

Two weeks after President Bush signed the legislation into law, Federal regulators said they would put 400 thrifts into the Resolution Trust Corporation [RTC] at a cost of $50 billion. However, they admitted that the number of savings and loans they might have to take over may go higher. The chief economist for the Office of Thrift Supervision, the former Federal Home Loan Bank Board, said that upward of 600 institutions may have to be rescued by the RTC. An outside consultant said many more than 700 have been losing money, which he said was a good way to estimate the number of thrifts that will fail.

If an additional 200 institutions are put in the RTC, the cost could easily be an additional $20 billion or more.

Mr. Speaker, we have had rapidly escalating estimates on the cost of the bailout during the past 2 years. In July 1987, we were told that cleaning up insolvent S&L's would be $10.8 billion. That quickly grew to $42.5 billion by July of last year.

Then, 3 weeks after the legislation was signed into law, we learn that the machinery Congress established to manage the assets of the failed savings and loans had become entangled in a turf dispute with regulator L. William Seidman complaining that the RTC Oversight Board was tying his hands.

Mr. Seidman is Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and Chairman of the Board of the RTC, and is in charge of the day-to-day operations. A nine-member board was established to set general policy. Mr. Seidman complained recently he must go to the oversight board or the Treasury to get the funds he needs to do the job. He wants the oversight board to allocate a lump sum to the RTC for its work. The Treasury said the arrangement for cash transfers between the board and the RTC was reasonable because the board is responsible for the expenditure of the Government funds.

Mr. Speaker, we understand that dispute has been resolved, but it should not occur again. Delays in closing thrifts is costing the American taxpayer millions of dollars. Every day the insolvent thrifts remain open adds upwards of $20 million to the Government's costs. Let's think of the taxpayer and get on with our business.

FLORIDA A&M UNIVERSITY BAND HONORED

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. NELSON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Madam Speaker, I am pleased today to call attention to the outstanding performance of the Florida A&M University Marching Band in Paris on the 200th anniversary of Bastille Day, July 14.

The excellent musicians of the Marching 100 Rattler band, with their high-stepping style, honored our Nation as the only band representing the United States. Dr. William P. Foster, whose inspired choreography has brought distinction to the band and Florida A&M, has reason to be proud of his achievements and those of his musicians.

As 1 of only 16 bands worldwide invited by the Government of France to join in the celebration, the band has achieved the international recognition it deserves.

All Floridians can be proud that the Marching 100 Rattler band was selected to represent the Sunshine State and the United States during the celebration of 200 years of freedom in France.

My hat is off to you, Marching 100.

CONGRATULATIONS TO PRESIDENT ON SUGGESTED REFORMS IN DRUG REHABILITATION PROGRAMS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. STARK. Madam Speaker, the President and drug czar Bennett are to be congratulated for the suggested reforms in the Nation's drug rehabilitation programs, outlined on pages 38 through 43 of the "National Drug Control Strategy."

The President's proposal adopts most of the provisions of our bill, H.R. 2456, requiring drug rehab demonstration programs which triage addicts into the most suitable treatment programs and then measure the outcomes to determine what really works. The bill is cosponsored by Representatives STAGGERS, UNSOELD, MCDERMOTT, SCHEUER, LEHMAN of Florida, BOXER, DELLUMS, and myself.

Today, addicts often get treated by whatever rehab center they walk into—even though the treatment may not be the right kind, may be ineffective, and too expensive. We are just throwing money away unless we can develop better rehab programs. Bennett's aides and my staff met this spring and discussed the ideas in H.R. 2456, and I am very pleased that they have been adopted. This could go a long way toward improving the effectiveness of the Nation's rehab programs.

But I also note that the President's proposals do not include nearly enough money to treat everyone who seeks to get off drugs. H.R. 2456 also creates a trust fund through small increases in the alcohol and cigarette excise taxes, in order to pay for the new system of better rehab programs.

I urge Members to support the rehab reform efforts, but to also pay for this vital improvement.

Paying for effective drug rehab programs is the best and fastest way to reduce drug-related street crime.

TRIBUTE TO HOLY CROSS CHURCH, SANTA CRUZ

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the historic Holy Cross Church on the occasion of the centennial of the building of the church. The parish was founded in 1791 when the Santa Cruz Mission was built. This beautifully restored building is located on Mission Hill overlooking the city of Santa Cruz. The Holy Cross Church is the third structure to stand on this site.

Holy Cross Church has been a place of worship and public gathering for 100 years. Generations of Santa Cruzans have had the pleasure of celebrating meaningful occasions in their lives enveloped by the warmth and compassion of the congregation within the walls of Holy Cross.

Built on the original site of the Santa Cruz Mission, Holy Cross is a reminder of the mission origin of Santa Cruz and the tremendous efforts by Father Junipero Serra to establish missions along the beautiful coast of California. Its striking English Gothic style and position on Mission Hill makes a beautiful view visible from all points in the city. It is maintained splendidly and is a prominent point of admiration held dear, not only by the Holy Cross parish, but for the Santa Cruz area in whole.

In 1862, the Daughters of Charity founded Holy Cross Elementary School which began as an orphanage. Today, that school still functions. Further, Holy Cross Church houses one of the finest pipe organs in the West. The restored 1889 Felgemaker tracker pipe organ not only serves the worshipping community but also is valued as a magnificent concert instrument.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Santa Cruz take great pride in their lovely and historic church. I am honored to represent and to work with constituents who are so committed to the restoration and maintenance of this monumental structure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHARP] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, I commend to my colleagues' attention a first-rate editorial on energy conservation from last month's Los Angeles Times.

Although the editorial refers to recent proceedings before the California Energy Commission to reverse that State's diminishing commitment to conservation, the observations are equally relevant to the Nation as a whole. For example, the Tennessee Valley Authority, once a paragon of utility conservation, just canceled its entire conservation program, effective July 1.

Mr. Speaker, we can ill afford the luxury of wasting the Nation's cheapest energy option. This is particularly so today, where most of our electric utilities have not built substantial new capacity in close to a decade because of the huge expenses and uncertainties surrounding such ventures. In addition, the resurgence of the environmental movement has shown us that every one of the major fuel sources of electricity pose potential risks to our air and water.

All of this requires a renewal of our commitment to conservation as a resource of choice at the Federal, State, and local levels. Conservation is not a panacea, and it is not a long-term substitute for new supplies where such supplies are genuinely needed. But an energy policy that has not incorporated conservation into every aspect of its planning processes is a misnomer.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that this incisive editorial be placed in the RECORD.

[From the Los Angeles Times, Aug. 10, 1989]

ENERGY: A NEW AGE

Someone—or several someones—has been asleep at the switch. Even Reddy Kilowatt should be shocked that California utilities have slackened their energy conservation programs significantly in recent years, apparently because the nation does not happen to be griped by an energy crisis at the moment. Yet down the road there will be more crises. And the ultimate crisis will be when the oil runs out, as it could in the next century. There basically are two ways to prepare for that eventuality. One is to conserve all the energy possible now. The second is to prepare for a transition to a variety of new alternatives to fossil fuels.

Energy conservation makes so much sense on so many counts that it is a wonder that the nation has to be prodded so vigorously to do anything about it. At the moment, there is no such thing as an environmentally benign electric power plant. Those that burn oil or gas consume fuel that is in finite supply. Oil and coal-fired plants emit unacceptable levels of air pollution. And no new nuclear plants will be approved until safer, standardized plant designs are on the market.

But California will need no additional power plants for years if the most basic, sensible conservation programs are pursued with some vigor, as reported in Tuesday's editions of The Times by staff writer Jill Stewart. Billions of barrels of oil can be conserved, billions of dollars saved and pollution levels stabilized or reduced. One utility executive said his firm is not in the business of social engineering. Someone should be. It should not have taken the Natural Resources Defense Council, a private environmental group that took a peek at California Energy Commission records, to point out how lax the state's energy conservation programs had become. And it does not take an engineer or scientist to figure out that any reduction of future power-plant emissions also will benefit the environment and the people's health as well.

But at least the state Public Utilities Commission has responded with some alacrity by calling for an energy conservation blueprint by December. The commission says the plan should include incentives for utilities to promote conservation programs and the reduction of utility bills without the sort of sacrifices that Americans became familiar with in the 1970s. That should be no problem. New-technology light bulbs, insulation devices and heating and cooling systems will save large amounts of energy without any sacrifice at all. The reasonable amount of capital investment will be rapid within months. After that, these devices just go on saving and saving, both money and energy.

There is some question about how to acquaint developers with the latest energy conservation equipment and to get them to install such products in new homes and buildings during the construction process when it is most economical to do so. That is simple. If industry associations do not accept the latest energy conservation standards on their own within a reasonable period of time—during the next year, for instance—state and local governments should adopt the standards as law. If the initial capital outlay seems too high, tax incentives should be reinstated to ease the burden of the initial investment. Low or no-interest loans should be made available to existing home and building owners who want to retrofit.

This is one endeavor that seems too good to be true. But in fact, with energy conservation, everyone wins.

GAS FIRM SEEKS PIPELINE EXPANSION

El Paso Natural Gas Co. said it has filed an application with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to expand its interstate pipeline system by up to 600 million cubic feet a day at a cost of $201 million. The company said the expansion is needed to meet present and future natural gas needs in its principal market area of California. It said the California Public Utilities Commission is looking into the need for new interstate pipeline capacity within the state and also the need for increased service levels to existing gas users. The company said the incremental throughout resulting from the proposed system expansion will reduce the average cost of transportation for all present and future customers.

SECRETARY MARSH WAS ONE OF THE BEST

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of attending the Army's Farewell Review on the occasion of John Marsh's retirement as Secretary of the Army.

Many of us served in Congress with Jack Marsh. We found him to be a very dedicated public servant for his Virginia constituents. He carried on that fine tradition of service as Secretary of the Army for President Reagan. I think history will record that Jack will be one of the best men to every occupy that job. He knew the issues and he knew how to work with folks on Capitol Hill as well as in the Pentagon. We will miss his experience and leadership and we should all salute Jack Marsh for a job very well done.

I want to share with my colleagues the speech Secretary Marsh delivered at that ceremony on August 24 at Ft. Myer, VA.

REMARKS BY THE HON. JOHN O. MARSH, JR., ARMY FAREWELL REVIEW, CEREMONIAL HALL, FORT MYER, VA, THURSDAY, 24 AUGUST 1989

Acknowledgements: Medal of Honor recipients, Secretary Brady; Senator Thurmond; Congressman Montgomery; Chief Justice Burger; Secretary Atwood; Secretary Stone—Congratulations you'll do a great job; General Herres—representing the JCS and other senior military leaders; Judge Sessons—Director of the FBI; Secretary Weinberger—I thank you and President Reagan for asking me to serve in this post and President Bush for his support as President and Vice President.

Carl, thank you for hosting this ceremony. It has been an honor to serve with you.

Glenn Ann joins in thanking you and Pat for many kindnesses.

I am grateful to you and the Army Staff, as well as Shy Meyer and John Wickham for unfailing help and cooperation.

I want to thank the members of the Army Secretariat with whom I served, for a job well done.

I appreciate everything that has been done by those on my personal staff, who through the years, have served me and the Army so loyally and so well.

Our children join Glenn Ann and me in thanking the Army.

Our oldest son, Rob, a major—medical officer with the Special Forces and his wife Barbara, a 1st lieutenant in the Army Nurse Corps.

Our daughter, Rebecca, a school teacher, and our son Scot, who like myself, has served as a Company Commander in Virginia's 116th Infantry Regiment of the National Guard.

His wife, Susan, knows the demands made on the citizen-soldier's family.

And to: Pershing's Own; the Fife and Drug Corps; the Old Guard; the Salute Battery; and the Army Chorus—I thank you for your continuing Excellence.

I would like to talk to the soldiers in this formation. And through you, speak to the Total Army—the Regulars—the Guard—the Reserve—and all of your families who help you do such an outstanding job.

You are a cross section of America. You represent all the people of the United States.

This Army has been a leader in Equal Opportunity and this we must continue not just because its the law but because it is right.

History tells us the Army of Sparta was in its time the greatest Army in the world—Foreign visitors who came to Sparta did not find any walls around this city. When they inquired of the leaders of Sparta, "Where are the walls?", the leader pointed to the soldiers of Sparta, and said "There are the walls of Sparta."

Today our leaders can point to you and say "You are the walls of America."

What you do is important. You and your units have vital missions in defense of this country.

These missions require soldiers who are not only skilled—but dedicated. Soldiers who will take risks and have courage.

Soldiers who will endure hardships and suffer sacrifice for a great cause.

The Army is constant in its purpose. It has a special place in the hearts of the American people.

It was created before the Declaration. It won our independence at Yorktown.

Its leaders founded the Republic. They vested power in the people—and as civilians they accepted the duties of public service to support our Constitution—which you have sworn to defend.

For two centuries—and 168 battle streamers, the Army has kept that trust. As I speak I know there are elements of this force that are now, and have been for years, on alert status for possible deployment anywhere in the world.

I can tell you if they are called upon to go, they will go and if they go they will win—because this Army is an Army of winners.

There are those in our intelligence service and Special Operation Forces who are willing each day to go in harm's way for this Country. Their service is dangerous and anonymous.

Most Americans do not know what a great Army we have, but our potential adversaries know. This is one of the reasons the winds of freedom are blowing across Eastern Europe.

As Glenn Ann and I and our family say farewell, as a private citizen, I pledge to each of you my steadfast support as you serve your Country in a noble endeavor.

I know that I shall miss the Army—and someday you shall miss it too.

Whatever you do—wherever you go, you will remember these days and duties, the marching columns and convoys, the bivouacs and barracks life, the sounds of jody cadence and commands. At another time these sounds and scenes shall be reminiscences of your youth. You will look back on these days and be very proud.

Wherever I look across your ranks, I see the future of this country. Serving there are the rising leaders of America. The future non-commissioned officers and senior officers—a Chief of Staff—to lead the Army in the next century.

I know that most of your shall leave the Army, but you will be our teachers, our engineers, our craftsmen, our lawyers, and our doctors. Some of you will seek public service and become our mayors—state legislators, governors, Members of Congress, Cabinet officers—perhaps a Commander in Chief.

The Army has helped prepare you for this service.

This is a great Army because it is a part of America. It is a great Army because you are in it.

SENATE—Wednesday, September 6, 1989

The Senate met at 12 noon, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?—Micah 6:8.

Holy God, perfect in truth, justice, and love, Father of all who trust Thee, who receive Your love, thank Thee for the burden and blessing of recess—for family time, constituent time, speaking time, and travel. Thank Thee for protection, safety, rest, and renewal.

As the Senate confronts the arduous agenda of these next weeks, infuse all who labor here with wisdom and strength for the task. Help us to hear and take seriously the profound and simple counsel of the prophet Micah. Grant to each of us the will to be just in all things, merciful and compassionate in our relationship with others and a closer than ever walk with Thee. In Jesus' name. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

ORDER TO PLACE CERTAIN ITEMS ON THE CALENDAR

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that bills and joint resolutions that have been read the first time now be considered to have received their second readings en bloc, that an objection be then considered to have been lodged against further proceedings with respect to each of these items, and that they be placed on the calendar in accordance with the provision of rule XIV.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and in accordance with the request, the various and sundry items will be placed on the calendar under rule XIV.

ORDER TO PROCEED TO H.R. 3014 AT THE CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS AND RECESS FROM 1 P.M. UNTIL 2:15 P.M.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H.R. 3014, the legislative appropriations bill, today at the conclusion of morning business. I further ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess today from 1 p.m. until 2:15 p.m.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that will be the order of the Senate.

SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, today following the time reserved for the two leaders, there will be a period for morning business until 1 p.m. with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each. At 1 p.m. the Senate will stand in recess until 2:15 p.m. It is my intention to turn to the consideration of H.R. 3014, the legislative branch appropriations bill, once morning business is closed today.

For the information of Senators, rollcall votes on or in relation to the legislative branch appropriations bills are possible during today's session.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I have a lengthy statement to make on the status of nominations. I understand the distinguished Republican leader has another commitment.

Mr. President, to accommodate my friend and colleague, I reserve the remainder of my time for my statement and yield to the distinguished Republican leader.

RECOGNITION OF THE REPUBLICAN LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Republican leader is recognized.

NANCY KASSEBAUM RECOGNIZED AGAIN FOR EXCELLENCE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the people of Kansas know quality and class when they see it, so it is no surprise that they have sent NANCY KASSEBAUM to the Senate to represent them.

They elected her in 1978, reelected her in 1984, and will reelect her again come November 1990—and once again it will be by a landslide.

No doubt about it, she is a Kansas treasure.

Her talent has also been widely recognized beyond the borders of the Sunflower State. The latest honor comes from the Sara Lee Corp., which has chosen Senator KASSEBAUM as one of only four recipients of its prestigious "Frontrunner Award."

It is a national award that recognizes NANCY for her outstanding achievements in Government, and her longtime commitment to excellence.

Mr. President, I want to share with the Senate a fine magazine profile from the Sara Lee Corp. about my distinguished colleague from Kansas. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD at this point; and I recommend my fellow Senators take a look at it.

Members on both sides of the aisle agree: We are fortunate indeed to serve with this great Senator from Kansas.

There being no objection, the profile was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FROM KANSAS TO THE SENATE TO THE LAND

(By Maya Angelou)

"The Land. Someday one must go back to the Land. You understand what I mean, don't you?" Nancy Kassebaum is very direct and very clear. She does not try to disguise the poignancy of her statement nor does she try to modulate her broad mid-western accent. Yet, for all her openness, this woman is undoubtedly contradictory.

She is a Kansan, bred and born. A Kansan mother and a Kansan daughter, yet for ten years she has been in the United States Senate casting or withholding her vote with the undeniable intent of determining the course of this entire country.

She is slight of build and soft-spoken. She has said, "Someday I'm going to hit someone over the head for calling me diminutive and soft-spoken." Then she added, "But then, I am."

On the occasions when she thought the action merited it, she has lifted that soft voice and held it high. In some cases her arguments have been in direct opposition to the stances of her own party members and colleagues. When asked to explain why she has taken an opposing position to the party line, she replied, "I feel better, if I just try to be true to myself." The re-phrasing of Polonius' 16th century advice to his son sounds absolutely right coming from this 20th century senator. That is the same rationale she displays when taking any unpopular position.

Nancy Landon Kassebaum was a beribboned four-year-old in 1936 when her father, Alfred Landon, campaigned unsuccessfully for the presidency, running against the popular incumbent President Franklin Roosevelt. She was a political baby and has been a life-long Republican.

Since Nancy Kassebaum wanted to be a Foreign Service officer while in college, taking a master's degree in diplomatic history, it is poetic justice that she is a major presence on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

She has shown an equilibrium usually found only in old philosophers. This equanimity must be in part inherited and in part learned, for she has shown this quality despite political qualifications. She has served on the school board of her town and had worked for less than a year as legislative aide to Senator James Pearson (Republican, Kansas). When Senator Pearson retired, she set out to win his seat. And did. And went on to win a second term with a staggering 76% of the Kansas Senate election.

Kassebaum returns to Kansas every other week, and there are those who feel that she never really leaves Kansas. One friend who knows her well said, "If she had a chance to go to Rome, Paris, Bangkok, or Topeka, she would choose Topeka."

"The Land. You must go back to the Land."

We are fortunate that Senator Nancy Kassebaum says the Land, and she means Kansas. But she also means the whole United States and all its citizens. She is a courageous, soft-spoken American.

NATIONAL DRUG CONTROL STRATEGY

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, on October 22 of last year, the Senate gave final approval to the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988. That bill, for the first time, called on the President of the United States to submit a national drug control strategy to the Congress within 180 days of the confirmation of the newly created Director of National Drug Control Policy.

Last night, the President unveiled for the American people this Nation's new comprehensive attack on illicit drugs. The strategy is on time and it is on target.

Let me caution my colleagues from the outset—this is not a fight that will be won overnight, will not be won by mere dollars, and will not be won through partisan politics.

This fight is about commitment, about the freedom of our citizens and the citizens of other democracies who are being held hostage by drug producers, smugglers, dealers, and especially drug users.

The American people are fed-up, frightened, and ready to fight. But, they need our help.

RESOURCES

Mr. President, the fight is not about resources either. The Federal Government has increased spending to combat drug use from $1.1 billion in 1981 to a proposed nearly $8 billion for 1990.

The new strategy calls for an increase of $2.2 billion from this year's level. That is more than the $1.7 billion that the Senate has discussed earlier this year as the amount necessary to accomplish what some call fully funding the war on drugs. So there should not be any disagreement on the amount of resources.

REVENUE

The Administration has also sent the Congress a detailed description of how to pay for the increased resources for drugs. I have heard some of my colleagues already call for tax increases to pay for the war on drugs. The Government now spends about $1 trillion each year, so I believe we can find enough money without raising taxes. If we look around the Congress, we can probably find plenty of fat to cut to help fight drugs. So, let me say loud and clear: This is a war on drugs, not a war on the American taxpayer.

THE STRATEGY

The 1988 drug bill listed four points to be covered by the National Drug Control Strategy: First, long range goals; second, short term goals; third, a description of the balance of resources between supply and demand; and fourth, State and local efforts to ensure cooperation at all levels of government.

The strategy does give us the goals by which we will be able to measure our successes and our failures in the newly coordinated battle. Generally, it calls for reducing illicit drug usage by 10 percent during the next 2 years, and by 50 percent during the next 10 years. That is a big challenge but, if we are united, we can achieve these new goals.

It is important to note that the second strategy is due in just 6 months, so changes will be made as we get a chance to review what is working. In the mean time, the strategy calls for spending about 70 percent of the total funds on supply and 30 percent on demand. We simply need to get control of our neighborhoods and our borders at the outset. As successes mount, more can and should be moved to the demand side.

Finally, the strategy asks States to change their laws to reflect changes Congress made to Federal laws in 1986 and 1988, in the antidrug bills passed in those years—I might say by a large bipartisan majority.

With an increase of police activities involving personnel from Federal, State and local agencies, a uniformity in the drug strategy and laws is essential. To go along with these changes, the strategy proposes to increase grants to State and local governments by 133 percent.

LEGISLATION

Mr. President, the Congress should also congratulate itself. The strategy points out the fact that nearly all of the necessary legal authority for the Government to strike against drugs under the new strategy already exists.

It exists because of the 1986 act—I can recall working with the Presiding Officer on the leadership bill at that time—and because of the 1988 act, when I worked with the distinguished Presiding Officer in the Byrd-Dole drug effort, again supported by Members on both sides of the aisle.

So, we will need to rearrange budget priorities to provide the new funds and make some technical changes to the law. But I guess we can say for the most part, nearly all the law we need is already in place.

However, we can, and must, move on two other fronts. First, in June, the President sent Congress a comprehensive crime bill. Make no mistake about it, the war on drugs is also a war on crime. Two provisions contained in that proposal would give our police and courts new and essential abilities to help in the drug fight—reform of habeas corpus and providing a good faith exemption in the exclusionary rule. The first would help unclog courts which are being swamped by a seemingly unending series of appeals by convicted felons, and the second would keep otherwise guilty criminals from being let free due to technicalities.

Finally, the Congress should follow its own lead by creating one central, high level drug committee. We created a single Federal drug czar to coordinate the activities of the executive branch. We should now show our resolve by ending the turf battles in Congress by agreeing to form either a joint committee on drugs, or at least one in each the Senate and House, one super committee, and I propose the committee be chaired by the majority leader. Make it a leadership committee. Because if this is the No. 1 priority, it deserves the attention as the No. 1 priority from those in leadership positions. Of course, it would include other Members in key committees, whether they be appropriations, judiciary or whatever.

There are currently 54 House committees and subcommittees and 21 Senate committees and subcommittees with jurisdiction over some facet of the drug war, and that does not include appropriations or strictly oversight committees like the House Narcotics Committee. That is 75 committees and subcommittees in the House and Senate that have a little piece of the drug war. That does not count the Appropriations Committee or strictly oversight committees, like the House Narcotics Committee.

I am advised by the drug czar, William Bennett, he is going to be spending about 12 straight days testifying before one committee or another in the next couple of weeks or 3 weeks. I think he is doing an outstanding job. He has a big job ahead of him and we ought to try to cooperate wherever we can in making certain we can streamline the Congress to meet the demands of the drug war.

Surely we want the drug czar, Bill Bennett, to fight drugs rather than spending all his time before congressional committees, so we should take this opportunity to follow our own lead and establish these committees without delay.

SUMMARY

So, we need a coordinated effort. The President mentioned this yesterday in the leadership meeting, if we are to have any success against drugs. And we now have one. We also need to be united. So I urge my colleagues to take a good look at what the President and Bill Bennett are proposing. It is good, tough medicine. It is worthy of bipartisan support. And it seems to me everything is in place, everyone is going in the same direction.

We may have arguments about how far or whether we should go more on the demand side and less on supply, more on supply, less on demand. But there is no doubt in my mind that everyone in this body is committed to end the scourge of drugs. There is no doubt in my mind that everybody is committed to tough penalties on so-called casual users, those who might use drugs once a month. There is no doubt in my mind that everyone in this body is committed to education, enforcement, treatment. But in all these cases we need accountability because there is a limit on resources.

We have to make certain that drug treatment programs are working, not just that we are appropriating a lot of money and hope they are working. There has to be some accountability. Whether it is enforcement, whether it is education, whether it is treatment, whether it is interdiction, the American taxpayer will demand we make certain we spend the money as wisely as we can, knowing in any event there is also some that slips by the wayside.

So, I congratulate the President. I think, as the majority leader stated yesterday, the President chose in his first televised address to the American people to talk about drugs, and about how we can work together to end this tragic chapter in our history.

So, I pledge my support to the President. I am certain everyone else pledges their support to the President.

As I said, we may have some differences but we are all agreed on one thing, and that is the commitment to end this plague upon our land. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the President's national drug policy address be printed in the RECORD. I thank the majority leader for letting me proceed.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRESIDENT'S NATIONAL DRUG POLICY ADDRESS, SEPTEMBER 5, 1989

This is the first time since taking the oath of office that I felt an issue was so important, so threatening, that it warranted talking directly with you, the American people. All of us agree that the gravest domestic threat facing our Nation today is drugs.

Drugs have strained our faith in our system of justice. Our courts, our prisons, our legal system are stretched to the breaking point. The social costs of drugs are mounting. In short, drugs are sapping our strength as a Nation.

Turn on the evening news, or pick up the morning paper and you'll see what some Americans know just by stepping out their front door: Our most serious problem today is cocaine, and in particular, crack.

Who's responsible? Let me tell you straight out.

Everyone who uses drugs.

Everyone who sells drugs.

And everyone who looks the other way.

Tonight, I will tell you how many Americans are using illegal drugs. I will present to you our national strategy to deal with every aspect of this threat. And I will ask you to get involved in what promises to be a very difficult fight.

This is crack cocaine seized a few days ago by Drug Enforcement Administration agents in a park just acrosss the street from the White House. It could easily have been heroin or PCP. It's as innocent looking as candy, but it is turning our cities into battle zones, and it is murdering our children. Let there be no mistake, this stuff is poison. Some used to call drugs harmless recreation. They're not. Drugs are a real and terribly dangerous threat to our neighborhoods, our friends and our families.

No one among us is out of harm's way. When four-year-olds play in playgrounds strewn with discarded hypodermic needles and crack vials—it breaks my heart. When cocaine—one of the most deadly and addictive illegal drugs—is available to school kids—school kids—it's an outrage. And when hundreds of thousands of babies are born each year to mothers who use drugs—premature babies born desperately sick—then even the most defenseless among us are at risk.

These are the tragedies behind the statistics. But the numbers also have quite a story to tell. Let me share with you the results of the recently completed Household Survey of the National Institute on Drug Abuse. It compares recent drug use to three years ago. It tells us some good news and, some very bad news. First, the good.

As you can see in the chart, in 1985, the government estimated that 23 million Americans were using drugs on a "current" basis—that is, at least once in the preceding month. Last year, that number fell by more than a third. That means almost nine million fewer Americans are casual drug users. Good news.

Because we changed our national attitude toward drugs, casual drug use has declined. We have many to thank: Our brave law-enforcement officers, religious leaders, teachers, community activists, and leaders of business and labor. We should also thank the media for their exhaustive news and editorial coverage and, for their air time and space for anti-drug messages. Finally, I want to thank President and Mrs. Reagan for their leadership. All of these good people told the truth—that drug use is wrong and dangerous.

But, as much comfort as we can draw from these dramatic reductions, there is also bad news—very bad news. Roughly eight million people have used cocaine in the past year, almost one million of them used it frequently once a week or more.

What this means is that, in spite of the fact that overall cocaine use is down, frequent use has almost doubled in the last few years. And that's why habitual cocaine users—especially crack users—are the most pressing, immediate drug problem.

What, then, is our plan? To begin with, I trust the lesson of experience: No single policy will cut it, no matter how glamorous or magical it may sound. To win the war against addictive drugs like crack will take more than just a Federal strategy. It will take a national strategy, one that reaches into every school, every workplace, involving every family.

Earlier today, I sent this document, our first such National Strategy to the Congress. It was developed with the hard work of our Nation's first drug policy director, Bill Bennett. In preparing this plan, we talked with state, local and community leaders, law enforcement officials and experts in education, drug prevention, and rehabilitation. We talked with parents and kids. We took a long hard look at all that the Federal Government has done about drugs in the past: What's worked, and—let's be honest—what hasn't. Too often, people in government acted as if their part of the problem—whether fighting drug production, or drug smuggling, or drug demand—was the only problem. But turf battles won't win this war. Teamwork will.

Tonight, I'm announcing a strategy that reflects the coordinated, cooperative commitment of all Federal agencies. In short, this plan is as comprehensive as the problem. With this strategy, we now finally have a plan that coordinates our resources, our programs and the people who run them.

Our weapons in this strategy are: The law and criminal justice system; our foreign policy; our treatment systems, and our schools and drug prevention programs. So the basic weapons we need are the ones we already have. What has been lacking is a strategy to effectively use them.

Let me address four of the major elements of our strategy.

First, we are determined to enforce the law, to make our streets and neighborhoods safe. So to start, I'm proposing that we more than double Federal assistance to State and local law enforcement. Americans have a right to safety in and around their homes.

And we won't have safe neighborhoods unless we are tough on drug criminals—much tougher than we are now. Sometimes that means tougher penalties. But more often it just means punishment that is swift and certain. We've all heard stories about drug dealers who are caught and arrested—again and again—but never punished. Well, here the rules have changed: If you sell drugs, you will be caught. And when you're caught, you will be prosecuted. And once you're convicted, you will do time. Caught. Prosecuted. Punished.

I am also proposing that we enlarge our criminal justice system across the board—at the local, state and federal levels alike. We need more prisons, more jails, more courts, more prosecutors. So tonight, I'm requesting—altogether—an almost billion-and-a-half dollar increase in drug-related Federal spending on law enforcement.

And while illegal drug use is found in every community, nowhere is it worse than in our public housing projects. You know, the poor have never had it easy in this world. But in the past, they weren't mugged on the way home from work by crack gangs. And their children didn't have to dodge bullets on the way to school. That is why I'm targeting $50 million to fight crime in public housing projects—to help restore order, and to kick out the dealers for good.

The second element of our strategy looks beyond our borders, where the cocaine and crack bought on America's streets, is grown and processed. In Colombia alone, cocaine killers have gunned down a leading statesman, murdered almost two hundred judges and seven members of their supreme court. The besieged governments of the drug-producing countries are fighting back, fighting to break the international drug rings. But you and I agree with the courageous President of Colombia, Virgilio Barco, who said that if Americans use cocaine, then Americans are paying for murder. American cocaine users need to understand that our Nation has zero tolerance for casual drug use. We have a responsibility not to leave our brave friends in Colombia to fight alone.

The $65 million emergency assistance announced two weeks ago was just our first step in assisting the Andean Nations in their fight against the cocaine cartels. Colombia has already arrested suppliers, seized tons of cocaine and confiscated palatial homes of drug lords. But Colombia faces a long, uphill battle, so we must be ready to do more.

Our strategy allocates more than a quarter of a billion dollars for next year in military and law enforcement assistance for the three Andean Nations of Colombia, Bolivia and Peru. This will be the first part of a five-year, $2 billion program to counter the producers, the traffickers and the smugglers.

I spoke with President Barco last week, and we hope to meet with the leaders of affected countries in an unprecedented drug summit, all to coordinate an Inter-American stragtegy against the cartels. We will work with our allies and friends—especially our Economic Summit partners—to do more in the fight against drugs. I'm also asking the Senate to ratify the U.N. Anti-Drug Convention concluded last December.

To stop those drugs on the way to America, I propose that we spend more than a billion-and-a-half dollars on interdiction. Greater interagency cooperation, combined with sophisticated intelligence-gathering, and defense department technology, can help stop drugs at our borders.

Our message to the drug cartels is this: The rules have changed. We will help any government that wants our help. When requested, we will for the first time make available the appropriate resources, of America's armed forces. We will intensify our efforts against drug smugglers on the high seas, in international airspace and at our borders. We will stop the flow of chemicals from the United States used to process drugs. We will pursue and enforce international agreements to track drug money to the front men and financiers. And then we will handcuff these money launderers, and jail them—just like any street dealer. And for drug kingpins, the death penalty.

The third part of our strategy concerns drug treatment. Experts believe that there are two million American drug users who may be able to get off drugs with proper treatment. But right now, only 40 percent of them are actually getting help. This is simply not good enough.

Many people who need treatment won't seek it on their own. And some who do seek it are put on a waiting list. Most programs were set up to deal with heroin addicts, but today, the major problem is cocaine users. It's time we expand our treatment systems and do a better job of providing services to those who need them.

So tonight, I'm proposing an increase of $321 million in Federal spending on drug treatment.

With this strategy, we will do more. We will work with the states. We will encourage employers to establish Employee Assistance Programs to cope with drug use. And, because addiction is such a cruel inheritance, we will intensify our search for ways to help expectant mothers who use drugs.

Fourth, we must stop illegal drug use before it starts. Unfortunately, it begins early—for many kids, before their teens. But it doesn't start the way you might think, from a dealer or an addict hanging around a school playground. More often, our kids first get their drugs free, from friends, or even from older brothers and sisters. Peer pressure spreads drug use. Peer pressure can help stop it.

I am proposing a quarter-of-a-billion-dollar increase in Federal funds for school and community prevention programs that help young people and adults reject enticements to try drugs. And I'm proposing something else. Every school, college and university—and every workplace—must adopt tough but fair policies about drug use by students and employees. Those that will not accept such policies will not get Federal funds. Period.

The private sector also has a role to play. I spoke with a businessman named Jim Burke who said he was haunted by the thought—a nightmare really—that somewhere in America, at any given moment, there is a teenage girl who should be in school, instead of giving birth to a child addicted to cocaine. So Jim did something. He led an anti-drug partnership, financed by private funds, to work with advertisers and media firms. Their partnership is now determined to work with our strategy by generating educational messages worth a million dollars a day—every day for the next three years—a billion dollars worth of advertising, all to promote the anti-drug message.

As President, one of my first missions is to keep the national focus on our offensive against drugs. So next week I will take the anti-drug message to the classrooms of America in a special television address, one that I hope will reach every school, every young American. But drug education doesn't begin in class or on T.V. It must begin at home and in the neighborhood. Parents and families must set the first example of a drug-free life. And when families are broken, caring friends and neighbors must step in.

These are the most important elements in our strategy to fight drugs. They are all designed to reinforce one another, to mesh into a powerful whole. To mount an aggressive attack on the problem from every angle. This is the first time in the history of our country, that we truly have a comprehensive strategy.

As you can tell, such an approach will not come cheaply. Last February, I asked for a $700 million increase in the drug budget for the coming year. Over the past six months of careful study, we have found an immediate need for another billion-and-a-half dollars. With this added 2.2 billion, our 1990 drug budget totals almost eight billion dollars—the largest increase in history.

We need this program fully implemented—right away. The next fiscal year begins just 26 days from now. So tonight, I'm asking the Congress—which has helped us formulate this strategy—to help us move it forward immediately.

We can pay for this fight against drugs without raising taxes or adding to the budget deficit. We have submitted our plan to Congress that shows just how to fund it within the limits of our bipartisan budget agreement.

I know some will still say that we are not spending enough money. But those who judge our strategy only by its price tag, simply don't understand the problem. Let's face it, we've all seen in the past that money alone won't solve our toughest problems.

To be strong and efficient, our strategy needs these funds. But there is no match for a united America, a determined America, an angry America. Our outrage against drugs unites us, brings us together behind this one plan of action, an assault on every front.

This is the toughest domestic challenge we've faced in decades. And it is a challenge we must face—not as Democrats or Republicans, liberals or conservatives—but as Americans. The key is a coordinated, united effort. We have responded faithfully to the request of the Congress to produce our Nation's first national drug strategy. I'll be looking to the Democratic Majority and our Republicans in Congress for leadership and bipartisan support. And our citizens deserve cooperation, not competition; a national effort, not a partisan bidding war.

To start, Congress needs not only to act on this national drug strategy, but also to act on our crime package announced last May; a package to toughen sentences, to beef up law enforcement and build new prison space for 24,000 inmates.

You and I both know the Federal Government can't do it alone. The States need to match tougher Federal laws with tougher laws of their own—stiffer bail, probation, parole and sentencing.

And we need your help. If people you know are users, help them get off drugs. If you are a parent, talk to your children about drugs—tonight.

Call your local drug prevention program. Be a Big Brother or Sister to a child in need. Pitch in with your local Neighborhood Watch program. Whether you give your time or talent, everyone counts.

Every employer who bans drugs from the workplace.

Every school that's tough on drug use.

Every neighborhood in which drugs are not welcome.

And most important, every one of you who refuses to look the other way. Every one of you counts.

Of course, victory will take hard work and time. But together we will win—too many young lives are at stake.

Not long ago, I read a newspaper story about a little boy named Dooney, who, until recently, lived in a crack house in a suburb of Washington, D.C. In Dooney's neighborhood, children don't flinch at the sound of gunfire. And when they play, they pretend to sell to each other small white rocks they call crack.

Life at home was so cruel that Dooney begged his teachers to let him sleep on the floor at school. And, when asked about his future, 6-year-old Dooney answers: "I don't want to sell drugs, but I will probably have to."

Well, Dooney does not have to sell drugs. No child in America should have to live like this. Together, as a people, we can save these kids. We have already transformed a national attitude of tolerance into one of condemnation. But the war on drugs will be hard-won, neighborhood by neighborhood, block by block, child by child.

If we fight this war as a divided nation, then the war is lost. But if we face this evil as a nation united, this will be nothing but a handful of useless chemicals.

Victory. Victory over drugs is our cause, a just cause, and with your help, we are going to win.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader.

STATUS OF NOMINATIONS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on August 4, I met with President Bush, at my request, to discuss nominations and recess appointments. His press secretary, Marlin Fitzwater, commented on that meeting, as reported in the New York Times on August 28, by stating that "The President wanted to register his deep concern that these—nominations—were being held up for artificial reasons not related to the candidates themselves." On other occasions over the past few weeks, the President and his press secretary have criticized the Senate for delay in the consideration of the President's nominees.

I have carefully reviewed the record on nominations—both as to vacancies and Senate action on nominations which have been submitted and I now will respond to the President's criticism.

I begin by urging that the President discontinue such criticism. It is unfounded and unfair. Indeed, my review makes it clear that the principal cause of delay is the administration itself. The principal problem is in the slow pace at which nominations are being made, not in the pace at which nominations, once made, are being processed.

According to the Congressional Research Service, there are 432 full-time positions in executive departments and independent agencies which require Senate confirmation, not counting ambassadors, U.S. marshals or U.S. attorneys. At this time, there are 200 positions for which there has been no nomination or no announcement that the incumbent will be retained by the administration.

Thus, nearly 8 months after he took office, the President has failed to make nominations for nearly half of the full-time positions in executive departments and independent agencies which require Senate confirmation. Whose responsibility is that? It is certainly not the Senate's. The Senate cannot act on a nomination until the President makes the nomination and it is received by the Senate.

A study released by the Democratic Study Group in the House lists 48 totally vacant positions in Cabinet departments—no nominations and no holdovers from the previous administration. Out of 14 Cabinet departments only the Department of Transportation has no totally vacant positions. There are five totally vacant positions in the Executive Office of the President and another 20 in major independent agencies.

The Federal civil service has talented professionals in every area of Government service. However, these individuals do not set policy for an administration. When there are no people at the top, the professional civil servant does the best he or she can but policy initiatives await the arrival of Presidentially nominated personnel.

Eight months into this administration, a large number of high-level and vital policy positions remain without any nominations—and thus a lack of policy direction.

For example, education is a stated priority of the administration. yet at the Department of Education, there is no nominee for Assistant Secretary for Elementary and Secondary Education; there is no nominee for Assistant Secretary for Vocational and Adult Education; there is no nominee for Assistance Secretary for Civil Rights. Whose responsibility is that? It is certainly not the Senate's. The Senate cannot act on these nominations until the President makes them and they are received by the Senate.

A number of important policy positions in the health area also remain unfilled. There is no nominee for Surgeon General. There is no nominee for Administrator of the Health Care Finance Administration. There is no nominee to be Commissioner of Aging. Whose responsibility is that? It is certainly not the Senate's. The Senate cannot act on these nominations until the President makes them and they are received by the Senate.

The vital 1990 census is rapidly approaching. There is no nominee to be Director of the Census Bureau. Whose responsibility is that?

The importance of the role of the Inspectors General has been demonstrated in the past years and months. At this time there is no nominee for Inspector General at the Department of Justice, the Department of Treasury or the Department of Veterans Affairs. Deputy Inspector General positions are vacant at the Department of Health and Human Services and the Department of Energy. Whose responsibility is that?

The President must send a formal notice to Congress indicating his intention to replace existing Inspectors General. No such notice has been given for those now serving as Inspectors General, and, according to the Congressional Research Service, none of the existing Inspectors General have been asked to remain. These are important positions. The Inspectors General exist to reduce waste and eliminate fraud. The President should make up his mind, one way or the other: Either reappoint them or replace them. Their current limbo serves no one's interest

A fully staffed judiciary is essential to the operation of our system of Government. There are 46 vacancies on the Federal bench. One judicial nomination is pending and that nomination was submitted on August 4, the very last day in which the Senate was in session. Whose responsibility is that?

Protection of the environment is a bipartisan concern. At this time, at the Environmental Protection Agency, there is no nominee for Assistant Administrator for Research and Development; there is no nominee for Assistant Adminstrator for Solid Waste; there is no nominee for Assistant Administrator for Water; there is no nominee for Assistant Administrator for External Affairs. Whose responsibility is that? It is certainly not the Senate's. The Senate cannot act on these nominations until the President makes them and they are received by the Senate.

Obviously, the administration believes that the Senate should confirm every nominee. A tension is built into the constitutional process which gives the President the power to nominate and the Senate the power of confirmation.

I believe that the Senate's record on nominations submitted by the President is a good and responsible one.

So far during this session, the Senate has confirmed 212 of the President's nominees. Ninety percent were confirmed within 2 months of the date on which they were submitted. All but one of the Cabinet Secretaries were confirmed by March 1.

A total of 107 nominations remain pending. However, of these pending nominations, 33 were received by the Senate between August 1 and August 4—too late for Senate committees to take any action before the August recess.

Of the 74 nominations which were received prior to August 1, 10 nominations have been reported by Senate committees and are pending on the Executive Calendar. Of the remaining 64 nominations, only 8 had been pending longer than 2 months when the Senate recessed in August. One nomination was defeated in committee.

Taking less than 2 months to confirm a Presidential nomination demonstrates the Senate's willingness to act as promptly as possible in confirming those nominees.

It is important to recognize that once the President makes a nomination, each Senate committee, and if the nomination is reported, the Senate itself, must responsibly fulfill its constitutional responsibility to advise and consent on nominations.

Most committees require nominees to submit background material in addition to the information compiled by the administration.

This is a necessary part of the Senate's role in the confirmation process. Each Senate committee is responsible for making its own determination on whether a nominee is sufficiently qualified for the position for which he or she has been nominated.

The recent procurement scandals in the Department of Defense and the ongoing investigation into activities at the Department of Housing and Urban Development have served to reemphasize the importance of the confirmation process to most Senators.

Careful review of nominations is not simply the product of a Democratic Senate and a Republican President. In 1977, President Carter's nomination of Bert Lance was confirmed by the Senate. Subsequently, Mr. Lance resigned over questions regarding his financial affairs. The Governmental Affairs Committee, which held the hearings on that nomination, subsequently tightened its requirements for nominations. The committee today has a detailed procedure which involves checking tax returns, review of the FBI report by the chairman and ranking member, interviews with the staff and prehearing questions. Other committees have similar procedures.

The administration itself has, in some cases, contributed to the impression that the Senate is taking longer than necessary to consider nominations. The White House announces the President's intention to nominate an individual but the actual submission of the nomination to the Senate can be delayed for several weeks, sometimes months.

One example of this was the nomination of Constance Newman to be Director of the Office of Personnel Management. The intention to nominate was made public on January 18. But the nomination was not actually submitted until April 4. The necessary paperwork was not completed until just prior to June 6, at which time the hearing was held. The nominee was confirmed by the Senate on June 7. The impression might be created that the nomination took 6 months to confirm when, in fact, the Committee on Governmental Affairs and the Senate acted on this nomination within days of the completion of the necessary paperwork.

The confirmation process involves study and decision by the President prior to nominating individuals for important government positions. It involves study and decision by the Senate after the President has submitted nominations. At each stage, careful consideration and deliberation must take place. Presidents do not always submit nominations as rapidly as the Senate would like and the Senate does not always act as favorably or as quickly as the President would like.

These tensions have been in existence for the 200 years that Presidents have submitted nominations to the Senate. The process by which our Government works is one of respect by each of the branches of Government for the powers of the other branches. This can be a cumbersome and contentious process, but it need not be. On balance, it has served our country well.

Shortly after my election as majority leader last November, the then President-elect asked for my cooperation in expediting consideration of his Cabinet nominations. I asked all committee chairmen to move as rapidly as possible. Some committees even held hearings on his nominees prior to receipt of the actual nominations.

I believe the record shows that the Senate has continued to act in a cooperative manner on the President's nominations. The President will be submitting many more nominations this fall and I intend that the Senate continue to move as expeditiously and cooperatively as possible on these nominations, consistent with our responsibilities under the Constitution.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following documents be printed in the RECORD at this point:

First, a document prepared by the Congressional Research Service which includes a list of full-time positions requiring Senate confirmation in executive departments and independent agencies for which President Bush has neither made a nomination nor announced retention of an incumbent from previous administration, as of August 10, 1989; and Second, a list of nominations pending in Senate committees and on the Executive calendar, as of the close of business on August 4, 1989.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business not to extend beyond 1 p.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for not to exceed 5 minutes each.

The Senator from California [Mr. WILSON] is recognized.

Mr. WILSON. I thank the Chair.

THE WAR ON DRUGS

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, last night the President of the United States made an extraordinary speech. He exhibited great leadership. I think that we took a giant step. It was not, as my friend, the distinguished Republican leader, has observed, perhaps everything for which every Member of Congress would ask. I personally think a plan that has not specifically targeted a high-intensive area such as Los Angeles, which is used by drug producers in Colombia and elsewhere as a distribution center for 50 other cities in the country, is a plan that has a defect.

But over all it is a good plan. It is a sound strategy. And yet there has been criticism from many of us in this Congress that we are not spending enough.

Mr. President, that has a distinctly hollow ring from a Congress which itself has failed to make good on the commitment to honor the obligations we set for ourselves in the 1988 Omnibus Drug Act, a very valuable piece of legislation were it adequately funded. But with repeated opportunities to do so, Congress has failed, finding it impossible, just too painful to cut spending for other matters in order to reallocate the necessary resources to not just talk about but to fight and win a war on drugs.

So the President is right when he says that a $2.2 billion increase is the largest in our history. It is. I would have to say I think that more may be necessary. And if it is necessary, Mr. President, I hope that administration and the Congress will very earnestly consider an opportunity which I think is available to us through the device of issuance of drug war bonds in much the same fashion that in World War II America financed its war effort by liberty bonds and in so doing afforded ordinary citizens the opportunity for individual involvement, for personal participation of a kind that many Americans hunger, in order to enlist in this war on drugs. The President made the appeal last night for all of us as citizens to do so. He is right to do so. It is essential for us to do that if we are to win this war.

Another way that we can fund at least a small portion, Mr. President, is by an amendment that I intend to offer this afternoon to the legislative appropriations bill which will strike the amount that remains for us to spend on congressional newsletters, which our constituents do not ask us to send them, do not want, and I suspect do not read. But whatever their response, I think they would agree it is infinitely more important that we spend the money on what represents the most urgent threat to our national security of anything imaginable.

In one particular, Mr. President, we have definitely not adequately funded a critical need of the war on drugs. In the 1988 bill, we authorized a demonstration program to be administered by the Office of Substance Abuse Prevention within the Department of Health and Human Services. It was aimed at preventing drug abuse by pregnant women.

Mr. President, we have failed in that because today 400,000-plus children are born annually in this Nation addicted, the victims of child abuse through the umbilical cord, because their pregnant mothers have abused a substance, either alcohol or drugs, during their pregnancy, producing an incredible situation where these innocent victims suffer low birth weight, premature birth, the likelihood of stroke, the probability of physical deformity, mental retardation, and other physical development disabilities.

Mr. President, this cannot continue. We have to subject those women to mandatory rehabilitation, not as a penal exercise but as a preventative for the recurrence of this tragedy.

Mr. President, the amount of money that we authorized in 1988, was $10 million. Let me tell you what that has meant. It has meant that we had 130 applications, half of which were deemed worthy. Of that number, only 15 have actually received funding.

Mr. President, the money that we spend on congressional newsletters is misspent. If we instead apply it to expand this program, we offer the States an opportunity to salvage women and their children and to prevent literally a lost generation.

Mr. President, we cannot fail to take the steps necessary because this tragedy, while enormous, is avoidable. It is preventable. But we have not taken the necessary action to prevent it. Throughout the week I will make other statements enlarging upon the necessity for this kind of mandatory rehabilitation.

I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The senior Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. COCHRAN], is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

LARKIN SMITH

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, my State suffered a great loss during the August recess when LARKIN SMITH, who represented the Fifth District of Mississippi in the House of Representatives, was killed in a plane crash. He had been elected last November and he was already making a very fine impression on everyone who observed him at work in the other body. His background and experience in law enforcement gave him unusual insight into many of the issues that came before the House Judiciary Committee, on which he served. It is really unusual for a Member of Congress to establish himself as an influential legislator in his first term; the seniority system can operate against you if you try to do too much too soon. But LARKIN SMITH was an exception to this rule. He spoke out when he felt there were better ways of dealing with criminals such as drug dealers and drug smugglers. He had good ideas. The Nation will miss having the benefit of his experience and judgment on these important matters of concern.

LARKIN SMITH was also a very fine human being. He was a pleasure to be with and to work with in solving problems that faced our State. I do not know of anyone who could have worked harder and more effectively. He gave the job of U.S. Congressman everything he had. As a matter of fact, he gave his life. We miss him very much and our sympathies are extended to his wife Sheila and all his family during this very difficult time in their lives.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi suggests the absence of a quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CHARLES "BILL" SNEDDEN

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, Alaska lost one of our great contemporary heroes when Charles Willis "Bill" Snedden died in Fairbanks on August 6.

A leader in Alaska's struggle for statehood, publisher of the Fairbanks Daily News-Miner for almost four decades, Bill Snedden was most of all a man of courage who met countless challenges throughout his 76 years.

His contributions to the State of Alaska are documented in our history books and in the libraries of our newspapers.

The articles and editorials from around the State, which I will ask to be included in this tribute, describe how well Bill Snedden's commitment to the 49th State and to his community of Fairbanks.

Bill Snedden was not certain that statehood would be best for Alaska when he first traveled north in the late 1940's. Typically, he decided to research the pros and cons for statehood. He spent many months meeting with Alaskans from all walks of life and with key leaders in the Pacific Northwest. The more he dug into the subject of statehood, the more it made sense to him that Alaska should become a State rather than remain a territory where Alaskans could not vote, and did not have the opportunity to chart their own destiny.

Convinced, then, that statehood was the answer, Bill Snedden announced his prostatehood stand in his newspaper and began a nationwide effort to gain support for the cause.

He conferred often with Bob Bartlett, then Alaska's delegate to Congress, and studied the previous bills that had been introduced for statehood. A nationwide educational effort to alert all U.S. citizens to the advantages of statehood for Alaska would be the most important factor in accomplishing his goal, Bill Snedden determined.

He had many contacts in the newspaper world, because he had been a newspaper consultant before becoming publisher of the News-Miner. In his own words, he "wandered around the United States asking advice from publishers and editors," on how to get the statehood story into the hinterlands and the big cities.

When he found almost all, from the Nation's largest newspapers to its smallest, receptive to the idea of statehood, he sent them Alaska factsheets and reprints of articles detailing the advantages of statehood.

A newspaper publisher friend suggested he send prostatehood editorials to news services that catered to small newspapers. Those news articles would provide an additional education on statehood to Americans in the Lower 48.

That same publisher was later appointed to fill a vacancy caused by a death in this body. The one speech that Senator gave on the floor of the Senate during his term urged statehood for Alaska. That Senator was Bill Snedden's good friend, and my good friend and former employer, Fred Seaton who became the Secretary of Interior during the final stages of the statehood struggle.

Once the nationwide support for statehood was apparent, and the legislation was once more before the Congress, Bill Snedden left his newspaper in capable hands and his comfortable home in Fairbanks and moved to a cramped hotel room in Washington, DC, to help complete the work for passage.

Through all the years, from the time I was a young U.S. attorney in Fairbanks and while I was Solicitor for the Department of the Interior, to my terms in our State legislature and my 21 years in this body, Bill Snedden has been my friend. He was always frank, always candid, and never self-seeking.

His efforts toward statehood are only one small part of the story of Bill Snedden. He was in the forefront in working toward changes in the mineral leasing laws that applied to the Territory of Alaska, paving the way for Alaska's great contribution toward supplying our Nation's energy.

In his home community of Fairbanks, he helped build the hospital, worked with the military to assure that the needs of the personnel on their nearby bases were being met, and supported the businesses and volunteer groups in a hundred different ways. But he preferred to play a behind-the-scenes role in these community endeavors, and give the credit to others.

In the past 8 years, though fighting a new battle—this time for his health—Bill Snedden has continued to work toward the betterment of our State and his fellow Alaskans. When he died on August 6, he left a special legacy: His example of commitment and caring and persistence, which could serve us all when we work toward any goal worth pursuing.

Mr. President, my personal loss is a great one, for Bill Snedden was my friend, and he was a godfather of all my children.

This tribute, however, is in the name of all Alaskans, who owe much to the quiet hard work that Bill Snedden accomplished on their behalf.

He will always be one of the great Alaskans. His efforts will provide inspiration for future generations. His accomplishments have provided a better life for those of us fortunate to have lived in his lifetime. He was, indeed, a man of courage and diversity, of warmth and enthusiasm, and of commitment and caring.

I asked unanimous consent that the following articles and editorials from the Fairbanks Daily News-Miner, the Anchorage Times, the Anchorage Daily News, and the Juneau Empire be printed in the RECORD in their entirety.

Thank you, Mr. President.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Fairbanks Daily News-Miner, Aug. 7, 1989]

NEWS-MINER PUBLISHER, STATEHOOD LEADER DIES

Charles Willis "Bill" Snedden, a key leader in the battle for Alaska Statehood in the 1950s and publisher of the Fairbanks Daily News-Miner for nearly four decades, died Sunday after a years-long battle against throat cancer. he was 76.

Mr. Snedden died at Fairbanks Memorial Hospital. He had been hospitalized earlier in the week. Funeral arrangements are pending but are expected to be private. The family suggests memorial contributions be made to the American Cancer Society, P.O. Box 992, Fairbanks, Alaska, 99707.

Publication of the newspaper will continue uninterrupted, according to President

Charles L. Gray. The newspaper is owned by the Fairbanks Daily News-Miner Inc. Ownership is being transferred to employees, under an Employee Stock Ownership Plan pioneered by Mr. Snedden in 1975.

Mr. Snedden, once a pipe smoker, had battled throat cancer for several years. His fight against the disease led him to institute a building-wide ban against smoking at the Daily News-Miner in 1988.

Mr. Snedden purchased the Daily News-Miner in 1950. In 1953, after conducting extensive research, Mr. Snedden reversed the previous publisher's long-term stand against Statehood for the Territory of Alaska.

He took on the battle on Statehood as a personal campaign, spending 2½ years lobbying in Washington, D.C., and meeting with publishers across the nation to enlist their aid. Today, his strong advocacy of statehood is considered to be a principal catalyst behind passage of the Alaska Statehood Act in 1958.

Mr. Snedden was born in Spokane, Wash., July 20, 1913. He attended Oregon State College, the University of Oregon and Washington State College from 1930 to 1933. In 1967, he was awarded an honorary doctor of law degree from the University of Alaska.

He was married to Helen Elizabeth McNeel on April 11, 1934. He and Helen had one son, Duane "Skip" Snedden, who is assistant publisher of the Daily News-Miner. He is also survived by daughter-in-law Carol Snedden, and four grandchildren, Chuck, Daniel, Lorraine and Lori.

Mr. Snedden started his newspaper career at the age of 13 as an apprentice printer on the Portland Telegram. By 1936 he had combined business with a primary occupation of reorganizing production departments at ailing newspapers. His system was to go to the troubled paper, straighten out the immediate problems and prepare an efficiency program. He applied this plan to projects in Oregon, Washington, California and Montana.

Snedden worked as a supervisor in the Henry Kaiser shipyards in Vancouver, Wash., during World War II from 1942-1944 and nearly lost his life in an accident there.

He described the incident to an interviewer: "The ship was about to go down the ways when we found a rough bearing in a main turbo-generator. I crawled inside the casing and asked the crew to slowly turn the armature by hand while I felt the bearing journal for rough spots. Then someone by mistake closed the main switch. As a result, I was in the hospital three weeks and was laid up for more than a year. I suffered permanent damage to my heart and for three or four years wasn't able to do much more than part-time work."

Mr. Snedden's interest in newspapers brought him to Alaska and the News-Miner.

Gray said Snedden arrived in Fairbanks in 1948 to advise theater owner Austin Lathrop about fixing his ailing Fairbanks newspaper.

"When (Snedden) told him what it would cost, Lathrop threw up his hands and said he'd sell it for that," Gray said.

Lathrop died in a mining accident two years later, and Snedden bought the newspaper. "He said he thought he'd keep it for a few years, then fell in love with Alaska," Gray said.

After his arrival in Alaska in 1950, Snedden became a vigorous advocate for the territory, and later the state. One of his first crusades was a successful effort to change the mineral leasing laws that applied to Alaska, including the North Slope, which became the site of America's richest oil field.

In 1968, Snedden co-chaired the original fund drive to build Fairbanks Memorial Hospital.

Though Snedden preferred to play a behind-the-scenes role, letting credit fall on others' shoulders, Alaskans have come to recognize his accomplishments.

In 1962, he received the Greater Fairbanks Chamber of Commerce's top award, the George Nehrbas Award, given from time to time to an individual making a significant contribution to the chamber.

In 1986, he was named Alaskan of the Year, an award that honors an individual Alaskan who has made outstanding contributions to Alaska life and has significantly affected the character and growth of the state.

In 1989, he was named to the Alaska Business Hall of Fame, a program sponsored by Junior Achievement of Alaska and Alaska Business Monthly Magazine.

U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens, who worked with Snedden as a young lawyer during the Statehood battle, told an interviewer last winter: "I never cease to marvel at his diversity and his strength. Give him a challenge and he'll meet it, from working toward statehood to conquering the high seas, and from selling hardware and Linotypes to publishing a fine newspaper. In my book he's tops as a friend and one of the great Alaskans."

"Bill Snedden did more for this community, for the Territory of Alaska, for Statehood, and for the state of Alaska, than most of the others did intentionally," said veteran Alaska journalist Kay Kennedy.

University of Alaska Fairbanks Professor of Journalism Emeritus Jimmy Bedford wrote in 1986 that "Bill Snedden has never stopped doing his good deed every day. Stories of his generosity are legion, but they are never publicized . . . You run into the stories quietly told in town about how he helped with this person's hospital expenses or that person's dental bills or a youngster's education.

"Bill Snedden is in a class by himself."

[From the Anchorage Times, Aug. 9, 1989]

A Man of Courage

The passing last Sunday of C.W. "Bill" Snedden, owner of the Fairbanks News-Miner, marks the loss of another of the founding fathers of modern Alaska. He was an integral part of the final push that made Alaska a state.

And he was much more than a supporter of statehood. He was among the handful of leaders who made Fairbanks the metropolis of the Interior and gateway to Alaska's vast arctic lands. In his role, he inspired social and civil programs that enhanced living conditions, attracted new residents and projects whose benefits accrued to the city.

Snedden died at the age of 76 after spending more than half of his life in Alaska.

Courage might well be the word that best describes his life and times. Snedden shaped up his philosophies, charted his course of action and proceeded with a courage and persistence that was admired by all who knew him.

One of the moments that tested his courage was when he switched and became an active promoter of statehood. This involved a 180-degree turnabout after his paper had opposed it for about a generation.

Snedden had the courage to face the jolt that he would give his readers. He faced the possibility of earning the disapproval of his advertisers. He offended many of his closest friends in Fairbanks. The city was one of Alaska's biggest centers of anti-statehood sentiment, much of it no doubt resulting from the many years of anti-sentiments expressed in the News-Miner.

When President Eisenhower was elected in 1953, he appointed Fred Seaton as secretary of the Interior. Seaton took an active interest in Alaska, visited the territory several times and made many friends. Snedden was one of his closest friends, and it is believed by Snedden's friends that it was Seaton who helped convert him to the idea of statehood.

When Bill Snedden believed in something, he worked for it hard and constantly. That trait made him an important leader in Fairbanks because he loved his community and worked for anything that would improve it.

When he undertook statehood as a project, he also undertook the task of explaining it to his anti-statehood community. He did it successfully, and by the time the crucial decisions were being made, the people of Fairbanks voted for it.

And Snedden gave liberally of his time and money to win statehood. At one time he rented an apartment and stayed in Washington two months trying to sell it to congressmen.

His community and the people of Alaska have recognized his great contributions and awarded him with top honors. One of the more recent honors was his designation as Alaskan of the Year in 1987.

The passing of Bill Snedden is a loss for the entire state, and especially for Fairbanks. We join other Alaskans everywhere in extending deepest sympathy to his widow and his son. He has left a permanent imprint and they can be proud.

Fairbanks Publisher Dies at 76

(By Larry Campbell)

One of the Alaska's news sourdoughs and an inside fighter for statehood. Fairbanks Daily News-Miner publisher C.W. "Bill" Snedden, died Sunday morning after an eight-year bout with cancer. He was 76.

Snedden was among a wave of pioneers who came to Alaska after World War II and increased commerce, industry and statehood.

Born and raised in Portland, Ore., Snedden worked shipyards there during World War II, but took up printing after being injured in a shipyard accident. He later worked for Scripps-Howard newspapers as a print operator and specialist in aiding financially troubled newspapers.

According to News-Miner president and general manager Charles Gray, Snedden came to Fairbanks in 1948 to advise theater owner Austin "Cap" Lathrop about fixing his ailing Fairbanks paper.

"When (Snedden) told him what it would cost, Lathrop threw up his hands and said he'd sell it for that," Gray said.

Lathrop died in a mining accident two years later, and Snedden bought the paper. Its circulation was about 4,000 then. Today, circulation is about 16,000, Gray said.

"He said he thought he'd keep it for a few years, then fell in love with Alaska," Gray said.

In the late 1950s, Snedden became known for his lobbying efforts for statehood. He lived in Washington, D.C., for almost two years to button-hole lawmakers.

In the early 1960s, Snedden co-chaired fund-raising organizations to benefit Fairbanks Memorial Hospital. He was also a member of numerous boards and commissions and was active in the state and local chambers of commerce.

In 1987, Snedden was honored as Alaskan of the Year by the State Chamber of Commerce.

Though Snedden's editorial views marked him a conservative, Gray said, "he was not ultra-conservative. Most of the liberals accused him of being conservative, and ultra-conservatives said he was too liberal."

Snedden is survived by his wife, Helen, and his son, Skip, both of Fairbanks. Arrangements are pending at Chapel of Chimes in Fairbanks.

C.W. SNEDDEN

The Alaska C.W. "Bill" Snedden came to in 1948 is a far cry from the state he left behind Sunday, when he died of cancer at age 75. He and a handful of his contemporaries made that difference.

As an individual and as publishers of the Fairbanks Daily News-Miner, Mr. Snedden gave voice to Alaska's many dreams during the last 41 years.

But he did more than speak of dreams. He worked to make them reality.

He took the News-Miner from theater tycoon Austin E. Lathrop in 1948 and built it into a prosperous newspaper that serves all of Interior Alaska. For years, it carried news from the Bush, tying Alaskans together before the days of satellite communications.

The effort Mr. Snedden is most prominently remembered for, however, is the drive for Alaska statehood.

From the time the first territorial legislature met in 1913, many leaders believed Alaska was confined to a roll of weak sister to the "lower" states. Alaska was governed by presidential appointees who were often caught between a rock and hard place—the territorial legislature on one side and the powers in Washington, D.C., on the other. While that system was satisfactory to many, it was not for most Alaskans, who believed statehood was the only way to gain a full partnership in the U.S. government.

When the statehood movement gained full steam in the 1950s, Mr. Snedden moved to the nation's capital for two years. There, he tirelessly lobbied Congress—and anyone else who would listen—on behalf of adding a 49th star to the flag.

That Alaska became a state on Jan. 4, 1959, was as much a result of the efforts of Mr. Snedden as any other single person.

Under his ownership, the News-Miner grew from a 4,000-circulation hometown paper to a 16,000-circulation paper that is arguably among the best of its size anywhere. Long a perennial national contest winner for its production work, the News-Miner still sets the standard for color photography in newspapers. In large part, that is because Mr. Snedden was a production man at heart. Though he believed in meat-and-potatoes news reporting, he believed a newspaper must be attractive, too.

Before cancer began taking its toll, Mr. Snedden—his employees called him "C.W."—often made a point to personally welcome new reporters to his staff. He also would talk to reporters about stories and offer suggestions and background on the issues they were writing about. On one occasion, in 1975, when a just-out-of-college reporter was struggling with a particularly difficult story, he sat him down, offered a reassuring word or two, and, noting a misspelled word in the copy, suggested that he buy a pocket dictionary.

"I always had a dictionary in my back pocket when I was in the backshop," he told the rookie. And the rookie took that advice. He is now the managing editor of the Empire.

It's difficult to pass judgment on the contributions a single individual has made to Alaska. But one thing is for sure: C.W. "Bill" Snedden is counted among a handful of giants who helped build the state we know today.

The many Alaskans who knew and respected him will miss him dearly.

FUNDING THE DRUG WAR

Mr. GRAMM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM] is recognized.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I want to talk this morning about our effort on drugs and to commend our President. Also I want to focus my brief remarks in the debate about funding. I am hopeful that after we each feel out the issue as it faces us legislatively in the Senate that we will see a strong united bipartisan base of support.

Mr. President, there has been much discussion about the funding issue. There are those who continually ask, "When is the President going to provide enough money to deal with the problem?" I thought it might be instructive to go back 2 years and simply look at what the Congress has done compared to what the President has requested for law enforcement as it relates to our drug problems.

In H.R. 4782, the State, Justice, Commerce Appropriations bill for fiscal year 1989—that appropriation will see us through September 30 of this year—the President asked for $6 billion in funding for the Justice Department. The Congress approved $5.4 billion. So compared to the President's request for this year, Congress cut funding for the entire Justice Department by about $600 million.

The President requested $1.5 billion for the FBI. The Congress provides $1.4 billion. So Congress gave the FBI $100 million less than the President requested. The President requested $538 million for the Drug Enforcement Agency. Congress provided $505 million, or a cut of $33 million for DEA below the level requested by the President.

The Federal prison system funding request submitted by the President was $1.5 billion. Congress provided $1.170 billion, or a $330 million cut of the President's request.

In the final version of H.R. 2763, the State, Justice, Commerce Appropriations bill for fiscal year 1988, Congress cut the President's proposed funding level for the Justice Department by $300 million, cut the FBI by $90 million compared to what the President asked for, cut the Drug Enforcement Agency by $28 million, and cut the Federal prison system by $51 million.

So, Mr. President, my point is that while anybody can question how much money is needed, and we can have a debate about what we ought to do and what it is going to take to do the job, the fact still remains that for the last 2 years, as public support for a strong effort to deal with the drug problem has grown, that Congress has reduced the level of funding for such key agencies as the FBI, DEA, and the Federal prison system substantially below the level requested by the President.

I think the President's approach is a good one. It is an approach that says let's get serious, let's get tough, and let's put up the money. But the facts are that while there is a legitimate debate about how much money it is going to take and where the money should come from, the Congress in the last 2 years has not provided the money that the President has requested. I think as we debate these issues it is important to remember that in the last 2 years the President has asked for more money than has actually been provided. We have an opportunity this year, by setting priorities, to provide at least the full level of funding recommended by the President. I hope we can do that.

As a final point, I think it is instructive to note that in the last 2 years $900 million requested by the President for the Department of Justice has not gone to law enforcement, and has not gone to our primary effort to grab drug thugs by the throat. In the last 2 years, funds that were requested by the President were not given back to the taxpayers. They were spent on other programs and other priorities. I do not believe there is any priority that is more important than dealing with this problem. I am hopeful that we can deal with it.

I think everybody is going to find, as we begin to put together our program, that this is clearly a bipartisan problem. I believe we are ultimately going to have a bipartisan solution. I think it is important that we debate how to do it, but I think it is of equal importance that we do it on a bipartisan basis.

I yield the floor.

THE WAR ON DRUGS

Mr. KERRY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] is recognized for not to exceed 2 minutes.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to speak for a period of 10 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator is recognized for not to exceed 10 minutes.

Mr. KERRY. I thank the distinguished President pro tempore.

Mr. President, as all of us here and as countless Americans around the country listened last night with anticipation, we waited for an important announcement of the newest declaration of war on drugs. We have listened to this declaration for a period of some 8 years now. And we have only in this past year really come to measure the full extent of what drugs are doing to our beloved country, and the full extent of the gap between the rhetoric and reality of the so-called war on drugs.

I would first of all like to congratulate the President for having, as President for the first time, placed this issue at a higher stake's level than it has been before. I think there were good things in what the President offered the Nation last night, particularly a drug summit, though one might ask why we are not engaged in it at this time or when it is going to occur, but it is at least on the table.

The emphasis was on money laundering, though there were no specifics about how we will proceed, but I think it is important that money laundering has been pointed out to be one of the Achilles' heels in the drug war efforts.

I am delighted that the President will be moving to take this message into the schools though I hope it will not just be by television means but rather by personal visits to schools on a weekly basis. I would have certainly enjoyed hearing that, too, last night. I am delighted that there will be additional money for HUD housing, and I am particularly pleased that the President is going to place a focus on the user. I think that has been long overdue. Last night the President painted an accurate picture of what illegal narcotics are doing to our Nation and our people, our children and to our streets.

He is right when he says that everyone who uses drugs, who sells drugs, and anyone who looks the other way is responsible. He is right when he says that the Federal Government has the responsibility to provide for the common security of all Americans by stopping this scourge. He is right when he said that we need a strategy covering the criminal justice system, the foreign policy, drug treatment, drug education, and prevention. Mr. President, I wish I could say that I agreed that the President has in fact really laid out that strategy.

This is not a partisan issue. It should not become a partisan issue, and I do not want it to be a partisan issue. I am not speaking partisanly, except to the degree that I am partisan for the need for this country to address this war with more than rhetoric.

The simple fact is, Mr. President, that the words that the President of the United States, when he said, "In short, this plan is as comprehensive as the problem." It is not. The problem is far more complex, and the problem is in fact far bigger than what the President has offered us last night.

Mr. President, we are still lacking an overall strategy to fight a war. I spent the last 5 days of this week, the last week, talking with almost every district attorney, every sheriff, many mayors, the attorney general of my State and of Rhode Island, the U.S. attorney, and many of the police chiefs and captains and narcotics officers in our State. We held five hearings of my committee, the Narcotics Terrorism Subcommittee, around the State.

To a person, Mr. President, they pleaded for resources. They talked about how their communities are being absolutely engulfed by drugs from New Bedford to Lowell, Boston, Springfield to Worcester, and how the cross section of people using and selling runs from an 80-year-old grandfather who enlists his son and grandson in the effort to a real estate lawyer who has a million and a half dollar portfolio, to people in the street like the "Dooneys" who were talked about last night.

Mr. President, if we are really declaring war on drugs, then Americans have to know and the criminal element has to know that we are serious. The President said last night that we are serious and that some 40 percent of Americans, I believe it is, are in need of treatment, and he proposed an increase of $321 million in Federal spending on drug treatment. What he said was, "Right now only 40 percent of them are actually getting help. This is simply not good enough."

Well, Mr. President, with $321 million additional for drug treatment, are we going to get it over 50 percent? Will it get to 60 or 70 percent? The answer is no. That is simply not good enough. Because anybody who knows anything about the war on drugs knows that unless you have treatment on demand, so that any addict who comes to the point of deciding they want help can get it, you do not have a complete war on drugs. We are currently servicing 1 out of 7 addicts who need or can seek help. We have waiting lists at every treatment center across this country.

What we promised last night yet again is that those waiting lists can grow longer, that we will not be serious about guaranteeing that we are going to clean up the streets, but that some addict who makes the decision to come forward and seek help will have to wait for 2 weeks, a month, 2 months, and either go out and kill themselves or someone else, or commit a crime before they are going to get help. That, to me, is not a complete war on drugs.

What about education? The President promised additional resources for education. The problem is that the education money we passed last year—I believe an additional amount of money for education is authorized now. If you look at what the President authorized last night or said he would seek from the Congress, you are not in fact finding additional money, and even if you are finding additional money, the amount of money the President proposed is not enough to deal with the question of putting into all of our schools, K through 12, the kind of education program that is really part of a war on drugs.

What about State and local law enforcement assistance, Mr. President? The Congress has already increased the assistance from $150 million to the $350 million in the drug bill that we passed last year. It has not been funded yet as the distinguished Presiding Officer knows, but we have done that. So if you balance what the President promised in additional State and local funds last night against what Congress already passed, which has not been funded, you actually have no increase to the local communities who are supposed to be waging a war.

Now, Mr. President, if you cannot put additional money into the local police, law enforcement, local jails, et cetera, now, you are not fighting a war on drugs. The promise to have prisons 2 or 3 years from now that can house prisoners caught today is an empty promise in terms of fighting the war on drugs.

There is not a police officer out there who has not voiced exasperation with putting his or her life on the line in order to serve a warrant or do their duty and make an arrest and then find the person they arrested is back on the street the next day. You do not have a war on drugs in this country until every person who commits this crime, who ought to go to jail, knows that they are going to go to jail and that the potential for them to be housed in that jail for as long as they ought to be exists.

If we had a real war on drugs, we would have said to those criminals last night that you will be put away immediately and that we will take whatever Federal property is necessary, that we will speed up the process of base closings, if necessary; We will create immediate detention centers, if necessary, and modular housing on our Federal property, if necessary, in order to guarantee that we will end the revolving door of the criminal justice system which has led attorneys general, sheriffs, and district attorneys to call the criminal justice system in which they work bankrupt. Mr. President, that would have been a war on drugs.

It seems to me, moreover, Mr. President, that at a time when the Prime Minister of a foreign country in the Caribbean is asking for a joint international multiforce strike force, and that there are other people who are already placing their lives on the line as seriously as they are in Colombia, that it is incumbent on us at this point in time to engage in the kind of considerations and efforts that would produce those kinds of responses to something that is called by everyone now the most significant national security threat that this country has ever faced.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, what is the business of the Senate at this point?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate is transacting morning business. At 1 o'clock p.m., under the order, the Senate is to go into recess.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I ask, since no one else is seeking the floor, if I may proceed for another 2 to 3 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator may proceed until 1 p.m.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, even if you take the money that has been allocated for the cities and towns, the 50 biggest cities in the United States today are spending more than $11.5 billion on local law enforcement alone. Matched against that $11.5 billion, the $350 million that was requested by the President to assist them, that is a tiny fraction of what is needed in order to wage a full-blown war on drugs. The drug kingpins, in one shipment, in one night, can make $350 million, that which we are now offering to every single American city over the course of an entire year to fight what we say is the most significant national security threat of this country.

Mr. President, I think that this is something that the cocaine barons can see through with significant ease. Finally, the President of the United States talked about a young fellow by the name of Dooney last night. Dooney is now living with friends and apparently is in a treatment center, and Dooney may or may not get a chance not to sell drugs. The hard fact is that the funding for the President's war is going to come from some housing money, from some juvenile justice money.

Over the last years we have seen reductions in the very programs that might have helped Dooney to have a different set of choices. Forty percent of the kids in our inner cities are dropping out of school today. There are 100,000 Dooneys out there. The question has to be asked, What program was there in the President's speech last night to address the choice of what do those other Dooneys do? What does Dooney do if there is not a drug treatment program for every single addict that needs it and if there is not the kind of program to lead those people into some other choices other than selling drugs, where they make far more than the lack of opportunity their community otherwise offers them.

So, Mr. President, I think we have a long distance to go. I think this body has a significant debate yet ahead of it as to how it will adequately close the gap between rhetoric and reality, and how we will finally send a message to the drug barons and lords alike that we are really serious about waging the war on drugs rather than going through yet again another political exercise in rhetoric, and another political process of avoidance of our responsibility as citizens.

DR. ERNEST BOYER, PRESIDENT, CARNEGIE FOUNDATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF TEACHING

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I have long admired Dr. Ernest Boyer, the president of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching. I have found his wisdom and insight to be invaluable when I think about education policy. My opinion is widely shared. In a 1983 national survey, Dr. Boyer was identified as the Nation's leading educator. Over the last decade, no one has been a stronger advocate of improved educational opportunities for all Americans than Dr. Ernie Boyer.

Dr. Boyer recently made a speech before the Business Roundtable about the condition of education in America and what we must do to continue the progress we have already made. I found the speech to be thoughtful and provocative and would encourage my colleagues to read it carefully.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Dr. Boyer's speech be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SCHOOL REFORM: A NATIONAL STRATEGY

(By Ernest L. Boyer)

(The Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, the Business Roundtable, Washington, DC, June 5, 1989)

INTRODUCTION

In his first report card on the nation's schools, Secretary of Education Lauro Cavazos concluded that student performance is now "stagnant," a sobering indictment. The Secretary confessed that, "This situation scares me and I hope it scares you, too." And he then offered this apocalyptic view: "We must do better or perish as the nation we know today."

It's been six years since the National Commission on Excellence in Education declared "The nation is at risk," and since that warning hit the headlines, America has been engaged in the most sustained drive for school renewal in its history. Academic standards have been raised, teachers' salaries have gone up, and business leaders have become strong advocates of public education.

But with all of our achievements, there still remains a disturbing gap between rhetoric and results. Many of our students receive a first-class education. But the majority go to schools that range from good to mediocre, and for large numbers of our young people, schooling is a failure.

What's gone wrong? Why is school performance so uneven?

The problem is that our efforts have been more fragmented than coherent. Since 1983, we've had a flood of reports on education, but no comprehensive plan. A variety of model schools have been introduced, but it's a reform strategy best described as "excellence by exception." If school reform has begun to stall, as Secretary Cavazos now concludes, it's not from lack of effort, but from lack of overall direction.

This piecemeal approach is not surprising. It dates back to 1647 when the Massachusetts Bay Colony required every town or village to hire a schoolmaster to teach its own children to read and write. From the very first, our schools have been locally controlled, locally supported, and accountable only to the parents. This "unsystematic" system of public education—some might even say "chaotic"—seemed to work, and, for years, Americans have had great confidence in their schools.

Now, the pendulum has shifted. Today, less than half the support for public education comes from local districts. Voter participation in school elections is low, and, with increased mobility, neighborhoods less stable. America's traditional grass-roots approach to public education has weakened.

Further, Americans are troubled that millions of students are economically and civically ill-prepared. We're shocked that high school graduates cannot confidently read and write, or accurately compute. We're deeply worried that the United States is losing the high-tech race.

"Modern societies," John Gardner said, "run on talent," and there's a growing conviction that the nation's 83,000 schools, 16,000 districts, and 50 states cannot, without coordination, meet the challenge.

Indeed, Americans today seem less concerned about local control than about national results—convinced that if the nation is at risk, the nation must respond.

Consider that, just two years ago, a national board for teacher certification was created.

Consider that the U.S. Department of Education now presents, annually, a national report card on school performance.

Consider that former Secretary of Education William Bennett's James Madison High School contained a proposed national curriculum.

Consider, especially, that we've just elected, to the highest office in the land, a candidate who pledged to be the "Education President"—suggesting national leadership in education.

This is an historic moment. America is moving, in fits and starts, toward a national view of education, but how can we achieve more coherence without sacrificing vitality at the local level? It's a new challenge, something we've never seriously faced before, and our response surely will shape education in this country for years to come.

How do we proceed?

Clearly, we don't need a federal ministry of education to force all schools into a bureaucratic lockstep. We don't need yet one more critical report. We don't need more "patch work" and "tinkering"—as Secretary

Cavazos recently reminded us. We know what works.

What we do need is a national agenda for school reform. We need a strategy that sustains state and local leadership, while giving coherence to the effort, overall. And I'd like to focus on five priorities that are crucial if our push for excellence is to be, not just symbolic, but systemic.

I. GOALS

First, a national strategy for school reform requires a larger vision, and the President himself must lead the way.

If a health epidemic were striking one-fourth of the children in this country, if snow were piling up on city streets, if we had heaps of garbage on the curbs, a national emergency would be declared. But when hundreds of thousands of students leave school, year-after-year, shockingly unprepared, the nation remains far too lethargic.

We need an urgent call to action. And this is where corporate America has a role to play. To paraphrase the TV commercial, "When the Fortune 500 speak out for better schools, politicians listen."

Last fall, I suggested that the next President call a summit meeting of the governors from all fifty states, declaring that this nation is committed to provide, for every student, a solid vocational, civic, and moral education. The goal must be quality for all.

I also suggested that the next President, as a national objective, pledge that by the year 2000—when today's first graders are high school seniors—America will have the best education system in the world.

Over forty years ago, Secretary of State George C. Marshall, in an historic address at Harvard University, announced a bold recovery plan to lift Europe out of the ashes of a devastating war. This was an audacious proposition, wildly optimistic. But let the record show that, within four short years, the European community was miraculously reborn. The Marshall Plan—with a $12 billion assist from the United States—delivered dramatically on its promise.

Dreams can be fulfilled only when they've been defined. As a national strategy, let's commit ourselves to rebuild, within a decade, the nation's schools, just as the Marshall Plan helped rebuild a devastated world.

II. EQUALITY

This leads to priority number two. To rebuild the schools, America must focus, with special urgency, on students who are least advantaged.

To talk about school reform while ignoring poor children is dangerously to misdiagnose the problem. The Harvard School of Public Health recently reported that a child who is nutritionally deficient will have a lower IQ, shorter attention span, and get lower grades in school. Yet, in the United States today, nearly one out of every four school-age children is classified as poor. They're neglected, undernourished. They lack even the most basic care required to have a healthy start, and to disregard the tragedy of poor children is to imperil the future of the nation.

Poverty and schooling are inextricably connected, and it's here that the federal government's obligation is most explicit. Winston Churchill observed that there is no finer investment for any community than "putting milk into babies." and I propose that the federal nutrition program for low-income mothers and babies be fully funded, since better schooling starts with little children.

During the decade of the nineties, let's also incrementally increase support for Head Start, with full funding by the year 2000. This effective program provides preschool education for three- and four-year-old disadvantaged children, and it's a disgrace that twenty years after Head Start was authorized by Congress, only 20 percent of the eligible children are being served.

To give all children a better start, let's also reorganize the first years of formal education—that's kindergarten through grade four—into a single unit called "The Basic School." This school would give top priority to language and have no class with more than 15 students each. Each child would get personal attention and rigid grade levels would be blurred.

Also, in the Basic School, all disadvantaged children would get special help in reading and mathematics, with support from the federal Chapter One program and the school day would be lengthened for afternoon enrichment. The goal is to have every child, by grade four, write with clarity, read with comprehension, compute with accuracy, and effectively speak and listen. If these skills are not well formed, it will be impossible fully to compensate for the failure later on.

Finally, serving the least advantaged means urging states to revise the formulas by which schools are funded. In my home state of New Jersey, the Englewood Cliffs School District spends $9,200 for every pupil, which in East Orange, just 15 miles down the road—where the needs of children are so great, where the ravages of poverty are so apparent—the district spends just $4,500 for each student. Of course, money is not the only answer. But does anyone really believe that East Orange students deserve only half as much support as students in the more affluent suburbs?

Excellence and equality cannot be divided, and as a national strategy, we must focus on the disadvantaged. We must finance, more fairly, the public schools and give priority to early education, since it's here that the battle for excellence will be won or lost.

III. TEACHERS

Third, this nation must give more dignity and more status to its teachers.

Washington Irving, in his popular nineteenth century story, "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," describes Ichabod Crane as a man who was "Built like a scarecrow. A gangling, pinheaded, flat-topped oaf. But what would anyone expect? He was just a teacher."

It's a paradox. Americans have always had a love affair with education, but we've been enormously ambivalent about teachers. Perhaps it's here that we can borrow something from the Japanese. In Japan, parents are intensely supportive of the schools. In that culture, the term sensei, teacher, is a title of great honor.

Last year, at the Carnegie Foundation, we surveyed 22,000 teachers, and I was shocked to discover that 50 percent said that morale in the profession is lower than it was five years ago; only 22 percent said it's gotten better.

We also found that more than 20 percent of today's teachers do not help choose textbooks and instructional materials. Over 50 percent do not participate in planning their own in-service education, and 70 percent are not asked to help shape retention policies at their school. In a word, they're powerless. And then we wonder why our most gifted students do not go into teaching!

There are poor teachers. And for the reform movement to succeed, the teaching profession must more vigorously police itself. We simply cannot tolerate mediocrity in the classroom.

But no profession is made healthy by focusing only on what's bad and, today, we need a national strategy to strengthen teaching, one that focuses on the three R's of recognition, recruitment, and renewal.

First, we need a 1989 version of President Dwight Eisenhower's National Defense Education Act—a program of teacher fellowships and summer institutes in every region of the country, which, incidentally, corporations could help fund.

Second, we need a national campaign to recruit outstanding students into teaching, beginning with those in junior high. Colleges and universities should organize this crusade, focusing especially on black and Hispanic students.

Third, we need, in every state, a full-tuition scholarship program for top students who agree to teach at least three years in disadvantaged schools. A quarter century ago, John Kennedy inspired the nation's youth to join the Peace Corps to serve the needy overseas. Why not inspire the brightest and the best to serve in inner-city schools and in rural districts here at home?

Finally, let's have teacher recognition programs in every state, and nationally, as well. Specifically, I suggest that President Bush, building on his splendid teacher award program, invite the "teachers of the year" from all 50 states to a dinner in the East Room of the White House, with the event televised, prime time. It's a symbolic act, but we live by symbols, and a White House dinner would affirm that classroom teachers are the unsung heroes of the nation.

IV. SCHOOL LEADERSHIP

Fourth, in shaping a national strategy for education, school-based management is crucial.

Thus far, over forty states have drafted tough new regulations. But all too often these mandates focus on bureaucratic procedures rather than on the outcomes of education, forcing teachers and principals to spend more time with paperwork, and less time with these students.

State officials should set goals, provide equitable support, and hold every school accountable for its performance. Here the leadership of governors is crucial. But within this framework, principals and teachers should be given full authority to choose textbooks, shape curriculum, hire teachers, organize the school day, and have discretionary funds to introduce bold innovations.

In other words, we must create, in the nation's 83,000 schools, what industry likes to call "circles of the quality control," with teachers and principals creatively building schools that meet high academic standards and meet the needs of students, too.

In a recent Carnegie survey, we found that half the students in eight grade go home after school to an empty house; 40 percent wish they could spend more time with their mothers and fathers; about a third say their family never sits down together to eat a meal. And many are often lonely.

We also found this sense of loneliness within the school itself, with teen-agers often moving anonymously from class to class, lacking contact with adults, and dropping out of school because no one noticed that they had, in fact, dropped in.

Frankly, if I had just one wish for school reform, I'd break up every junior and senior high school into units of no more than 400 students each. I'd locate these schools as satellite campuses, in shopping malls, in corporate buildings, and at worksites, too. In downtown Atlanta, for example, these's a high school in Rich's Department Store, a place where several hundred students go to study, while mingling with adults.

At these satellite campuses, every student should be assigned to a small "support group" of no more than 25 students each, meeting with a mentor at the beginning of each day to talk about problems, review academic progress, and receive emotional support.

Above all, I'd like to see all students feel needed and have a sense of worth. In our report, High School, we proposed a new "Carnegie unit" of high school credit—a community service term to help teen-agers become responsibly engaged in youth clubs, in retirement villages, and in tutoring other kids at school, discovering a connection between what they learn and how they live.

I'm suggesting that, as a national strategy, every state define its goals, and then give freedom to the schools, focusing on outcomes, not procedures. Such a restructing will breathe new life into a suffocating system.

V. ACCOUNTABILITY

Finally, we simply must clarify the content of education and find better ways to measure the results.

It's ironic that after six years of unprecedented school reform, we still can't agree on what it means to be an educated person. Some districts and some states have made great progress in defining goals. But in most schools, the K through 12 curriculum is still a Rube Goldberg arrangement that lacks both quality and coherence.

During the past six years, we've added more Carnegie units, but we've failed to ask "What's behind the labels?" We say "science," but what science should be studied? History, yes. But which history? We require English, but "English" can mean anything from Shakespeare to basic grammar.

As a national strategy, I propose that master teachers and research scholars come together—in a kind of peacetime Manhattan Project—to design, for the twenty-first century, a curriculum that focuses, not just on knowledge acquisition, but on integration, too. If this nation can invest billions in new weapons systems, why can't we invest in a new curriculum for the nation's schools? Specifically, let's have an endowment for this project, supported by both public and private funds.

It's ironic, too, that we still can't agree on how to evaluate school performance, and without reliable yardsticks, no one seems to know for sure if our $180 billion annual investment in public education is paying off. When Secretary Cavazos recently presented his report card on school performance—using dropout rates, SAT scores and the like—he explained that these yardsticks may not be adequate, but they're all we have. It's like an industry that's unclear about its product, and thus is hopelessly confused about quality control.

The President has a Council of Economic Advisors to keep track of the nation's fiscal health, but we don't have an authoritative way to monitor, adequately, the nation's education health. Perhaps the time has come to establish a National Council on Education Trends. Such a nongovernmental panel—comprised of distinguished citizens from all sectors—could develop a framework by which school performance, state-by-state, could be appropriately assessed.

This is an enormously difficult assignment that may take several years. But careful assessment of education is crucial, and here are some of the questions Americans should be asking:

Does each state have clearly defined goals for education? Are schools held accountable for results?

Is school financing adequate? Are states reducing the inequity from one district to another?

What about the dropout rate? Is it going down, especially among black and Hispanic populations?

Do teachers feel good about their work? Are salaries adequate and are working conditions getting better?

What about student performance?

Can all students read with comprehension, write with clarity, and accurately compute?

Have all students learned about the world around them? Do they know about their own heritage, other cultures, and have they discovered the interconnected nature of our world?

Can students think critically and integrate ideas?

Do they know the joy of reading, and have the motivation for lifelong learning?

Are the nonverbal abilities of students—including the aesthetic—being shaped in school?

Is education increasing the students' self-esteem and helping them become tolerant of others?

Are students, through community service projects, learning to become responsibly engaged?

After graduation, how do students perform in college and at the workplace? Are we, in short, preparing our students to be better workers, better citizens, and better people, too?

James Agee wrote that "in every child who is born, under no matter what circumstance . . . the potentiality of the human race is born again." As part of the national strategy, let's develop, during the decade of the nineties, a more coherent curriculum for our schools and a more precise, more humane evaluation of our students.

CONCLUSION

Here, then, is my conclusion. If this nation is to achieve excellence in education, a national strategy is required. This means:

An urgent call to action,

A commitment to the disadvantaged,

A crusade to strengthen teaching,

State standards, with leadership at the local school,

A quality curriculum, and

An effective way to monitor results.

John Gardner said, "A nation is never finished. You can't build it and leave it standing as the Pharoahs did the pyramids. It has to be recreated for each new generation." I'm convinced that the most urgent task our generation now confronts is a crusade to rebuild the nation's schools.

TRIBUTE TO MASSACHUSETTS TEACHERS ASSOCIATION 1989 AWARD FOR EXCELLENCE IN EDUCATION REPORTING WINNER DONALD W. POTTLE

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, we all recognize the importance of truly outstanding teachers, Donald W. Pottle of Shrewsbury High School is one such teacher. Last year Mr. Pottle won the Christa McAuliffe Fellowship in recognition of his "roboteacher" robot. This year Mr. Pottle has been awarded the Massachusetts Teachers Association 1989 Award for Excellence in Education Reporting for Locally Produced Television Programming for Channel 57—Shrewsbury Community Cablevision.

Mr. Pottle, a teacher of biology and human physiology for 20 years at Shrewsbury High School in Shrewsbury, MA, has been recognized time and time again for his dedication to the best in teaching. A graduate of Rutgers University and the University of New Hampshire, Mr. Pottle was named Massachusetts Outstanding Biology Teacher, 1982, and Massachusetts Teacher of the Year 1983.

I salute his dedication to the youth of Shrewsbury and the Nation as a whole. We should all be grateful for teachers such as Mr. Pottle because they serve to remind us that we must remain vigilant in our pursuit of excellence in education. I extend to him, once again, my congratulations and best wishes.

LABOR DAY 1989

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, the celebration of Labor Day honors the Nation's men and women that provide the productive energy that makes this Nation great. I am always pleased to recognize the true American heroes that provide the basis for one of the highest standards of living in the world. Labor Day—a modest recognition of the role played by American workers, but nonetheless a time for reflection and hope.

In my view, the Nation is truly at a watershed in its strategy of human resource development. Our ability to effectively trade in an increasingly competitive world market will require effective strategies to increase labor's productivity through the development of trained, productive workers. Our ability to expand our domestic self reliance and overall standard of living through rising real income will require an aggressive effort to allow every American the opportunity to be a real contributor to the Nation's output. We no longer can afford the luxury of permitting some of our productive potential to lie untapped and fallow.

I am hopeful that we are entering a new era of recognition for the American worker. The Secretary of Labor, Elizabeth Dole, has made a good start by releasing her commission's report on workplace quality and labor market efficiency. The report is titled, "Investing in People: A Strategy to Address America's Workforce Crisis."

The report covers a broad spectrum of urgent human resource needs, including the critical need to upgrade our education and training to provide the critical skills the Nation increasingly needs. I will carefully study the report's many recommendations to improve education and training, resolve work and family conflicts, increase labor-management cooperation and other areas. In the weeks and months ahead, I plan to speak out on these recommendations.

Even today, there is one major recommendation the commission makes that I can wholeheartedly endorse. The commission concluded that far too little research was being done to provide information on which to shape the answers to many vital policy related questions. It found that the dearth of reliable information on many important questions frustrated our paper authors and impeded our deliberations.

Several months ago I proposed an aggressive agenda of policy related research in relation to the Fair Labor Standards Act and the minimum wage, because of the clear deficiencies and cutbacks in that area. This agenda was incorporated into the bill that the Congress passed and the President vetoed, and I am confident it will be included in any final legislation.

But it is clear from the commission's report that minimum wage research is only the tip of the iceberg. The report finds that there have been massive cuts in the overall research and evaluation budgets of the Department of Education and the Department of Labor since 1975, 52 percent in the Department of Labor and 63 percent in the Department of Education. New approaches and experimentation has not kept pace with new labor market problems. In designing new policies and programs, we also need, as former Secretary of Labor William Brock has said about the education area, a new thrust in research. The commission would broaden this to include the Labor Department, and I agree.

My own initial review, apart from the commission's report, indicates that defense-related R&D spending is not only vastly greater than R&D spending on education, training and related areas in absolute dollars, but that the percentage of total agency funds spent for research and development is far greater.

In the mid-eighties, roughly 15 percent of defense and related Federal outlays were spent on research and development. By contrast, only 1.5 percent of all health-related funds were spent on research and development. And in the area that is the most vital part of our national defense against world competition, poverty, illiteracy and drugs—the education, training and productivity of our citizens—only 0.5 percent was spent on R&D. The area of education and training is very small, compared to the defense budget—that we all knew. What was not apparent was how small a part of education and training budget itself was allocated for R&D, and how much it had been cut during a period when the problems were increasing.

On this Labor Day, I congratulate American working men and women and those of Massachusetts in particular. I congratulate them for many jobs well done. At the same time I urge Congress and the administration to seriously review the report of the Secretary's commission and work together to develop new weapons to use in the wars in which we are now engaged—against illiteracy, low productivity, underemployment and unemployment. And as they assess the need for new weapons in these wars, only to find in many cases that good policy-relevant data are lacking, I urge them to institute a new phase of human resource research and development. The Pentagon learned that lesson long ago. We should do no less.

THE 1,635TH DAY OR TERRY ANDERSON'S CAPTIVITY

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, today, as we resume Senate business, we also mark the 1,635th day that Terry Anderson has been held in captivity in Beirut.

I ask unanimous consent that a Time article of March 20, 1989, on this subject be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE MAN WHO HOLDS THE HOSTAGES

It is no secret who holds Terry Anderson. Imad Mughniyah is his name. He is a 38-year-old Lebanese leader of the Shi'ite fundamentalist group Hizballah whose history of terrorism is grislier than the record of Palestinian renegade Abu Nidal. Mughniyah's villainy, U.S. officials say, runs from bombings, like the suicide attacks on the U.S. embassy and Marine barracks in Beirut, to hijackings. He is a prime suspect in the U.S. for his alleged role in the 1985 skyjacking of TWA Flight 847 in which a Navy diver was murdered. And he has made a specialty of kidnaping: U.S. officials believe that Mughniyah, under the cloak of cover names like Islamic Jihad and the Revolutionary Justice Organization, has been involved in the kidnaping of at least 31 Westerners since 1984 and that he continues to hold most of the 13 still in captivity.

The kidnapers specifically wanted Terry Anderson. Fatefully, perhaps, the reporter advertised his availability the day before his capture, when he ventured into Beirut's southern suburbs to quiz Hizballah spiritual leader Sheik Mohammed Hussein Fadlallah. But Anderson's colleagues at the Associated Press believe he may have put himself on Hizballah's blacklist as far back as 1983, when he traveled to their stronghold in Baalbek to grill Shi'ite leaders about the bombing of the U.S. Marine barracks.

The grandson of a Shi'ite mullah, Mughniyah trained with Yasser Arafat's Fatah faction of the Palestine Liberation Organization. A high school dropout, he excelled at terrorism; his boldness and quick grasp of explosives and weaponry impressed his commanders. But he fell out with Fatah leaders and in 1982, when Israeli troops invaded Lebanon and occupied his village, Teir Debbe, Mughniyah joined the newly formed and more radical Hizballah (Party of God). He took to wearing religious garb even as he recruited activists and professionals to the Shi'ite cause. He rose quickly to the top of the organization, and as security chief, Mughniyah is thought to be the group's most powerful figure. He continues to hold the Westerners captive despite public pleas from Fadlallah that they be set free.

His original motivation was to avenge the mistreatment of Shi'ites in Lebanon and to vent his hatred of the U.S. and Israel. But U.S sources say he has become obsessed with trying to secure the freedom of his brother-in-law Mustafa Badreddin and 16 other Shi'its jailed in Kuwait after a 1983 bombing blitz. Mughniyah launched his subsequent kidnaping and hijacking spree to spring the 17 in a prisoners-for-hostage swap. Among his victims: William Buckley, the CIA station chief, who died in captivity.

Mughniyah reportedly gets his financing from Tehran, and is considered Iran's man in Lebanon; his closest mentors there include conservative leaders locked in rivalry with Iran's would-be pragmatists. Even so, Mughniyah has been forced to free numerous American, French and West German hostages when it served Iran's interests, while his personal demands have never been met.

Mughniyah seems content to bide his time until the U.S. breaks. But he has not tired of finding ways to press Hizballah's confrontation with the West. Britain's Guardian newspaper reported last month that he was busy organizing mas demonstrations in Lebanon. The cause: demanding Salman Rushdie's death for writing The Satanic Verses.

ADDITIONAL VIEWS TO THE COMMITTEE REPORT ON THE AMERICANS WITH DISABILITIES ACT OF 1989

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I understand that the Senate will shortly be turning its attention to S. 933, the Americans With Disabilities Act of 1989. This is an important piece of legislation that deserves the careful attention of all of our colleagues. Since the committee report became available only last Friday, September 1, I am submitting for today's RECORD a copy of my additional views for the benefit of those who wish to study them. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of those views be printed in the RECORD immediately following these comments.

There being no objection, the additional views were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF SENATOR HATCH

The story of America is one of ever growing inclusiveness, as more and more Americans have become able to participate in the great mainstream of American life. Persons with disabilities, no less than other Americans, are entitled to an equal opportunity to participate in the American dream.

Indeed, through their own efforts, and with the benefit of a growing array of programs and antidiscrimination provisions at the local, state, and federal levels designed to enhance their abilities to lead lives of independence, not dependence, persons with disabilities have long been writing an inspiring chapter in this quintessential American story. Persons with disabilities, through their hard work and determination, have already made great advances and destroyed many stereotypes which have been used to deny them equal opportunities in the past. They have demonstrated they are no "insular minority" in America. But more can still be done to provide equal opportunity for persons with disabilities.

At the outset of the hearings on S. 933, I stated my support for a comprehensive federal civil rights bill banning discrimination against persons with disabilities. Such protection against discrimination is long overdue. At the same time, I also expressed the view that such legislation must be both meaningful and reasonable. Accordingly, I was unable to endorse S. 933, as introduced. There were several serious problems with S. 933, as introduced, including: its excessive penalty scheme; its breadth of coverage of "public accommodations"; its significant departure from the standards of section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, which bans disability discrimination in programs or activities receiving federal aid and in federally conducted programs; and its onerous treatment of the private bus industry.

The substitute version, which emerged from a period of negotiations and was adopted unanimously by the Labor and Human Resources Committee, is still not a perfect compromise. It retains features that I believe merit further improvement. But it incorporated enough important changes to enable me to cosponsor it at the mark-up, while I reserved my right to pursue further changes on the Floor.

At the mark-up, the Committee accepted an amendment which I offered, requiring the Attorney General, in consultation with other federal agencies, to develop and implement a plan to assist covered entities in understanding their duties under the bill.

I also have further concerns about the bill in certain areas.

I. SMALL BUSINESS EXEMPTION FOR PUBLIC ACCOMMODATIONS

Title I of the bill bans employment discrimination and is effective in two years. At that time, the employment discrimination provisions will apply to employers with 25 or more employees for each working day in each of 20 or more calendar weeks in the current or preceding year. Two years thereafter—four years after enactment—the employment provisions will apply to employers of 15 or more employees.

Title III of the bill covers "public accommodations and services operated by private entities." Private entities defined as "potential places of employment" are subject only to accessibility requirements concerning new facilities designed and constructed for first occupancy later than 30 months after the bill's enactment. These entities include facilities intended for nonresidential use and whose operations affect commerce. Section 301(s).

Private entities defined as "public accommodations," which include much of the private sector, are subject not only to this new construction requirement but also to a wide variety of prohibitions and obligations with respect to their existing facilities and general policies. These prohibitions and obligations pertain to a business in its treatment of customers, clients, and visitors.

The term "public accommodation" is defined very broadly. It includes not only businesses covered by Title II of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, which bans racial, ethnic, and religious discrimination in public accommodations, defined as places of eating; places of lodging; places of entertainment; and gasoline stations, but it also includes retail stores, service establishments, and other elements of the private sector. Section 301(3).[1]

This ban on discrimination in privately operated "public accommodations" in Title III of the bill is effective 18 months after enactment. In stark contrast to the small business exemption from the bill's employment provisions, however, the bill contains no small business entity exemption whatsoever from these public accommodations provisions.

Thus, the bill creates the following anomaly: a mom-and-pop grocery store is not subject to the bill when it hires a clerk as a new employee, but it is subject to all of the bill's requirements in its treatment of customers, as well as to an extremely onerous penalty scheme when it violates any of those requirements.

Even under the standards of the substitute bill, the costs some small businesses may incur can be significant.[2] In the disability rights area, nondiscrimination requirements, including those in this bill, not only require elimination of outright exclusion based on stereotypes, they often impose additional duties to make reasonable accommodations to the needs of persons with disabilities. I support these requirements. But, we must acknowledge that these accommodations can cost money. Sometimes the cost is not great, but even under the standards of this bill, these costs can be more than de minimus where necessary to provide accessibility. This is a crucial difference between a disability civil rights statute and a civil rights statute in the race area. In order to provide equal treatment to racial minorities, a business need only disregard race and judge a person on his or her merits. To provide equal opportunity for a person with a disability will sometimes require additional actions and costs than those required to provide access to a person without a disability.

For example, under the public accommodations title of this bill, covered entities must seek to provide "full and equal enjoyment of [their] goods, services, facilities, privileges, advantages and accommodations." Section 302(a). Among the specific requirements applicable to the smallest businesses are:

1. The obligation to provide auxiliary aids and services to persons with disabilities, unless to do so would cause either an undue burden to the entity or a fundamental alteration in its activities. Section 302(b)(2)(A)(iii). Auxiliary aids and services are defined in Section 3(1) and can include providing qualified interpreters, qualified readers, signage, taped texts; the acquisition or modifications of equipment or devices; and similar actions and devices.

2. The obligation to make reasonable modifications in policies, practices, and procedures, unless doing so fundamentally alters the entity's activities. Section 302(b)(2)(A)(ii).

3. The obligation to remove "architectural barriers, and communication barriers that are structural in nature, in existing facilities . . . where such removal is readily achievable." Section 302(b)(2)(A)(iv). The term "readily achievable" is defined in section 301(5).

4. The obligation to remove "transportation barriers in existing vehicles used by an establishment for transporting individuals (not including barriers that can only be removed through the retrofitting of vehicles by the installation of a hydraulic or other lift), where such removal is readily achievable." Section 302(b)(2)(A)(iv).

5. Where the removal of a barrier described in paragraphs 3 and 4 is not readily achievable, an obligation "to make [the entity's] goods, services, facilities, privileges, advantages available through alternative methods if such methods are readily achievable." Section 302(b)(2)(A)(v).

6. The elimination of eligibility criteria that screen out or tend to screen out a person or persons with disabilities unless the criteria are shown to be necessary to the conduct of the activity in question. Section 302(b)(2)(A)(i).

While these requirements will, in theory, generally translate into less actual cost the smaller the entity, any financial or administrative impact on the smallest businesses can be very troublesome for those businesses. Even comparatively "lesser" costs can be quite burdensome for a small business struggling to survive. Further, the determination as to whether an accommodation is an undue burden or a barrier removal is readily achievable may ultimately be made by a Federal agency or judge. A small business is less able to absorb an overreaching determination by these authorities than a larger business.

Moreover, government compliance reviews (Section 308(b)(1)), and the costs of private as well as Attorney General litigation, will add further to those expenses small businesses must bear under the bill's public accommodations title. Indeed, in a private enforcement action, a plaintiff can obtain injunctive relief and attorneys fees. For larger businesses, these costs can be more readily absorbed and passed on to a large consumer base. For some smaller businesses, the cost of compliance with injunctive relief combined with attorneys fees might be onerous.

But it is the penalty scheme in an Attorney General action to enforce the public accommodations title that is of particular concern. In an Attorney General action, a court, at the request of the Attorney General, can order the smallest business to pay monetary damages to aggrieved persons. Moreover, the court can order such a business to pay a civil penalty of up to $50,000 for a first violation and up to $100,000 for subsequent violations. This remedy scheme is potentially a very heavy burden, which I will also address as a separate concern.

[1] Religious organizations and entities controlled by religious organizations are completely exempt from coverage under Title III.

[2] Some persons may assert that costs should not be a factor in designing a disability civil rights law. In the context of a disability rights law, however, costs may have to be incurred in order to provide nondiscriminatory treatment; e.g., putting in a ramp, providing auxiliary aids and services, and other accommodations. Indeed, the failure to incur reasonable costs in order to provide access is regarded as discriminatory. At some point, however, the undertaking of an accommodation can be so costly or represent such a fundamental alteration in the covered entity's program that the failure to undertake the accommodation is simply not discriminatory. This principle reflects Supreme Court caselaw interpreting section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973. E.g. School Board of Nassau County v. Arline, 480 U.S. 273, 287 n. 17 (1987); Alexander v. Choate, 469 U.S. 287 (1985); Southeastern Community College v. Davis, 442 U.S. 397, 409–414 (1979).

Opponents of a small business exemption in the public accommodations title of S. 933 claim that since title II of the 1964 Civil Rights Act has no small business exemption, neither should S. 933. There are several responses to this argument:

1. S. 933 already departs from title II of the 1964 Civil Rights Act in two important ways:

A. Title II only covers places of eating, lodging, entertainment, and gasoline stations. S. 933 goes well beyond such coverage, encompassing virtually all elements of the private sector as "public accommodations" or "potential places of employment," except religious organizations and entities controlled by religious organizations.

B. Title II provides only for injunctive relief in Attorney General actions; this bill, as mentioned earlier, permits recovery of monetary damages and huge civil fines in Attorney General actions.

Thus, it is inconsistent for the opponents of a small business exemption to rely upon Title II as the basis for their opposition when they have so readily departed from that parallel statute in other important respects.

2. In any case, compliance with title II of the 1964 Civil Rights Act imposes no costs—it simply requires admitting and serving persons without regard to their color, ethnicity, or religion. As mentioned earlier, compliance with S. 933 can result in costs to covered entities. This difference between title II and S. 933 alone justifies a small business exemption in public accommodations.

I favor an exemption of small businesses from the prohibitions and obligations in the public accommodations provisions of the bill, i.e., provisions relating to a business' existing facilities and general policies. I would not, however, exempt any public accommodation from the requirement that its new facilities be accessible. The cost of accessibility to a new facility when "built-in" to the plans and construction of such a new facility is not burdensome. But for businesses in the operation of their existing facilities and in the provision of auxiliary aids and services, modification of policies, procedures, and criteria, a small entity exemption is appropriate.

I also believe that even with an exemption for small businesses, the marketplace will exert pressure on small businesses which will lead to increased accessibility. When a small business operator sees a larger competitor gain customers with disabilities because the latter business is accessible, the small business operator is likely to take steps it can afford to get some of those customers—even if those steps don't meet every single requirement of this title—without exposure to the costs of compliance reviews and litigation.

With this voluntary activity, the requirement that all new facilities be accessible, and the full coverage of all "public accommodations" other than small businesses, I believe we can provide genuine access to public accommodations for persons with disabilities, while assuring that we do not overly burden small businesses in America.

II. EXCESSIVE PENALTIES AGAINST PUBLIC ACCOMMODATIONS

Under title II of the 1964 Civil Rights Act (hereinafter "title II"), as mentioned earlier, a private plaintiff can obtain injunctive relief and attorneys fees. The Attorney General can obtain injunctive relief. No monetary damages or civil penalties are available in either action.

Under S. 933, in an action for a violation of the public accommodations title, a private plaintiff can obtain an injunction and attorneys fees. I believe such relief, paralleling that of title II, is appropriate.

But, in an Attorney General action under this bill the court can award not only an injunction, but also civil penalties of up to $50,000 for a first violation, and up to $100,000 for subsequent violations. Further, the court can award monetary damages to aggrieved persons when requested to do so by the Attorney General. This relief is excessive and unjustifiable.

The threat of litigation, its cost to covered entities, the added expenses of paying the plaintiff's attorneys fees in private litigation, and marketplace factors are all powerful incentives for a business to comply with this bill in the first instance.

Moreover, if an entity is in noncompliance, injunctive relief is significant. An injunction requires the offending entity to cease its discrimination. If a ramp must be put in, a bathroom made accessible, or policies changed, pursuant to the entity's duties under the bill's public accommodations provisions, a court can order such relief.

Everyone knows that 25 years ago black people and other racial and ethnic minorities were routinely denied the opportunity to eat, to lodge, and to be entertained in places they could afford. Today, while there are still instances of racial and ethnic discrimination in public accommodations, we face an entirely different situation. The public accommodations covered by title II are now essentially open on a nondiscriminatory basis. This resulted largely from title II's enactment, with the injunctive relief and attorneys fees enforcement scheme previously described.

Yet, relief in an Attorney General action against a public accommodations under this bill goes well beyond the relief available in an Attorney General action under title II.

Ironically, a private party, in his own action, cannot obtain monetary damages for himself. The court can award monetary damages, however, to an aggrieved person, in an Attorney General action.

There is a further anomaly in the bill. The bill subjects state and local governments to the remedies available under Section 505 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973. Under Section 505, a federal agency, in an enforcement action, may either terminate federal aid to the part of a covered entity where the discrimination occurs or it may refer the case to the Department of Justice for injunctive relief. Civil penalties are not recoverable by the federal government in an enforcement action. Thus, in an Attorney General action, state and local governments, with their enormous tax resources, are subject to lesser penalties than the private sector, which is not supported by tax revenues or, for the most part, federal aid. The potential for a sole proprietor, a mom-and-pop business, or any other business to be more harshly sanctioned than a state or local government in an Attorney General action requires further consideration.

Our purpose here should not be punitive. Providing for monetary damages and huge civil penalties in Attorney General actions is excessive. To the extent we are trying to provide access by enacting this bill, since such access can impose costs on covered entities, rather than penalize a public accommodation by imposing monetary damages and huge civil penalties, we should keep the money available to the entity for use in providing access pursuant to the injunctive relief.

Proponents of the stiff remedy provisions in S. 933 assert that it parallels remedies now available in an Attorney General action under the Fair Housing Act, as amended last year. This analogy, however, is unpersuasive.

In the field of housing, the original remedies of the 1968 Fair Housing Act proved inadequate to the task of rooting out racial and ethnic discrimination in housing as quickly as hoped. Why? In my opinion, it is because housing discrimination is probably the most persistent form of racial discrimination in the nation today. Thus, toughening the penalties for such discrimination in 1988 made sense and I supported the effort to do so.

But the record in the public accommodations area is much different. As mentioned earlier, the Title II penalties—injunctive relief and attorneys fees—have been adequate to work a revolution of equal opportunity.

If the Fair Housing Amendments Act of 1988 had not added disability discrimination to the list of prohibited conduct under the Fair Housing Act, and a ban on housing discrimination on the basis of disability was being added in this bill, the use of Fair Housing Act remedies for such housing discrimination would be appropriate. It is inappropriate, however, to use the Fair Housing Act, rather than Title II of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, as the analogue for the remedies in the public accommodations context in this bill.

I note that, with respect to employment discrimination, S. 933 uses the remedies available under the parallel civil rights statute, Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act. Unfortunately, this parallelism was not maintained with respect to public accommodations.

I prefer to retain such parallelism in remedies. I am prepared, however, to break the parallelism with Title II and to consider a more modest enforcement scheme in this area that goes beyond Title II relief but is more reasonable than the provision currently in the bill.

III. THE BILL'S THREAT TO THE PRIVATE BUS TRANSPORTATION INDUSTRY

The bill applies to transportation services "provided by a privately operated entity that is primarily engaged in the business of transporting people," except for air carriers. Section 304(a). This coverage includes private rail, limousine, taxi, and bus companies.

I am especially concerned about this bill's impact on the private bus transportation industry. The bill imposes a variety of requirements on these companies, including:

1. The obligation to make reasonable modifications in policies, practices, and procedures, unless to do so would fundamentally alter the company's activities. Section 304(b)(2)(A).

2. The obligation to provide auxiliary aids and services to persons with disabilities, unless to do so would cause an undue burden or fundamentally alter the company's activities. Section 304(b)(2)(B).

3. The obligation to remove "transportation barriers in existing vehicles . . . where such removal is readily achievable." This obligation does not include the addition of a lift. Section 304(b)(2)(C).

4. Where the removal of a barrier described in paragraph 3 is not readily achievable, an obligation "to make [the entity's] goods, services, facilities, privileges, advantages available through alternative methods if such methods are readily achievable." Section 304(b)(2)(C).

I favor these provisions.

The truly onerous provision, however, is the requirement that all small bus companies must purchase or lease all new over-the-road buses with lifts six years after the bill's enactment; large bus companies must do so beginning five years after enactment. In the meantime, ironically, having imposed this major requirement on the private bus transportation industry, the bill requires a three-year study to determine whether this requirement is, in effect, feasible. The requirement, however, is not contingent on the results of the study—it remains in place under this bill even if the study shows that the requirement is excessive.

The bill, in its present form, presents the strong likelihood that private intercity and charter and tour bus service will be seriously curtailed soon after the bill's new bus requirements become effective, if not virtually eliminated at some point thereafter. The stakes are that high.

Unlike state and local government mass transit, which is heavily subsidized by the federal government, private transportation companies receive virtually no federal aid. Private companies provide virtually all of the intercity bus transportation in the country. There are well over one thousand such private, intercity bus companies, such as Greyhound, Gold Line, East Coast Parlor, and Peter Plan. Some of these companies provide two kinds of services: over the road regular route service—that is, scheduled service between communities—and charter and tour services. Other companies provide only charter and tour services.

These companies serve about 10,000 communities, most of which have no other intercity transportation available to them. The number of communities served has been declining in the last 30 years. According to an Interstate Commerce Commission staff analysis, there was a net loss of nearly 3,400 communities receiving intercity bus service between 1982 and 1986 alone. Ninety percent of the communities losing this service had populations of less than 10,000. This industry operates on a low profit margin. In many rural areas, including in Utah, this private bus service is the only available intercity transportation. There is only token Amtrak service available. Intercity buses provide transportation for those who need a low cost transportation alternative.

The requirement that all new buses have wheelchair lifts would quickly accelerate the loss of private, intercity bus service to our nation's communities, if not entirely end such service, according to the American Bus Association, United Bus Owners of America, and Greyhound (the largest company). Delaying this result by five or six years, in the hope an efficient and economical lift will appear on the scene, is small comfort.

A lift for an intercity bus is more expensive than for an intracity bus, such as the Metrobuses used in the District of Columbia, because with the baggage compartment and other differences, access to the intercity bus is higher off the ground—as much as four or six feet, rather than one foot for an intracity bus.

The added costs for new buses for these private companies include not only the cost of the lift but widening the aisles and making the bathrooms accessible. There are maintenance costs—and there is little experience with maintenance of intercity bus lifts. There will be a loss of as many as four seats, which especially hurts bus companies during their peak periods, such as holiday periods. Moreover, particularly in rural areas, these companies are successful because of their package express service. The room available for carrying such packages, however, is reduced in lift-equipped buses.

Even if the least expensive lift is used on all new buses—and this is, I am told, a lift which has had little use in this country and one which not all bus companies might feel is suited to their operations—the cost of this provision is unreasonable. Indeed, I understand that the principal basis for this provision is information from the Regional Transportation District of Denver, Colorado. According to the Department of Transportation, however, Denver has only 17 buses which use a "less expensive" lift developed in Germany. I understand these buses have been in use in Denver for about one year. Moreover, according to the Department of Transportation, Denver uses these buses on one-way routes of less than 30 miles. This usage is atypical for the private bus industry as a whole, which consists of some 20,000 buses which travel far greater distances on trips.

Representatives of the private bus transportation industry have stated that their lowest annual cost estimate for the bill's requirement regarding new buses, which includes lift and accessible restroom installation, loss of revenue seats for lift and restroom accessibility, maintenance costs, and training costs would be so high as to seriously threaten the viability of the private bus transportation industry. This lowest annual cost estimate is based on a cost of $10,100 per new bus for each year of its service, and assumes a 10-year life span for the industry's 20,000 bus fleet. In other words, under this analysis, each new bus will cost a company $101,000 over the life of the bus. I note that representatives of the industry believe these estimates are unrealistic and actual costs will be higher.

The Committee heard virtually no testimony on this vital issue.

I, along with proponents of the present provision, can point to correspondence from officials of the Denver system and the American distributor of the lift in question citing a variety of different figures and costs related to wheelchair accessibility for these over-the-road buses. Following the hearings on the bill, the cost figures have been flying back and forth concerning costs associated with the lift which has recently begun to be used in Denver. The dispute over the utility of any particular lift and its costs are precisely why a study is most appropriate.

I support a requirement that bans discrimination based on stereotypes against persons with disabilities in their use of privately operated buses. I also support a requirement that private bus companies make reasonable accommodations to the needs of persons with disabilities with respect to their current bus fleet.

The Committee, however, simply has not been presented with enough clear testimony and data to know what is reasonable with respect to requirements such as lifts on new buses purchased or leased by the private bus industry. That is why a study of private bus accessibility, followed by Congressional action based on the study, is the most sensible course of action with respect to any future requirements, such as lifts, concerning new buses.

It might be suggested that this bill will have no significant impact on bus companies for the next five years. Even this suggestion is doubtful. In an August 1, 1989, letter to Roger Porter, domestic policy advisor to the President, Theodore Knappen, a Senior Vice President at Greyhound Lines, Inc., opposed this provision of S. 933. He wrote, "Greyhound Lines Inc. is a new company, which is the result of the merger of two failing bus systems, Greyhound and Trailways. We are highly leveraged with $375 million in debt * * *" Greyhound "lost $17 million last year and will be marginally profitable this year. The annual cost of full implementation of S. 933 will be at a minimum, $40 million. Even if the start up is delayed for five years, the financial institutions upon which we rely are not likely to continue to support us in light of this burden. The system will inevitably crumble with the marginal rural service being the first to go. I should add that most small bus companies are in a similar financial situation."

In summary, the current provision regarding the private bus transportation industry's purchase and lease of readily accessible new buses rests on inadequate and contested data and runs a serious risk of unintentionally causing devastating effects in the private bus industry. The prudent course is to study the issue first and then to impose appropriate requirements based on the study—not the reverse, as currently provided for in the bill.

TRIBUTE TO JOSEPH MOQUIN

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to one of Alabama's most outstanding business and community leaders as well as my close friend, Mr. Joseph Moquin from Huntsville, AL.

Joe retired as the chief executive officer of Teledyne Brown Engineering on August 31, 1989, following over three decades of loyal service to his company and to the Huntsville community and the Nation as a whole. It is evident that Joe Moquin has played a role in every worthwhile enterprise in Huntsville for over 30 years.

In 1956, when Joe Moquin traveled to Huntsville to become the chief management engineer for the Army Ballistic Missile Agency, few people could have foreseen the explosive growth the city would experience over the next three decades or the integral role which Joe Moquin would play in this expansion. Following the Soviet Union's launch of the Sputnik I in 1957, Huntsville's Army team escalated the space frenzy by developing the Redstone and Jupiter missile systems. This team of incredibly gifted engineers, scientists, and planners would place Huntsville on the cutting edge of the growing high-technology research and development industries.

As the chief civilian in the Army Ordnance Missile Command's control office, Joe worked closely with General Mendaris and Dr. Wernher von Braun who headed the Army team. Although a brilliant engineer, perhaps Joe Moquin's most important contribution to these efforts came from his managerial and planning ability. He possesses the incredible ability to see the big picture and manage the numerous disparate aspects of such complicated projects.

Another of Huntsville's visionaries, Milton Cummings, recognized both Moquin's technical strengths in engineering and his managerial ability. In 1959, Cummings hired Joe as the executive vice president of Brown Engineering and ensured the success of what was to become one of Huntsville's most successful and ambitious companies. Working together, Joe Moquin and Milton Cummings transformed a small engineering company into a huge, diverse company employing about 3,000 people and helped transform Huntsville from a sleepy cotton town into a technology center for the entire Nation.

Brown Engineering prospered under the guidance of Moquin and Cummings. From four employees in 1953, Brown Engineering grew to several hundred employees in the early 1960's. Joe Moquin and Milton Cummings knew that the time was right for Brown to move to a new, more spacious, design and production facility.

Fortunately for Huntsville, Joe Moquin saw this as more than a time to find a larger building to house his company. He saw this as an opportunity to place Brown Engineering in the heart of a carefully zoned research park carved out of the cotton fields west of the city. After convincing the city to rezone 3,000 acres for the project, Moquin bought a large tract of land for Brown's new headquarters and the research park was born. This park was named Cummings Research Park in tribute to Milton Cummings following his death in 1973.

Today, Cummings Research Park employs more than 25,000 people and has helped develop what should become the world's first permanently manned space station. These Cummings Research Park residents have been a huge factor in the success of the Marshall Space Flight Center, the Army Missile Command, and the Strategic Defense Command.

One year before Brown Engineering merged with Teledyne Inc., Joe Moquin became the president of the company and continued in this role at Teledyne Brown. He has also served as the chairman and chief executive officer since 1985.

Joe Moquin has spent over three decades promoting Huntsville and promoting Alabama. He has devoted his time and his money as well as his company's resources to ensure that Huntsville has the benefit of outstanding educational, cultural, and professional opportunities to support the technological growth associated with the space and defense industries.

Joe Moquin has been intimately involved with pushing Alabama ahead. Much of his effort has been devoted to business, but he recognizes that business must be supported by an outstanding education system. He has been instrumental in the success achieved by the University of Alabama in Birmingham and Birmingham-Southern, as well as Huntsville's institutions of higher learning—Alabama A&M University and the University of Alabama in Huntsville, and Oakwood College.

Joe Moquin's contributions to professional organizations and community service organizations have earned him many awards, far too numerous for me to list. Some, however, merit special recognition. Joe Moquin received the Huntsville/Madison County Chamber of Commerce's first annual Award for Engineering, Science, and Technology Excellence. He was a member of the Alabama Supercomputer Network Authority Board which established the statewide supercomputer network headquartered in Huntsville. He currently serves as the chairperson for the economic development strategy and implementation task force for Huntsville's Vision 2000 Program.

Joe Moquin represents the ideal for which corporate leaders must strive. He has set an outstanding example and leaves other CEO's with a lofty goal of matching his success. He has provided Huntsville with the corporate and civic leadership it needed in the tumultuous years of the technology boom. Now he is stepping down as chairman and CEO of Teledyne Brown Engineering but not as promoter and civic activist for Huntsville.

Joe Moquin has long been one of the most informed and knowledgeable people in the defense and space industries and one of the first people I seek out for advice in these areas. His support, advice, and friendship have been invaluable to me. I wish him the best of luck in all his endeavors and look forward to his continued success.

Thank you, Mr. President.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order, morning business is closed.

RECESS UNTIL 2:15 P.M.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Senate stands in recess until the hour of 2:15 p.m. today.

Whereupon, the Senate, at 1 p.m., recessed until 2:15 p.m. when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. KOHL].

LEGISLATIVE BRANCH APPROPRIATIONS, 1990

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the clerk will report H.R. 3014.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3014) making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes.

The Senate proceeded with the consideration of the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments as follows:

(The parts of the bill intended to be stricken are shown in boldface brackets, and the parts of the bill intended to be inserted are shown in italics.)

SENATE OFFICIAL MAIL COSTS

For expenses necessary for official mail costs of the Senate, $32,000,000, to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate, to be available immediately upon enactment of this Act, and to remain available until expended.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SECTION 1. The Chairman of the Majority or Minority Conference Committee of the Senate may, during the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, at his election, transfer not more than $50,000 from the appropriation account for salaries for the Conference of the Majority and the Conference of the Minority of the Senate, to the account, within the contingent fund of the Senate, from which expenses are payable under section 120 of Public Law 97-51 (2 U.S.C. 61g-6). Any transfer of funds under authority of the preceding sentence shall be made at such time or times as such chairman shall specify in writing to the Senate Disbursing Office. Any funds so transferred by the chairman of the Majority or Minority Conference Committee shall be available for expenditure by such committee in like manner and for the same purposes as are other moneys which are available for expenditure by such committee from the account, within the contingent fund of the Senate, from which expenses are payable under section 120 of Public Law 97-51 (2 U.S.C. 61g-6).

SEC. 2. Funds appropriated to the Conference of the Majority and funds appropriated to the Conference of the Minority for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, may be utilized in such amounts as the Chairman of each Conference deems appropriate for the specialized training of professional staff, subject to such limitations, insofar as they are applicable, as are imposed by the Committee on Rules and Administration with respect to such training when provided to professional staff of standing committees of the Senate.

SEC. 3. Subsection (d) of section 2 of Public Law 100-123 (2 U.S.C. 58a-1), is amended by inserting immediately after "by the Sergeant at Arms)," the following: "and all other moneys received by the Sergeant at Arms as charges or commissions for telephone services,".

SEC. 4. (a) The Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate is authorized to establish an Office of Senate Health Promotion.

(b)(1) In carrying out this section, the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate is authorized to establish, or provide for the establishment of, exercise classes and other health services and activities on a continuing and regular basis. In providing for such classes, services, and activities, the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate is authorized to impose and collect fees, assessments, and other charges to defray the costs involved in promoting the health of Members, officers, and employees of the Senate. For purposes of this section, the term "employees of the Senate" shall have such meaning as the Sergeant at Arms, by regulation, may prescribe.

(2) All fees, assessments, and charges imposed and collected by the Sergeant at Arms pursuant to paragraph (1) shall be deposited in the revolving fund established pursuant to subsection (c) and shall be available for purposes of this section.

(c) There is established in the Treasury of the United States a revolving fund within the contingent fund of the Senate to be known as the Senate Health Promotion Revolving Fund (hereinafter referred to in this section as the "fund"). The fund shall consist of all amounts collected or received by the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate as fees, assessments, and other charges for activities and services to carry out the provisions of this section. All moneys in the fund shall be available without fiscal year limitation for disbursement by the Secretary of the Senate for promoting the health of Members, officers, and employees of the Senate.

(d) Disbursements from the revolving fund shall be made upon vouchers signed by the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate.

(e) The provisions of section 4 of the Act of July 31, 1946 (40 U.S.C. 193d) shall not be applicable to any class, service, or other activity carried out pursuant to the provisions of this section.

(f) The provisions of this section shall be carried out in accordance with regulations which shall be promulgated by the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate and subject to approval at the beginning of each Congress by the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate.

SEC. 5. (a) Paragraph (3) of section 506(a) of the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1973 (2 U.S.C. 58(a)) is amended to read as follows:

"(3)(A) postage on, and fees and charges in connection with, mail matter sent through the mail under the franking privilege in excess of amounts provided from the appropriation for official mail costs, upon certification by the Senate Sergeant at Arms and subject to such regulations as may be promulgated by the Committee on Rules and Administration, (B) postage on, and fees and charges in connection with official mail matter sent through the mail other than the franking privilege upon certification by the Senate Sergeant at Arms and subject to such regulations as may be promulgated by the Committee on Rules and Administration, and (C) reimbursement to each Senator for costs incurred in the preparation of required official reports, and the acquisition of mailing lists to be used for official purposes, and in the mailing, delivery, or transmitting of matters relating to official business;".

"(b) Receipts paid to the Sergeant at Arms from sales of postage on, and fees and charges in connection with mail matter sent through the mail by Senators, Senate committees, or other Senate offices (including joint committees and commissions funded from the contingent fund of the Senate), other than under the franking privilege, as cash or check payments directly from such Senators, committees, or offices, or as reimbursement from the Financial Clerk of the Senate pursuant to certification by the Sergeant at Arms of charges to be made to such funds available to such Senators, committees, or offices for such postage, fees and charges shall be used by the Sergeant at Arms for payment to the United States Postal Service for such postage, fees, and charges.".

SEC. 6. On and after the date this Act becomes law, the Secretary of the Senate, subject to the approval of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, is authorized to provide up to $1,000,000 for capitalization purposes to the revolving fund established by the last paragraph under the heading "Contingent Expenses of the Senate" appearing under the heading "SENATE" in chapter XI of the Third Supplemental Appropriation Act, 1957 (2 U.S.C. 46a-1), by transferring to such revolving fund any funds available from any Senate appropriation account, with respect to which he has disbursement authority, for the fiscal year in which the transfer is made (or for any preceding fiscal year) or which have been made available until expended; and any moneys so transferred shall be available for use in like manner and to the same extent as the moneys in such revolving fund which were not transferred thereto pursuant to this section.

SEC. 7. The Secretary of the Senate may enter into an agreement with the Secretary of Education to provide closed captioning of the Senate floor proceedings, subject to the approval of the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration. The Senate authorizes the Secretary of Education to have access to the audio and video broadcast of the Senate floor proceedings for the purpose of captioning. Such funds as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section are authorized to be paid from the appropriation account for "Miscellaneous Items" within the contingent fund of the Senate.

SEC. 8. (1) The Secretary of the Senate and the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate are authorized to acquire goods, services, or space from government agencies and units by agreement under the provisions of the Economy Act, 31 U.S.C. 1535, and to make advance payments in conjunction therewith, if required by the providing agency or establishment.

(2) No advance payment may be made under paragraph (1) unless specifically provided for in the agreement. No agreement providing for advance payment may be entered into unless it contains a provision requiring the refund of any unobligated balance of the advance.

(3) No agreement may be entered into under paragraph (1) without the approval of the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration and the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

SEC. 9. The provisions of Senate Resolution 89, of the One Hundredth Congress, agreed to January 28, 1987, are hereby enacted into law, effective on the date such Senate Resolution 89 was agreed to.

SEC. 10. The second proviso, under the headings "SENATE" and "OFFICE OF THE CHAPLAIN", of the Legislative Branch Appropriation Act, 1970 (Public Law 91-145) is amended by striking out "a secretary" and inserting in lieu thereof "such employees as he deems appropriate, except that the amount which may be paid for any fiscal year as gross compensation for personnel in such Office for any fiscal year shall not exceed $147,000".

SEC. 11. (a) For purposes of subchapters I and II of chapter 37 of title 31, United States Code (relating to claims of or against the United States Government), the United States Senate shall be considered to be a legislative agency (as defined in section 3701(a)(4) of such title), and the Secretary of the Senate shall be deemed to be the head of such legislative agency.

(b) Regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Senate pursuant to section 3716 of title 31, United States Code, shall not become effective until they are approved by the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration.

TITLE I—CONGRESSIONAL OPERATIONS

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SEC. 101. Of the amounts appropriated for fiscal year 1990 for salaries and expenses of the House of Representatives, such amounts as may be necessary may be transferred among the headings "HOUSE LEADERSHIP OFFICES", "MEMBERS' CLERK HIRE", "COMMITTEE EMPLOYEES", "CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF THE HOUSE (STANDING COMMITTEES, SPECIAL AND SELECT)", "CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF THE HOUSE (ALLOWANCES AND EXPENSES)", and "SALARIES, OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES", upon approval of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 102. (a) One additional employee is authorized for each of the following:

(1) the House Democratic Caucus;

(2) the House Republican Conference;

(3) the Minority Leader; and

(4) the Chief Deputy Majority Whip.

(b) The annual rate of pay for the positions established under subsection (a) shall not exceed the annual rate of pay payable from time to time for level V of the Executive Schedule under section 5316 of title 5, United States Code.

SEC. 103. (a) Section 104(a) of the Legislative Branch Appropriations Act, 1987 (as incorporated by reference in section 101(j) of Public Law 99-500 and Public Law 99-591) (2 U.S.C. 117e) is amended—

(1) by striking out "SEC. 104. (a)" and inserting in lieu thereof "SEC. 104. (a)(1)";

(2) by striking out the last sentence; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (1), as so redesignated by paragraph (1) of this subsection, the following new paragraphs:

"(2) If disposal in accordance with paragraph (1) is not feasible because of age, location, condition, or any other relevant factor, the Clerk may donate the equipment to the government of a State, to a local government, or to an organization that is described in section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 and exempt from tax under section 501(a) of such Code. A donation under this paragraph—

"(A) shall be at no cost to the Government; and

"(B) may be made only if the used equipment has no recoverable value because disposal in accordance with paragraph (1), under the most favorable terms available to the Government, would result in a loss to the Government.

"(3) The Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives shall have authority to prescribe regulations to carry out this subsection.

"(4) As used in this section—

"(A) the term 'State' means a State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and a territory or possession of the United States; and

"(B) the term 'used equipment' means such used or surplus equipment (including furniture and motor vehicles) as the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives may prescribe by regulation.".

(b) The first section of the Act entitled "An Act to authorize the disposition of certain office equipment and furnishings, and for other purposes", approved October 20, 1974 (2 U.S.C. 59a), is repealed.

(c) The amendments made by subsection (a) and the repeal made by subsection (b) shall take effect on October 1, 1989.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE REVOLVING FUND

The Government Printing Office is hereby authorized to make such expenditures, within the limits of funds available and in accord with the law, and to make such contracts and commitments without regard to fiscal year limitations as provided by section 104 of the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, as may be necessary in carrying out the programs and purposes set forth in the budget for the current fiscal year for the "Government Printing Office revolving fund": Provided, That not to exceed $2,500 may be expended on the certification of the Public Printer in connection with official representation and reception expenses: Provided further, That during the current fiscal year the revolving fund shall be available for the hire of twelve passenger motor vehicles: Provided further, That expenditures in connection with travel expenses of the advisory councils to the Public Printer shall be deemed necessary to carry out the provisions of title 44, United States Code: Provided further, That the revolving fund shall be available for services as authorized by 5 U.S.C. 3109 but at rates for individuals not to exceed the per diem rate equivalent to the rate for grade GS-18: Provided further, That the revolving fund shall be available to acquire needed land, located in Northwest D.C., which is adjacent to the present Government Printing Office, and is bounded by Massachusetts Avenue and the southern property line of the Government Printing Office, between North Capitol Street and First Street. The land to be purchased is identified as Parcels 45-D, 45-E, 45-F, and 47-A in Square 625, and includes the alleys adjacent to these parcels, and G Street, N.W. from North Capitol Street to First Street: Provided further, That the revolving fund and the funds provided under the paragraph entitled "Office of Superintendent of Documents, Salaries and Expenses" together may not be available for the full-time equivalent employment of more than 5,000 workyears: Provided further, That the revolving fund shall be available for expenses not to exceed $500,000 for the development of plans and design of a multi-purpose facility: Provided further, That notwithstanding the limitations of 5 U.S.C., section 5901(a), as amended, the cost of uniforms furnished or allowances paid for uniforms to each uniformed special policeman appointed under the authority of 44 U.S.C. 317, shall not exceed $400 during the first year in which the employee is required to wear a prescribed uniform: Provided further, That the revolving fund shall not be used to administer any flexible or compressed work schedule which applies to any manager or supervisor in a position the grade or level of which is equal to or higher than GS-15, nor to any employee involved in the in-house production of printing and binding: Provided further, That expenses for attendance at meetings shall not exceed $95,000.

GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

(TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

For necessary expenses of the General Accounting Office, including not to exceed $7,000 to be expended on the certification of the Comptroller General of the United States in connection with official representation and reception expenses; services as authorized by 5 U.S.C. 3109 but at rates for individuals not to exceed the per diem rate equivalent to the rate for grade GS-18; hire of one passenger motor vehicle; advance payments in foreign countries in accordance with 31 U.S.C. 3324; benefits comparable to those payable under sections 901(5), 901(6) and 901(8) of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 (22 U.S.C. 4081(5), 4081(6) and 4081(8), respectively); and under regulations prescribed by the Comptroller General of the United States, rental of living quarters in foreign countries and travel benefits comparable with those which are now or hereafter may be granted single employees of the Agency for International Development, including single Foreign Service personnel assigned to A.I.D. projects, by the Administrator of the Agency for International Development—or his designee—under the authority of section 636(b) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2396(b)); $364,720,000: Provided, That an additional amount of not to exceed $5,564,000 is made available without fiscal year limitation from the fund established pursuant to 31 U.S.C. 782 (as added by Public Law 100-545, October 28, 1988): Provided further, That this appropriation and appropriations for administrative expenses of any other department or agency which is a member of the Joint Financial Management Improvement Program (JFMIP) shall be available to finance an appropriate share of JFMIP costs as determined by the JFMIP, including but not limited to the salary of the Executive Director and secretarial support: Provided further, That this appropriation and appropriations for administrative expenses of any other department or agency which is a member of the National Intergovernmental Audit Forum or a Regional Intergovernmental Audit Forum shall be available to finance an appropriate share of Forum costs as determined by the Forum, including necessary travel expenses of non-Federal participants. Payments hereunder to either the Forum or the JFMIP may be credited as reimbursements to any appropriation from which costs involved are initially financed: Provided further, That to the extent that funds are otherwise available for obligation, agreements or contracts for the removal of asbestos, and renovation of the building and building systems (including the heating, ventilation and air conditioning system, electrical system and other major building systems) of the General Accounting Office Building may be made for periods not exceeding five years: Provided further, That this appropriation and appropriations for administrative expenses of any other department or agency which is a member of the American Consortium on International Public Administration (ACIPA) shall be available to finance an appropriate share of ACIPA costs as determined by the ACIPA, including any expenses attributable to membership of ACIPA in the International Institute of Administrative Sciences: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be available to finance a portion, not to exceed $50,000, of the costs of the Governmental Accounting Standards Board: Provided further, That $100,000 of this appropriation shall be available for the expenses of planning the triennial Congress of the International Organization of Supreme Audit Institutions (INTOSAI) to be hosted by the United States General Accounting Office in Washington, D.C., in 1992, to the extent that such expenses cannot be met from the trust authorized below: Provided further, That the General Accounting Office is authorized to solicit and accept contributions (including contributions from INTOSAI), to be held in trust, which shall be available without fiscal year limitation for the planning, administration, and such other expenses as the Comptroller General deems necessary to act as the sponsor of the aforementioned triennial Congress of INTOSAI. Monies in the trust not to exceed $10,000 shall be available upon the request of the Comptroller General to be expended for the purposes of the trust.

TITLE III—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 301. No part of the funds appropriated in this Act shall be used for the maintenance or care of private vehicles, except for emergency assistance and cleaning as may be provided under regulations relating to parking facilities for the House of Representatives issued by the Committee on House Administration and for the Senate issued by the Committee on Rules and Administration.

SEC. 302. No part of any appropriation contained in this Act shall remain available for obligation beyond the current fiscal year unless expressly so provided herein.

SEC. 303. Whenever any office or position not specifically established by the Legislative Pay Act of 1929 is appropriated for herein or whenever the rate of compensation or designation of any position appropriated for herein is different from that specifically established for such position by such Act, the rate of compensation and the designation of the position, or either, appropriated for or provided herein, shall be the permanent law with respect thereto: Provided, That the provisions herein for the various items of official expenses of Members, officers, and committees of the Senate and House, and clerk hire for Senators and Members shall be the permanent law with respect thereto.

SEC. 304. The expenditure of any appropriation under this Act for any consulting service through procurement contract, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 3109, shall be limited to those contracts where such expenditures are a matter of public record and available for public inspection, except where otherwise provided under existing law, or under existing Executive order issued pursuant to existing law.

SEC. 305. (a) The Architect of the Capitol, in consultation with the heads of the agencies of the legislative branch, shall develop an overall plan for satisfying the telecommunications requirements of such agencies, using a common system architecture for maximum interconnection capability and engineering compatibility. The plan shall be subject to joint approval by the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate, and, upon approval, shall be communicated to the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate. No part of any appropriation in this Act or any other Act shall be used for acquisition of any new or expanded telecommunications system for an agency of the legislative branch, unless, as determined by the Architect of the Capitol, the acquisition is in conformance with the plan, as approved.

(b) As used in this section—

(1) the term "agency of the legislative branch" means, the Office of the Architect of the Capitol, the Botanic Garden, the General Accounting Office, the Government Printing Office, the Library of Congress, the Office of Technology Assessment, and the Congressional Budget Office; and

(2) the term "telecommunications system" means an electronic system for voice, data, or image communication, including any associated cable and switching equipment.

SEC. 306. (a) Hereafter, notwithstanding the applicable statutes described in subsection (b), an agency of the legislative branch to which those statutes apply is authorized to use telecommunications systems and services provided by the Architect of the Capitol or the House of Representatives or the Senate under the approved plan required by section 305 of Public Law 100-202 (101 Stat. 1329-308) if such systems and services—

(1) have been acquired competitively; and

(2) have been determined by the Architect of the Capitol to be at least equal in quality to, and not greater in cost than, the systems and services available under the procurement conducted by the Administrator of General Services known as "FTS2000".

(b) The applicable statutes described in this subsection are—

(1) section 111 of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949; and

(2) the Treasury, Postal Service and General Government Appropriations Act of 1990.

(c) As used in this section, the term "agency of the legislative branch" means the office of the Architect of the Capitol, the Botanic Garden, the General Accounting Office, the Government Printing Office, the Library of Congress, the Office of Technology Assessment, and the Congressional Budget Office.

SEC. 307. The pay for the positions described in section 308(b) of the Legislative Branch Appropriations Act, 1988, as contained in section 101(i) of Public Law 100-202—

(1) shall be subject to any applicable adjustment during fiscal year 1990 under, or by reference to any applicable adjustment during fiscal year 1990 under, subchapter I of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code; and

(2) with respect to the position of Assistant Architect of the Capitol, shall be subject to any recommendation of the President that, pursuant to section 225 of the Federal Salary Act of 1967 (2 U.S.C. 351 et seq.), takes effect during fiscal year 1990.

SEC. 308. (a) None of the funds appropriated for fiscal year 1990 by this Act or any other law may be obligated or expended by any entity of the executive branch for the procurement from commercial sources of any printing related to the production of Government publications (including forms), unless such procurement is by or through the Government Printing Office.

(b) Subsection (a) does not apply to (1) individual printing orders costing not more than $1,000, if the work is not of a continuing or repetitive nature, (2) printing for the Central Intelligence Agency, the Defense Intelligence Agency, or the National Security Agency, or (3) printing from commercial sources that is specifically authorized by law or is of a kind that has been routinely procured by or through the Government Printing Office.

(c) As used in this section, the term "printing" means the process of composition, platemaking, presswork, binding, and microform, and the end items of such processes.

SEC. 309. Section 309(a) of title 44, United States Code, is amended by striking out "not to exceed $3,000 in any fiscal year" after "attendance at meetings".

[SEC. 310. There is established, as a joint office of Congress, the Special Services Office, which (under the supervision and control of a board, to be known as the Special Services Board, comprised of the Clerk of the House of Representatives, the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate, and the Librarian of Congress) shall provide special services to Members of Congress, and to officers, employees, and guests of Congress. In the operation of the Office, the Board may provide for not more than 6 employees. The Office and the Board shall be subject to the oversight of the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate, which, acting jointly, shall have approval authority over employee positions, appointments, and pay, with respect to the Office.]

SEC. [311] 310. Such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 1990 pay raises for programs funded by this Act shall be absorbed within the levels appropriated in this Act.

SEC. [312] 311. Section 6121(1) of title 5, United States Code, is amended by inserting "the Government Printing Office," after "military department,". Also, section 6133(c) of such title is amended by inserting "(1)" after "(c)"; and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph: "(2) With respect to employees in the Government Printing Office, the authority granted to the Office of Personnel Management under this subchapter shall be exercised by the Public Printer."

SEC. [313] 312. (a) The first section of House Resolution 21, Ninety-Ninth Congress, agreed to December 11, 1985, as enacted into permanent law by section 103 of the Legislative Branch Appropriations Act, 1987 (as incorporated by reference in section 101(j) of Public Law 99-500 and Public Law 99-591) (40 U.S.C. 184b) is amended by striking out "educationally enriching child care" and all that follows through the end of the section, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "educationally enriching child care—

"(1) for children of Members, officers, employees, and support personnel of the House of Representatives; and

"(2) if places are available after admission of all children who are eligible under paragraph (1), for children of Senators, children of officers and employees of the Senate, and children of employees of agencies of the legislative branch.".

(b) Section 4 of such resolution, as so enacted (40 U.S.C. 184e), is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by striking out the second sentence; and

(2) in the first sentence of subsection (b), by striking out "to make the reimbursements required by subsection (a) and".

(c) Section 5 of such resolution, as so enacted (40 U.S.C. 184f), is amended—

(1) in the matter before paragraph (1), by striking out ", the term"; and

(2) by striking out paragraphs (1) through (3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(1) the term 'employee of the House of Representatives' means an employee whose pay is disbursed by the Clerk of the House of Representatives;

"(2) the term 'employee of the Senate' means an employee whose pay is disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate;

"(3) the term 'Member' means, with respect to the House of Representatives, a Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress;

"(4) the term 'agency of the legislative branch' means the Office of the Architect of the Capitol, the Botanic Garden, the General Accounting Office, the Government Printing Office, the Library of Congress, the Office of Technology Assessment, the Congressional Budget Office, and the Copyright Royalty Tribunal; and

"(5) the term 'support personnel' means, with respect to the House of Representatives, any employee of a credit union or of the Architect of the Capitol, whose principal duties are to support the functions of the House of Representatives.".

[SEC. 314. Section 506(a)(3) of the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1973 (2 U.S.C. 58(a)(3)) is amended to read as that section was in effect on September 30, 1988.

[SEC. 315. (a) No part of the funds appropriated in this Act may be used in the mailing of any mail matter by a Senator or Member of the House of Representatives as franked mail under section 3210(d) of title 39, United States Code

[(1) if, in the then-current calendar year, the total number of pieces of mail mailed by such Senator or Member as franked mail under such section 3210(d) is equal to or greater than the amount described in subsection (b); or

[(2) to the extent that such mailing would cause the total number of pieces of mail mailed by such Senator or Member as franked mail under such section 3210(d) in the then-current calendar year to exceed the amount described in subsection (b).

[(b) The amount under this subsection is, for any calendar year, two-thirds the maximum amount established under section 3210(d)(5) of title 39, United States Code, with respect to Senators or Members (as applicable) as of July 31, 1989.

[(c) For purposes of subsection (a), mail matter mailed by a Senator or Member shall not be counted if it would not be counted in applying any limitation under section 3210(d)(5) of title 39, United States Code, applicable with respect to such Senator of Member.

[(d) For purposes of this section, the term "Member of the House of Representatives" or "Member" means a Member of the House of Representatives, a Delegate to the House of Representatives, and the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico.

[SEC. 316. None of the funds made available by this Act shall be used for any mass mailing of franked mail by a Member of Congress, or a Member-elect to Congress, which would be in violation of section 3210(a)(6) of title 39, United States Code, if, for purposes of section 3210(a)(6), such mailing were considered to have been mailed—

[(1) on the date as of which it is postmarked; or

[(2) if the mail matter is of a type which is not customarily postmarked, on the date as of which it would have been postmarked if it were of a type customarily postmarked.

[SEC. 317. (a) No part of the funds appropriated in this Act may be used to establish or maintain any officer in the United States Capitol as a personal office of a Member.

[(b) For purposes of this section, the term "Member" means a United States Senator, a Member of the House of Representatives, a Delegate to the House of Representatives, and the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico.]

SEC. [318] 313. No department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States receiving appropriated funds under this Act for fiscal year 1990, shall obligate or expend any such funds, unless such department, agency, or instrumentality has in place, and will continue to administer in good faith, a written policy designed to ensure that all of its work places are free from the illegal use, possession, or distribution of controlled substances (as defined in the Controlled Substances Act) by the officers and employees of such department, agency, or instrumentality.

SEC. 314. Effective in the case of this act and any subsequent Act making appropriations for the Legislative Branch, for purposes of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (Public Law 99-177), as amended, the accounts under the general heading "Senate" shall be considered to be one appropriation account and one "program, project, and activity".

SEC. 315. (a) The Senate Committee on Rules and Administration and the House Commission on Congressional Mailing Standards shall prescribe for their respective Houses rules and regulations governing any franked mail. Such rules and regulations shall include an allocation among Senators and among Members of the House of Representatives of the amount appropriated for the Senate and the House, respectively, for official mail. The costs for postage for such franked mail mailed by or for a Senator or a Member in excess of the amount of his allocation shall be charged to such Senator or Member and shall be paid by him (in the case his allocation is from the Senate) in accordance with rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration, and (in the case his allocation is from the House) in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the House Commission on Congressional Mailing Standards.

(b)(A) The total number of pieces of mail which may be mailed as franked mail under section 3210(d) of title 39, United States Code, during any calendar year by a Senator entitled to mail franked mail may not exceed an amount equal to two multiplied by the number of addresses two which such mail may be delivered in the State from which the Senator was elected (as determined on the basis of the most recent statistics, from the United States Postal Service, available prior to such calendar year). Any mail matter which relates solely to a notice of appearance or a scheduled itinerary of a Senator or such Senator's personal staff representative in the State from which such Senator was elected shall not count against the limitation set forth in the preceding sentence.

(B) The total number of pieces of mail which may be mailed as franked mail under section 3210(d) of title 39, United States Code, during any calendar year by a Member of the House of Representatives entitled to mail franked mail may not exceed an amount equal to two multiplied by the number of addresses to which such mail may be delivered in the area from which the Member was elected (as determined on the basis of the most recent statistics, from the United States Postal Service, available prior to such calendar year). Any mail matter which relates solely to a notice of appearance or a scheduled itinerary of a Member of such Member's personal staff representative in the area from which such Member was elected shall not count against the limitation set forth in the preceding sentence.

(c)(A) Two weeks after the close of each calendar quarter, or as soon as practicable thereafter, the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate shall send to each Senator a statement of the cost of postage and paper and of the other operating expenses incurred as a result of mass mailings processed for such Senator during such quarter. The statement shall separately identify the cost of postage and paper and other costs, and shall distinguish the costs attributable to newsletters and all other mass mailings. The statement shall also include the total cost per capita in the State. A compilation of all such statements shall be sent to the Committee on Rules and Administration. A summary tabulation of such information shall be included in the semiannual Report of the Secretary of the Senate. Such summary tabulation shall set forth for each Senator the following information: the Senator's name, the total number of pieces of mass-mail mailed during the quarter, the total cost of such mail, and the cost of such mail divided by the total population of the State from which the Senator was elected.

(B) Two weeks after the close of each calendar quarter, or as soon as practicable thereafter, the House Commission on Congressional Mailing Standards shall send to each Member of the House of Representatives a statement of the cost of postage and paper and of the other operating expenses incurred as a result of mass mailings processed for such Member during such quarter. The statement shall separately identify the cost of postage and paper and other costs, and shall distinguish the costs attributable to newsletters and all other mass mailings. The statement shall also include the total cost per capita in the area from which such Member was elected. A compilation of all such statements shall be sent to the House Committee on House Administration. A summary tabulation of such information shall be inlcuded in the quarterly Report of the Clerk of the House. Such summary tabulations shall set forth for each Member of the following information: the Member's name, the total number of pieces of mass-mail mailed during the quarter, the total cost of such mail, and the cost of such mail divided by the total population of the area from which the Member was elected.

(d) Effective October 1, 1989, section 3216 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out "by a lump sum appropriation to the legislative branch" and inserting in lieu thereof "by appropriations for the official mail costs of the Senate and the House of Representatives".

SEC. 316. Section 3216(c) of title 39, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(c) Payment under subsection (a) or (b) of this section shall be deemed payment for all matter mailed under the frank and for all fees and charges due the Postal Service in connection therewith. If, at any time during a fiscal year, the Postal Service determines that the postage on and fees and charges in connection with matter mailed under the frank during that year have exhausted the full amount appropriated for payment to the Postal Service during that fiscal year under subsections (a) and (b) of this section, then no more franked mail may be accepted by the Postal Service during the remainder of that fiscal year unless additional funds are appropriated under subsection (a) or (b) of this section and paid to the Postal Service.".

SEC. 317. Section 3210(a)(6) of title 39, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A)(i) by striking cut "is mailed fewer" and inserting in lieu thereof "is postmarked fewer"; and

(2) in subparagraph (A)(ii)(II) by striking out "is mailed fewer" and inserting in lieu thereof "is postmarked fewer";

(3) in subparagraph (c) by striking out "is mailed fewer" and inserting in lieu thereof "is postmarked fewer"; and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(F) For purposes of subparagraphs (A) and (C) if mail matter is of a type which is not customarily postmarked, the date on which such matter would have been postmarked if it were of a type customarily postmarked shall apply.".

SEC. 318. (a) The Architect of the Capitol shall be appointed, for a term of 10 years, by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. An individual appointed to the office of Architect of the Capitol shall be eligible for reappointment to such office.

(b) The provisions of subsection (a) shall be effective in the case of appointments made to fill vacancies in the position of Architect of the Capitol which occur on or after the date of enactment of this Act. If no such vacancy occurs within the 6-year period which begins on the date of enactment of this Act, no individual shall, after such period, hold the position of Architect of the Capitol unless he is appointed in accordance with the provisions of subsection (a).

SEC. 319. Section 119 (a)(7) of Public Law 100-458 is amended to read as follows: "To make other necessary expenditures including official reception and representation expenses.".

This Act may be cited as the "Legislative Branch Appropriations Act, 1990".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, what is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is the first committee amendment of the pending bill on page 2.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the legislative appropriations bill for fiscal 1990 which the committee is recommending to the Senate contains a total of approximately $1,952,000,000 in new discretionary budget authority. This is below the Legislative Subcommittee's 302(b) allocation by $48 million and, according to the latest CBO scoring, is just within our outlay ceiling.

The bill is also about $70 million below the House in budget authority and outlays when considered on a comparable basis.

Increases over the enacted level for fiscal year 1989 total over $140 million in budget authority and $137 million in outlays which is a little over 7 percent. This is less than the 10.3-percent outlay growth allowed under the Budget Summit Agreement for domestic discretionary programs. So the legislative branch is pulling its share of the load and more in our effort to cut the Federal deficit.

IMPACT OF FUNDING CONSTRAINTS

It is important to keep in mind, too, that the preceding summit agreement limited total discretionary spending growth to 2 percent and required agencies, including those in the legislative branch, to pay for a 4.1 percent COLA within that amount. This hit the agencies funded in this bill especially hard, because their functions are personnel intensive. So they do not have much flexibility in adjusting to a reduction in real dollars while absorbing increases in mandatory pay costs. They can defer nonessential maintenance, equipment, and supplies. But this is typically only 20 to 25 percent of their budget. About the only thing they can realistically do is cut their staff.

The Library of Congress is a good example. Currently about 10 percent of its authorized positions are vacant for lack of funding. Over $14 million of the $35 million increase requested by the Library was to fill about half of these vacancies and keep its workforce intact. We were able to provide only about half of the requested increase, $16 million, and only 80 out of the 224 vacant positions.

SENATE

Mr. President, the amount provided for the Senate for fiscal year 1990 is $406 million. This represents an increase of $61,484,000 over the enacted level and is a reduction of $6,763,000 from the request. These comparisons, however, include $32 million for the Senate share of franking costs which was not reflected in the budget request. This is due to the fact that the committee has recommended the establishment of separate appropriations for the official mail costs of the Senate and House of Representatives. The net increase subtracting official mail costs for all Senate items is $29,484,000.

Within this amount, the committee has provided funding of $1 million to support closed captioning of Senate floor proceedings. Another $1,555,000 is to cover agency contributions as an employer to cover costs of civil service retirement, Federal employee group life insurance, Federal employee health insurance programs, and FICA. The remainder of the increase is accounted for in the main by inflation, salary and the additional costs associated with the continuing computerization of Senate operations.

AGENCY HIGHLIGHTS

Mr. President, a lot of people seem to think that the legislative branch appropriations bill just funds the salaries of Members of Congress and their staffs. That is just plain wrong. Many of the organizations funded in this bill not only provide support to the Congress; they also provide services that affect directly or indirectly every citizen of this Nation.

As I indicated, with the exception of the Architect of the Capitol most of the accounts in the legislative bill are for salaries and expenses. By and large, the increases we are providing for the agencies in the legislative branch cover their mandatory personnel costs, inflationary increases, and a few selected workload related requirements.

But I want to take a few moments here to talk about some of the substance that lies behind the numbers we are used to dealing with in the appropriations process. The organizations funded in this legislation—leaving aside the Congress itself—have very significant functions and responsibilities. And the record ought to be clear on that point.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

Let me begin with the Library of Congress. We are recommending a total of $260,661,000 along with authority to spend $13,839,000 in receipts for the Library.

Mr. President, the Library of Congress is not just a library for the Congress. It is in fact the world's premier library. It is the largest collection of knowledge accumulated anywhere in the world. Its foreign area collections—Russian, Asian, Hispanic, Middle and Far Eastern—are the largest outside their countries of origin. Its international law and American law collections number nearly 2 million.

I recently had occasion to view some of the music treasures in the Library's collections—the original manuscripts of a Brahms violin concerto, a piano concerto by Mozart with his writing on it, signed by him, and Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess." It is inspiring to view personally the works of these musical geniuses. And I have talked only about a small part of this library.

The Manuscript Division also houses the papers of 23 Presidents of the United States, the personal papers of a majority of our Chief Justices, the papers of leading American statesmen, literary and scientific figures, and other prominent figures in American history. Included in this collection, for example, is Thomas Jefferson's rough draft of the Declaration of Independence, with marginal notes by Benjamin Franklin and John Adams.

The task of preserving these irreplaceable treasures is truly formidable. But for the expertise and care of the Library staff, they would be lost forever to the ravages of time. The resources we provide the Library in this bill help to assure the conservation of these priceless artifacts of our culture—both for the millions of readers who view them each year and for succeeding generations. What are we providing is only the bare minimum.

Moreover, the Library of Congress reaches out to every State in the Nation in its multitude of national services. Our public, school, and university libraries depend on the Library of Congress' cataloging information in over 350 languages. It is estimated that libraries on this country save $360 million a year using the Library's cataloging system—more than the entire appropriation to the Library of Congress. There is currently a growing backlog in cataloging new materials. This costs other libraries money because, if the Library of Congress has not yet catalogued an item, they have to do it. The recommended bill includes funding to fill vacancies in this area in order to reduce this arrearage.

The National Library Service for the Blind and Physically Handicapped circulates 20 million talking books and books in braille to more than 700,000 readers through regional libraries in the 50 States and in the territories. These materials open the doors to realms of learning, culture, and experience that might otherwise remain permanently closed to sight-impaired persons. Each of us, I am sure, have had experiences where people are not sighted read through these talking books. But for the Library of Congress, they would not be able to do that.

I do not need to elaborate, in this Chamber, upon the value of the work performed by the Congressional Research Service [CRS]. CRS provides the kind of quick response analysis and information for which there is simply no substitute in the legislative process. CRS, of course, also embodies an accumulation of long-term, institutional expertise across the entire spectrum of policy and program. In addition, CRS is especially adept at helping our staffs respond to requests and inquiries from our constituents and they do it quickly.

Today, I am sure each of us has staff members working on requests from our constituents that are extremely important to those constituents, and our staffs are able to get a quick response because of the CRS. We tend to take them for granted and we should not.

The Copyright Office, which is also a part of the Library, processes over 600,000 claims to copyright a year and is the central register for all of this countries' creative works. The importance of this function goes well beyond the encouragement of artistic creativity per se. Intellectual property rights are increasingly a key factor in our trade policy. The experts at the Copyright Office have a major role to play in this arena, where the outcomes will have an impact on our economic fortunes for years to come.

As the distinguished chairman of our committee, Sentor BYRD, observed in one of his exceptional addresses on the history of the Senate:

> The enlightenment of the people has been the abiding concern of the Congress and of the Library throughout our history. * * * True to this ideal, the Library has become, in the words of the American Council of Learned Societies, "an indispensable instrument on the American continent for the promotion of learning and the increase of knowledge" taking its place among the greatest libraries of civilization, past and present.

The only thing that I would add to the words of the President pro tempore of the Senate, the chairman of this committee, is that I believe the Library of Congress is the greatest library in the history of civilization.

In sum, the Library of Congress is a genuine national treasure and we owe it to all Americans to make the investments necessary to assure its continued preeminance.

GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE

Mr. President, another extremely important organization funded in this bill is the General Accounting Office. The GAO provides valuable services not only to Congress but to the entire Government. GAO staff investigate and report on the use of public funds by the executive departments; they settle claims and rule on questions related to disbursement of Federal funds; they set accounting principles and standards for the Federal Government to follow; they evaluate Federal programs and report to Congress on the effectiveness and efficiency of Government operations.

The GAO is one of those few agencies that has measurable financial benefits. In 1988 GAO contributed to legislative and executive branch actions that resulted in administrative, management, and programming improvements worth billions of dollars. By GAO's estimates, these savings represented about $72 in financial benefits for every $1 we appropriated GAO.

GAO directly assists the Congress in exercising its oversight responsibilities. The agency supports committees and individual Members by gathering information and analyzing data on the entire spectrum of public policy issues. Recent reports and ongoing investigations center on such controversial matters as the budget process, the deteriorating financial condition of depository institutions, military weapons acquisition programs, nuclear safety and waste disposal, security problems in Federal information systems, and the continuing threats to our Nation's public health and environment.

In fiscal year 1990 we are recommending $364,720,000 to finance GAO's activities. This is $17,381,000 more that the fiscal year 1989 base but will require GAO to absorb 100 percent of the fiscal year 1990 pay raise and funds about 85 percent of their uncontrollable cost increases. It is a very lean budget, but one that the committee believes will adequately fund essential operations of the agency while permitting them to proceed with important initiatives.

OFFICE OF TECHNOLOGY ASSESSMENT

Science and technology figure prominently in most of the questions facing Congress today. Yet scientific experts disagree on the answers and interested parties making conflicting claims. The Office of Technology Assessment [OTA] helps chart a course through these complex areas of disagreement with its impartial assessment reports, technical memoranda, and testimony. During the last year, OTA has examined many short- and long-term consequences of technological development: from monitoring the Nevada nuclear test site, to maintaining the defense technology base; from managing municipal solid waste, to climate change; from adolescent health, to the potential neurological effects of toxics in the environment.

OTA's governing body—the Congressional Technology Assessment Board—makes sure the agency remains responsive to our overall needs. Importantly, OTA convenes a panel of experts and interest group from outside Government to advise each assessment project team, which assures Congress of access to the best possible scientific and technical information, written up in a way easily understood by laymen. OTA's products are valuable not only to Congress, but also to the public whose economic and physical well being may be at stake in the policy issues created by technological and scientific change.

The recommended bill contains $19,000,000 for OTA activities in fiscal 1990.

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE

The Congressional Budget Office is a nonpartisan analytic organization that furnishes the Congress with information and analyses on issues relating to the U.S. economy, the Federal budget, and Federal programs. The committee bill includes $19,580,000 for CBO.

CBO does not make specific policy recommendations, but presents the Congress with options and alternatives in a wide range of subject areas, all of which have economic and budget impact. CBO's annual analysis of the President's budget and its semiannual updates of the budget and economic outlook are of particular value to the overall work of this committee. But CBO studies help to inform policymaking in almost every domain, from defense and national security to agriculture and human resources. As my colleagues know, the uncertainties of fiscal and monetary policy in the emerging world economic order make the services provided by the CBO all the more critical to our work here in the Senate.

ARCHITECT OF THE CAPITOL

The first Architect of the Capitol, Dr. William Thornton, was appointed by President George Washington in 1793 after his design for the Capitol Building was selected in a national competition. His responsibilities were confined to planning and supervising the construction of the new Capitol Building.

In the intervening years, the role of the Architect has expanded to reflect the development of the physical infrastructure of the Congress and the other public institutions located near the Capitol Square. He is now responsible for the supervision of all structural and mechanical improvements, additions, alterations, and repairs to:

The Capitol Building and surrounding Grounds; Senate office buildings; House office buildings; Library of Congress buildings and grounds; U.S. Supreme Court building and grounds; Senate garage; Robert A. Taft Memorial; and U.S. Botanic Garden.

These facilities, aside from their intrinsic historical and architectural significance, constitute invaluable capital investments. Their care, maintenance, and enhancement is a public trust of the highest order.

The bill includes $123,576,000 to support the Architect's activities for the coming fiscal year. I have here a sheet summarizing the major changes from the fiscal 1989 appropriation base included in this funding and ask unanimous consent that it be inserted in the RECORD as if read at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Architect of the Capitol, Fiscal Year 1990 Increases, Senate Bill

Design for additional elevators	600,000
Electrical system renovations and modernization, RSOB	1,000,000
Frequency inverters for VAV fans, HSOB	93,000

Mr. REID. Now, Mr. President, last year we deferred funding for improvements to the Senate subway system pending final selection of a design and formulation of a reliable cost estimate. This year, we have approved $3 million of the $10 million requested contingent upon the selection of an appropriate final design and financing plan for the project. These funds will not be released until the committee is fully satisfied with respect to the scope, costs, and benefits of the proposed system and financing plan.

At the same time, it is clear that the Hart-Dirksen-Capitol subway needs to be renovated and modernized as soon as it is practicable to do so. The cars are obsolete and costly to maintain. The manufacturer has long since gone out of business. So repair parts have to be specially machined. And service is poor to inadequate, especially during periods of heavy demand and especially for the public. Moreover, it is estimated that a replacement system would save about $100,000 a year in operating and maintenance costs.

The bill also includes a provision changing the terms of the appointment and tenure in the Office of the Architect. Currently, the Architect is appointed by the President without participation by the Congress but is, of course, an officer of the legislative branch. His term, moreover, is unlimited. Section 318 of the bill would require Senate confirmation of persons nominated to the Office of the Architect of the Capitol and establish a term of 10 years. These changes would take effect in 6 years from the date of enactment or whenever the Office next becomes vacant.

This arrangement, I believe, better reflects the institutional status of the Architect as an officer of the legislative branch and should make the lines of accountability in the performance of his duties much less ambiguous.

CAPITOL POLICE

Mr. President, it has been my experience that the Capitol Police are among the best trained law enforcement officers in the country. The Federal Law Enforcement Training Center in Glynco, GA, provides top-notch training for Federal officers and the result of this training is reflected in the performance of the Capitol Police in providing security in the Capitol, surrounding grounds, and office buildings.

During the past several years, Members of Congress, their staffs, and the general public have been forced to reckon with an increasingly violent environment. For those of us who have been here in the Capitol for a number of years, it is almost unbelievable to see the change that has taken place in how you get to the Capitol and into the Capitol complex.

With the rise of terrorism worldwide, Capitol Hill has become increasingly aware of the dangers posed by potential bombings and other threats of peace and good order. The Capitol Police have responded by developing additional capabilities to deal with these risks. These include the creation of canine units for detection of explosives, formation of a multifunctional Containment Emergency Response Team [CERT], establishment of an offsite delivery facility, and the provision of enhanced protective details.

Too often, we as Members of Congress and the people who work in this great Capitol complex, take the services provided by the Capitol Police for granted. They are here long before and long after our working days are over—24 hours a day, 7 days a week. The Capitol Police Force now patrols a 40-block, 200-acre area which includes 20 buildings. Policing an area of this character poses distinctive problems. A delicate balance has to be struck between maintaining adequate security and public order and preserving the constitutional rights of all citizens to peaceable assembly and free political expression.

Over the last year the Capitol Police have provided law enforcement coverage for 226 public demonstrations, 1,493 official visits by foreign dignitaries and others, and 192 special events such as the bicentennial celebration on the west front. During the last year over 1,800 items of contraband were seized, an increase of over 50 percent of the previous year. And 415 threats and nuisance contacts directed toward Members of Congress were investigated. Arrests were up 105 percent over the previous year of 1988.

During my time as a law student at George Washington University, I worked as a member of the Capitol Police Force, a full-time member of the Capitol Police Force. And with my limited experience things have become much more difficult since I was a member of the Capitol Police Force. I am convinced that they have responsibilities that are really awesome. I recognize that these people are alert, well trained, and ready for crisis at any moment. Unpredictable threats to an officer's personal safety are always possible and to the personal safety of the people that work in this Capitol complex.

Mr. President, I want to commend the Capitol Police for their dedicated and effective work and assure them they have the appreciation and support of the Senate, and I am certain that of the House as well.

The bill before the Senate contains a total of $58 million approximately to finance the Capitol Police in fiscal year 1990. This will support a total of 1,262 sworn officers and 81 civilians. Additionally, the legislation provides for a study to be conducted by the General Accounting Office aimed at facilitating the consultation of the House and Senate divisions of this force.

MAIL PROVISIONS

An important provision of this bill relates to mail. And with respect to items considered by the House and the Senate, the major difference in funding is in official mail costs.

The House bill contains $124.5 million for official mail, an increase of $70.6 million over last year. The recommended bill cuts the total appropriation to $80 million. Our bill does that. This would mean, assuming the Congress keeps mailing volumes within the limits of funding, a cutback in the amount of mail currently sent out. But it provides plenty of money for what is actually necessary to keep in touch with our constituents. And given the alternatives, there's no better place to tighten our belts a notch or two than here. We simply do not need to continue mailing out more and more material and piling up higher and higher costs.

That has clearly been the trend. From 1975 to 1988, the cost of the frank has exploded from about $36 million to $113.4 million. During that same time—lest anyone think this is purely a result of postage increases and inflation—the actual volume of mail sent has almost tripled—from 312.4 million pieces to 805 million pieces. We cannot afford to keep on going in this direction. The American taxpayers who foot the bill are not going to tolerate it. And they shouldn't.

What is more, continued growth in franking costs comes at the expense of higher priorities. We have some very valuable national assets funded in this bill. We are fortunate that the chairman of our committee also serves as cochairman of the U.S. Capitol Preservation Commission. He appreciates what a marvelous treasure the Capitol Building and complex is. We fund its essential maintenance in this bill. The same is true for the Library of Congress, which has no equal anywhere else in the world, or has it ever.

In an environment where real funding for domestic discretionary programs is declining, the care and preservation of this invaluable national patrimony is going to be difficult at best. In my judgment, it makes much better sense to put the mail monster on a serious diet. If we do not, we will in effect be using up a significant part of our national inheritance to feed him.

The bill includes a number of reforms that will enable us to accomplish this. The credit for these reforms—let me hasten to add—really belongs to several of my colleagues who have been involved with this issue for a long time. Senator EXON introduced a bill, S. 762, earlier this year, which contains many of the provisions we have incorporated in this bill. I have had a number of discussions with Senator EXON and he has written the subcommittee on the issue. We have benefited from his interest and advice.

Many of these same provisions were also included in Senate Resolution 98, which was reported by the Rules Committee under the leadership of Senator FORD and Senator STEVENS. So there is broad consensus in the Senate on how to deal with the problem.

Let me briefly summarize what we have in the bill in this regard.

First, we establish separate mail appropriations for the House and Senate. Since 1954, when the Congress first provided funds to reimburse the Postal Service for the costs of free or franked mail, the appropriation for mail costs has been a joint House-Senate item. Presumably, these funds were to cover the costs of the respective Houses on a more or less 50-50 basis. Half would be available for Senate mail expenses and half would be available for House mail expenses.

That, unfortunately, is not the way it has worked in practice. The House mail costs are typically a good deal more than half the amount provided. I have here a table comparing House and Senate expenditures for mail over the last decade. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOUSE AND SENATE EXPENDITURES FOR OFFICIAL MAIL, 1978–89

[Dollars in millions]

Fiscal year	Total	House		Senate
		Amount	Percent	Amount	Percent
1978	$48.9	$35.1	72	$13.8	28
1979	42.9	27.7	65	15.2	35
1980	61.9	43.4	70	18.5	30
1981	53.9	29.7	55	24.2	45
1982	100.0	59.9	60	40.1	40
1983	72.4	40.3	56	32.1	44
1984	111.0	67.3	61	43.6	39
1985	85.2	45.3	53	39.9	47
1986	95.9	60.4	63	35.5	37
1987	63.6	44.2	69	19.4	31
1988	113.4	77.9	69	35.5	31
1989 (6 mos)	26.5	19.6	74	7.0	26

Mr. REID. The House percentage share ranges from a low of 53 percent to a high of 72 percent. For fiscal 1988, the House incurred 69 percent of the cost of the frank, while Senate costs were 31 percent of the total.

These differences are, of course, obscured by the single joint appropriation. As a result, the Senate has received as much blame and criticism as the House for the soaring costs of franked mail. Worse yet, restraints imposed by the Senate on itself with respect to the use of the frank have not arrested the growth in mail costs. Instead, the House has in effect spent the savings and more as its volume of mail has continued uncontrolled expansion.

In 1987, for example, combined mail costs were held to $63.6 million, $27.8 million less than the amount appropriated for that year. This was due to the adoption of Senate reforms; for example, restricting mass mailing by Senate officers to an allocation, proportionate to population, of approximately half the amount appropriated and the sobering effect of the 1986 sequester on the mailing proclivities of the House.

The latter quickly wore off, however. And in fiscal 1988, when the amount appropriated was $82 million, House mail costs rose sharply to almost $78 million or 95 percent of the appropriation for that year. Senate costs for fiscal 1988 were $35.5 million or about 43 percent of the amount appropriated for that year. Combined mail costs for fiscal 1988 thus came to over $113 million, more than absorbing the $27.8 million carryover from 1987.

While this was going on, the fiscal 1989 legislative bill was in process. The conference committee on the bill, faced with the Summit Agreement 2 percent-ceiling on spending increases, assumed the availability of the fiscal 1987 carryover for mail and reduced the appropriation to $53.9 million. As a result, the allocation to Senators was sharply cutback to a level precluding even one Statewide mailing. In the meantime, of course, House mailings kept on increasing.

This was clearly intolerable. And so last February, the Senate abandoned its more restrictive approach in favor of guidelines paralleling those of the House. Then in April the Rules Committee reported Senate Resolution 98, mandating reforms in both Houses, all of which are included, with some modifications, in this bill.

This history, Mr. President, shows why we need separate appropriations for each House of the Congress. Each House should decide on the level of mailing this is necessary and then pay the bill within the amount appropriated. This bill includes $32 million for Senate mail costs and leaves $48 million in the old joint account for the House. This represents a 60-40 split between the two Houses. Although we believe the Senate is entitled to half the mail appropriation, we recognize that historically the House has utilized the frank more heavily. This division accommodates that reality.

Second, the bill would reduce the number of postal patron or unaddressed mass mailings allowed to two per year. The present limit is six. An amendment adopted on the House floor cuts the limit to four.

Third, the bill would require both Houses to establish procedures for allocating the amount appropriated for mail costs among individual Members and Senators. This will, assuming Members and Senators abide by their allocation, assure that franking costs do not exceed the appropriation.

Fourth, a related provision would require that, if a Senator or Member were to send more mail than his/her allocation would pay for, the excess cost would be charged to his or her personal office expense accounts. In other words, Senators and Members who exceed their allocation would have to make up the difference out of their office expense accounts and we would not increase the appropriation for mail.

Fifth, the bill would mandate public disclosure of the mass mail costs incurred by the individual members of both Houses of Congress. This information is already available with respect to mass mailings by Senators.

These provisions are all basically the same as those incorporated in the Exon bill and Senate Joint Resolution 98.

Finally, the bill also requires the Postal Service to stop receiving franked mail once the amount appropriated for a fiscal year is exhausted. As it is now, the Postal Service just continues sending out franked mail so long as Members and Senators drop it in the box, regardless of the costs and the amount appropriated to cover them. The Postal Service then bills the Congress for the arrearage and we either have to pay for it or postal ratepayers have to absorb it. This provision would stop this kind of open-ended entitlement spending for mail.

This provision that I just spoke about, the ending of the entitlement program, is an idea that Senator NICKLES first originated. That is now part of this bill. Senator NICKLES has worked very hard on this subcommittee. He has been very active. We have worked out a procedure where we confer with each other. There is not anything that goes out from the majority that the ranking member does not have his signature on. This is the procedure that we have established, and I think it has worked well.

Senator NICKLES has been tireless in his efforts to bring down the costs of this bill. This bill now before this body has had a number of rough drafts. Senator NICKLES has, on various occasions, said this is too much here, can we adjust this, and we have been able to work things out. I would like to also, in addition to giving my accolades to Senator NICKLES, thank the other members of the subcommittee, Senators MIKULSKI, ADAMS, and HATFIELD.

I spoke a lot about the Library of Congress. Senator HATFIELD is the patron of the Library of Congress, literally. He has a special interest in that beautiful facility, and there is not a meeting that comes up that relates to the Library of Congress that Senator HATFIELD is not involved in. In appreciate his encouragement and support this entire year.

All of these individuals that I have mentioned have been very helpful in the development of this legislation. I think that this bill strikes the right balance between squeezing every penny of the taxpayers' money and making the investments necessary to protect and enhance the national treasures that have been entrusted to our care.

I also, Mr. President, want to thank Senator BYRD, our distinguished chairman, for his assistance in moving this bill through the committee and to the floor. His commitment to the welfare of this institution needs no elaboration. His record—and his addresses on the subject—speak volumes. And we are extremely fortunate that the distinguished ranking member of the full committee, Senator HATFIELD, continues to serve on this subcommittee. His excellence and insight are invaluable.

Finally, I wish to acknowledge the contributions and hard work of the committee staff. Jerry L. Bonham is the majority clerk and Keith Kennedy serves the minority.

I would like to take just a minute publicly here, Mr. President, to extend my condolences to Keith, who, in a very tragic accident, very recently lost his father. Keith is somebody that we on this side of the aisle have come to depend on. Knowing him as I do, it is difficult to express my sorrow and sympathies to him in an adequate fashion, but I do that at this time.

There, in fact, in his bill has really been no partisan difference insofar as the staff of the committee is concerned. Both majority and minority serve the members. Keith, who is also minority staff director for the full committee, has done this bill for a number of years now by himself. His counsel and institutional memory are extremely valuable and the subcommittee has depended on his advice throughout this process.

Mark Walker has taken over for minority now that Keith is moving to defense and is also doing a credible job, and with Keith being his monitor and teacher, I am sure he will become outstanding. And of course none of the subcommittee's work would get done were it not for the support of the subcommittee's capable assistants Lula Joyce and Juanita Rilling.

I yield the floor.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I wish to thank and compliment the chairman of the committee, Senator REID, for the outstanding job that he has done in the committee and also in the presentation before the Senate. He has given a very good explanation of the bill that I certainly will not repeat.

Mr. President, I will just highlight a couple of comments that Senator REID mentioned. The legislative branch appropriation bill is $1.95 billion. That is an increase of $143 million over the amount that was enacted for this current fiscal year. It provides funding of $405 million for the Senate, $537 million for the House, $118 million in joint items, $47 million for the Congressional Research Service, $79 million for the Government Printing Office, and $213 million, as mentioned by Senator REID, for the Library of Congress, for a total appropriation of $1.95 billion.

Senator REID mentioned some of the reforms that were made in congressional mail. Congressional mail cost is probably the fastest growing entitlement in Government. It needs reform. It needs to be fixed. Unfortunately, the changes that were made earlier this year in the Senate made the Senate equally as bad as the House. And I think that was a serious mistake. It increased the number of mailings we could do in the Senate, basically from two to six. That was a mistake. In this bill we fixed not only the Senate, but we also fixed the House. We reduced the number of unsolicited mass mailings from six to two for both the House and the Senate. That makes sense.

We also, as Senator REID mentioned, require separate House and Senate accounts. So we have individual accounts. We have not had that in the past and obviously it has been needed. We also have allocation amongst Members. We have had that in the past in the Senate. They do not have it in the House. We need it in both Houses. But we even go further in the Senate bill. We say if a Member exceeds his allocation then the excess postage will be counted against his office expense account. So it has a self-governing mechanism that I think is very valuable, very important because we also put another provision in that said the Senate and the House could not spend any more for mail than the amount of money that is appropriated.

Now every other agency, every other business has that account but there was a little provision in the statutes that said, well, the Post Office would have to assume that whatever amount was appropriated was sufficient regardless of how much mail Congress mailed. And that was and has been abused by Congress, year after year after year.

And so now we have separate accounts between the House and Senate. We have allocation amongst Members and if a Member exceeds his allocation it is charged against his individual office expense. So that is very significant, very positive reform that needs to be made.

We also have additional reform that is needed and that is public disclosure. We now have public disclosure of mail expenses in the Senate. We do not have it in the House. We need it in both. So that is important.

We also strengthened a statute prohibiting mailing within 60 days of election. A lot of us are well aware of the fact that that has been abused election after election. We put a statutory prohibition against mailing within 60 days of an election. So I think that is positive.

I compliment Senator REID for his courage, really, in taking this on. A lot of people said, "Well, do not bother. It is just going to make the House mad." I think House Members and Senate Members are well aware of the fact of the growing cost and volume of mail that needs to be curbed. It has been abused. It has been abused by both sides by both parties. So now is the time for us to make some reforms. I think the reforms that are called for in this appropriation bill are long overdue and very much needed. I strongly support them and I hope that the Senate will concur, with the passage of this bill, with the reforms today.

Again I thank the chairman for his leadership and his courage in taking on the mail issue and several other difficult issues in the bill.

As the chairman has noted, the total amount recommended by the committee to the Senate is $1,952,136,200 in new budget authority, an increase of $143,680,000 over the amount enacted for the current fiscal year, but a substantial reduction from the amounts requested for fiscal year 1990. Our recommendations are within the allocation given the legislative branch subcommittee under section 302(b) of the Budget Act.

I would like to highlight a few items of particular interest to Senators:

OFFICIAL MAIL

As I have outlined, we are recommending sweeping changes to the official mail account. We recommend replacing the current joint account for official mail with separate accounts for the House and the Senate, with full disclosure by both houses, a reduction in the number of postal patron mailings, and a strict limit on the funds available. As Senators may know, there is a provision of the United States Code that requres the postal service to deliver congressional mail regardless of funds available to do so. We recommend repeal of that provision, so when the money runs out, the mail stops.

We believe these reforms will realize substantial savings, and we have recommended a reduction in the request for official mail costs from $134,731,000 to a total of $80 million—$48 million for the House and $32 million for the Senate, in keeping with historical trends in mail costs.

SENATE SUBWAY

The committee has recommended $3 million for replacement of the subway system between the Capitol and the Hart and Dirksen Senate Office Buildings. This is a reduction of $7 million from the request. The money may not be obligated, however, until the Committee on Rules and Administration has selected a final design and the Committee on Appropriations has approved the cost of that design. This project bears watching, Mr. President. Some of the proposals that have been submitted are far too costly. The present system only requires $26,000 a year in material costs to maintain. At that rate, we can keep the existing system going for a long, long time before reaching the cost of some of the proposed replacements.

CAPITOL SECURITY

The committee has not taken any action in this bill to proceed with implementation of the Capitol security plan. Funds requested by the Sergeant at Arms for additional personnel associated with that plan have been denied, and prior year funds have not been released. The Committee on Rules and Administration has not approved the security plan, and without their approval and that of the Committee on Appropriations and three committees in the other body, the plan cannot go forward.

ARCHITECT OF THE CAPITOL

The committee is making a number of recommendations relative to the office and work of the Architect of the Capitol, in addition to the recommendation relative to the Senate subway system, described earlier.

First, the committee is recommending a general provision establishing a fixed term of office for the Architect, and requiring Senate confirmation of the President's appointment to the office. The provision applies to appointments made to fill vacancies occurring after enactment of this bill. If no vacancy occurs within 6 years of enactment, then the incumbent in the office would be subject to confirmation.

The committee is recommending this provision to conform appointment to this office with that of other offices, such as Comptroller General.

BIOMEDICAL ETHICS BOARD

The committee is recommending $1.5 million for the Biomedical Ethics Board, a reduction of $859,000 from the request and the same as the House allowance. Funds may not be obligated, however, until the board selects its chairman and vice chairman and all vacancies on the advisory committee have been filled. I am a member of the Biomedical Ethics Board, and believe we should not proceed with the expenditure of any funds until these matters have been settled.

Section 7 of the committee bill authorizes the Secretary of the Senate to enter into an agreement with the Secretary of Education to provide for the closed captioning of Senate floor proceedings. This is long overdue and I trust the Secretary will move expeditiously once authority is granted.

Section 11 authorizes the Secretary of the Senate to withhold salaries due employees who have defaulted or are delinquent in the repayment of student loans.

Mr. President, I hope our colleagues will support the committee as we adopt this bill and go to conference with the other body.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, H.R. 3014, the legislative branch appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990, provides funding for the operation of the Congress, as well as the library of Congress, the Architect of the Capitol, and Congressional Budget Office, the Office of Technology Assessment, the Botanic Garden, and the Government Printing Office.

The bill as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations provides total obligational authority of $1,952,246,700. This represents a decrease of $257,636,500 from the President's budget estimate. With respect to the subcommittee 302(b) allocation, the bill as recommended is below the budget authority ceiling by $48 million and is at its outlay ceiling.

I commend Mr. REID, the chairman of the subcommittee, and I commend Mr. NICKLES, the ranking member for their excellent work in accommodating the priorities of the Senate with respect to congressional operations within the constraints of the budget agreement.

Mr. President, this is not one of the plum offerings when it comes to subcommittee assignments in the Appropriations Committee. I think we would all agree that it is one of the smaller subcommittees and the budget that it handles is of course probably the smallest of all.

But that is not to say that it is not important, because it provides the funding for the legislative branch, which is the people's branch, the branch that is mentioned in the very first article of the Constitution of the United States. And these two Senators and their colleagues on both sides of the aisle have tackled this assignment with just as much vigor and enthusiasm and dedication as if they were handling one of the larger appropriation bills. They are following the admonitions in the scriptures, which say, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."

I congratulate them and I express thanks, as chairman of the full Appropriations Committee, and on behalf of all the other members of the Appropriations Committee for their diligence and their dedication. I also want to thank them for the teamwork that they have demonstrated as they have worked this bill through subcommittee, through the full committee and here now presenting it on the floor of the Senate.

It is not a easy task, even though it is a very small committee.

So, my gratitude to them is rather feebly expressed, but I say thank you.

I also wish to extend my thanks to the staff of the subcommittee, Jerry Bonham, Lula Joyce, and for the minority, Keith Kennedy and Juanita Rilling. Their good work makes the task of the subcommittee members and the full committee members much less arduous.

And while I am thanking others, let me thank my ranking member on the Appropriations Committee, Senator HATFIELD, who is always most cooperative and courteous and understanding and helpful. He is a very able member of the committee, having been the chairman of the Appropriations Committee in time past, and I lean on him increasingly, which means I lean on him heavily, because I leaned on him from the time I became chairman of the committee. But even when I was majority leader, I always found that Senator HATFIELD was most helpful. And when I was minority leader and he was the chairman of that committee, he was always very understanding and agreeable in all of his dealings with me.

The managers have explained in much greater detail the contents of the measure as recommended to the Senate. I will not attempt to review those highlights so that we can get down to the business, now, of considering and passing the bill today.

The bill as reported by the Appropriations Committee, deserves the support of the Senate.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I take this opportunity to not only commend the chairman and the ranking member of this Subcommittee on Legislative Affairs in performing an extraordinary task. Because, as our chairman, Senator BYRD, has indicated, I do not know anyone on this committee who puts as their preference, as far as subcommittees are concerned, their No. 1 preference, this particular committee.

Yet, this function is vital to the operation of the Senate, the Congress as a whole, and many of its agencies.

I have heard a number of presentations over a number of years of my service on this committee but I want to say today I think I heard the most comprehensive presentation of any chairman and ranking member of the legislative Subcommittee on Appropriations. Former members have performed well. I think today was a stellar performance, showing the dedication, commitment, and the exhaustive amount of thinking and planning and processing that has gone into this report. I want to compliment the chairman and the ranking member for their outstanding contributions.

Mr. President, I think it is also important to note that on every one of these reports that the subcommittee has presented before the Senate, Senator BYRD, our chairman, is here, physically, to not only give support to these subcommittees but to also indicate his vast knowledge of the details with which all of the subcommittees are involved. I want to thank him for that kind of leadership for our full committee.

I would like to add my support in every way possible to our committee structure and to the committee's performance, and I want to say again how proud I am of this outstanding report today, indicating the hours and hours of effort, the time of hearings, the time of study, and the staff work that has made up this report. I think the Senate as a whole can with confidence adopt this report and we can be about the business of getting our 13 bills enacted in regular order before October 1, and avoid that most onerous of all Senate procedures known as a continuing resolution.

I want to thank the distinguished chairman for his kind remarks as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be temporarily set aside in order to consider an amendment to be offered by the junior Senator from the State of California [Mr. WILSON].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from California is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 698

Mr. WILSON. Thank you, Mr. President.

I thank the managers for their courtesy.

Mr. President, we have before us a legislative appropriations bill. Last night the President of the United States gave what he feels and what I quite agree is one of the more important speeches he will make. It had to do with the crisis in the United States of drug use. In that speech the President expressed a strategy and programs that are intended to implement that strategy.

By and large, the response of the Nation, I think, has been one of gratitude that, finally, belatedly, there seems to be leadership of the magnitude that is necessary to deal with this problem, which is not to say that everybody has been entirely happy with all aspects of the plan. That is too much to hope for, too much to expect.

The chief criticism that has been made on the part of some from the Congress is that, while they agree with the strategy in the main, they are concerned that what the President has proposed is not enough; that we are not spending enough. If we were to ask of the people who expressed that point of view, they might not be in agreement as to what it is they think is the most urgent of all of these compelling priorities. Is it treatment? Is it rehabilitation? Preventative education? More for interdiction? They might have a different view, but they think that there should be more spent.

Well, I do not necessarily argue with that, though I think, frankly, it has something of a hollow ring for Congress to make that criticism, to say that about the $2.2 billion increase which the President correctly characterized as the largest in the history of the effort we have made as a nation to combat this drug menace.

It is distinctly hollow, given the history of the Congress having repeatedly failed to honor the commitments that we have made, to meet our obligations, those that we imposed on ourselves under the 1988 Omnibus Drug Act. We have fallen far short, though we have been given repeated opportunity in a variety of different amendments, a good dozen or so come to mind, in the time since we defaulted on the responsibility to not simply authorize that funding but actually provide it through appropriations.

So, today, to those who feel that more should be spent, I offer a opportunity which I hope they will readily embrace. Specifically what I propose, Mr. President, by amendment to the legislative appropriations bill, is to strike the amount of money that we presently spend upon ourselves, we, the Members of Congress, in the sending of congressional newsletters for the use of our franking privilege, and to see that instead that money, so much as is in fact available for the purpose, be spent, instead, in fighting the war on drugs in a very specific way.

First, let me deal with just some detail. What we are saying is that, of the amount of money that has been set forth in the House bill and in a different figure provided by the Senate, we will take the amount of money that is available after deducting the arrearages for what we already owe the post office and, of the remaining $50 million, we will take out the necessary 8 percent required for us to make response to the letters that we receive from our constituents. But that under the definition of a mass mailing as described at 39 U.S.C. 3210(a)(6)(E), we will prohibit that use of fund for that purpose, prohibit the U.S. Postal Service from expending any funds extended to us for that purpose, creating the kind of arrearage that now exists.

The House proposed that we spend $125 million for congressional mail costs and, as we all know, most of that, the vast majority of it, is for congressional newsletters which I submit are not eagerly sought by most of our constituents. They do not ask for them. I am not sure that they are altogether certain they receive them. Many, I am convinced, never read them.

But my purpose is not to denigrate the newsletter. It is, instead, to point out that there is a far more urgent, far more compelling, priority making a claim upon those same funds.

And, as we have filled the air repeatedly and filled the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with rhetoric that I take to be sincere, about the necessity that we finally combat and not just talk about, but wage and win a war on drugs, then in simplest terms, Mr.

President, what we are faced with is the opportunity to not spend on newsletters and instead to put this money into one of the least well-funded of all of the programs that we have presently authorized in the 1988 Omnibus Drug Act.

That has to do with the tragedy that has befallen all too many, and the next generation already. I am talking about the 400,000 crack babies who are born in the United States each year. More than 1,000 a day, Mr. President; more than 1 in 106 all live births annually in the United States. That is an incredible number.

If people do not understand what it is that is so tragic about this phenomenon of crack babies and others suffering fetal alcohol syndrome, what we are talking about, putting it simplest terms, is child abuse through the umbilical cord. We are talking about the resultant condition of an innocent victim born addicted because of substance abuse of the mother during her pregnancy.

What we are talking about, Mr. President, very simply stated, is a condition that includes mental retardation, physical deformity, the likelihood of stroke, other serious developmental disabilities, emotional disabilities and dysfunctions. In short, we are talking about addiction and impairment and, very likely, most probably in most of these cases where there has been use throughout the pregnancy, permanent, irreversible damage of the kind that that child not only fails to start life with a decent break, but will go through life with distinctly diminished capacities.

Mr. President, that is nothing less than a horrible personal tragedy for each of those children. It is a mortal shame upon this society.

The good news is that it is preventable. Not easily. It will be a very difficult thing to bring young women who are users, who discover that they are pregnant, to the kind of mandatory rehabilitation that most will require in order to clean themselves up and avoid that kind of terrible damage to their child.

The happy news is that a number of young women who are users do have a sufficient maternal instinct so that they will seek treatment. If they are strong enough to come in early, they may avoid this kind of service, grave and irreversible damage to their child, but in many cases, Mr. President, they are not that strong. Unless a mechanism exists that will allow us to take a woman who has given birth to an addicted child and impose upon her for her own good and that of other children that she may bear the kind of mandatory rehabilitation that is not intended to be penal but preventive, then we are simply going to see the kind of recurrence that in one instance, reported in the Wall Street Journal, resulted in a woman named Cheryl giving birth to seven, Mr. President, addicted children.

In Los Angeles County between 1981 and 1987 there was an 1,100-percent increase in the incidence of placement in foster homes of children who had been afflicted by the drug use or the alcohol abuse of their mother during pregnancy.

Mr. President, we cannot as a society professing to decency and caring and concerning, as in fact every Member of this Congress does, continue to make it an inadequate response. Last night in his address, the President said that those upon whom he calls to participate are those who have been guilty of looking the other way and, unhappily, that includes too many. No longer can anyone look the other way. The evidence is not only compelling and abundant; it is irresistable to anyone who does not choose to turn a blind eye or to make, incredibly, the kind of selfish decision that will prevent us from making the response necessary to win the war on drugs.

I can think of no more pathetic instance, no more compelling offer of proof that drug use is not a victimless crime than the innocent victims of this kind of substance abuse by young pregnant women. And there is no realistic hope, Mr. President, that those who have given birth to one child, particularly those so much addicted to this fiercely addictive substance, are not likely to repeat that tragedy with another child. The costs are absolutely beyond comprehension. If you go through the neonatal care wards in the large cities of America, and in some not so large—not just Chicago or Los Angeles or New York, but many, many smaller cities—you will find that the cost of dealing with so-called border babies, those who have been abandoned by their crack-smoking mothers whose maternal instinct has been all but destroyed, the cost of trying to deal with that phenomenon is horrendous. But it is the tip of the iceberg, Mr. President, as compared to the cost society will experience as these damaged children go through life. So however great the cost that we are talking about in providing for mandatory rehabilitation, I will tell you they will pale into insignificance by comparision with the costs of not making this effort.

What we are talking about here today is almost symbolic. It is a demonstration program in the 1988 drug legislation. We authorized the expenditure of a demonstration program which was to be administered by the Office of Substance Abuse Prevention within the Department of Health and Human Services. We authorized a grand total of about $10 million. The fact of the matter is, 130 applicants sought that funding. Half those applications were deemed worthy, but because of the limit on the funding, 15 were finally funded. Fifteen.

Mr. President, the volume, the magnitude of this problem greatly exceeds the $4.5 million that we have spent on those 15 applicants. So I think the time has come for us to take this step as a beginning step, and that is what it is. It would give a tenfold increase to what we have spent thus far; it would allow States as successful applicants to do what they must do at the State level, and that is to impose a program, not penal, but preventive; one that mandates rehabilitation because while we hope that through outreach and education, we can appeal to these young women to come in early enough in their pregnancy, specifically during the first trimester, so they avoid even more severe damage to their children, many will not be strong enough and those who are not and actually give birth to an addicted child must, in fact, be given the help they need through mandatory rehabilitation. That is what all this is about.

We all know what newsletters are about. This is not a question of the worth of newsletters. I will say to my colleagues that in my own mind I have adjudged them to be not worth the money, but even if you thought they performed a vital function, I would submit that in the context of the crisis that has compelled the President's reaction that has joined the massed attention of the media, rightly and belatedly, that we are required if, in fact, we are going to say that this program, this strategy that has been offered is not enough to do more when we can do so in a way that costs us little.

Mr. President, I cannot think of any that will cost us less than for us to give up one of our perks and put it into the necessary beginning of demonstrations around this Nation to show that we are able to prevent this tragedy. Because if we fail to prevent it, I will say to my colleagues that the costs we have seen thus far will be only the beginning. I am not talking just about the cost of the tax dollars. I am talking about the incredible human misery of these infants in these cribs in these neonatal wards. I am talking about children who cry 24 hours a day, who are writhing so violently in their cribs as they experience withdrawal that they must be swaddled in order to avoid doing injury to themselves.

I am talking about premature birth, low birth weight, mental retardation, physical deformities. Mr. President, talk to a nurse in one of those neonatal wards, and I think you will get some impression of the anguish that they are experiencing. Better yet, walk through one. Hold in your hand, as you easily can, a premature crack baby weighing a pound and a half.

Mr. President, I do not think we need to go much further with this. There is an amendment at the desk, and what it would do is prohibit the U.S. Postal Service from expending money upon congressional newsletters. That includes notices of town meetings. And it does so that the moneys that will be made available thereby can be appropriated, and this does appropriate, $45 million. That is what will be left after we pay what we already owe, the arrearage, at the post office, and set aside enough so that we can answer the mail. Forty-five million, a tenfold increase over what we have spent thus far, would be made available to the Department of Health and Human Services through the Office of Substance Abuse Prevention to go forward with the kind of effort that we must begin to prevent this preventable, unspeakable tragedy.

Mr. President, I ask that the clerk read the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from California [Mr. WILSON] for himself and Mr. DOLE, proposes an amendment numbered 698.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place add the following:

Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, upon enactment of this Act, there is hereby prohibited the use of the franking privilege for unsolicited mass mailings, as described in 39 U.S.C. 3210(a)(6)(E), and any use of the funds of the United States Postal Service for this purpose is hereby prohibited.

All monies heretofore appropriated for this purpose are hereby rescinded, but they may be made available for the purpose only of funding any program authorized by the Congress to fight the "war on drugs," and specifically $45,000,000 are hereby appropriated for Model Projects Program for Pregnant and Post Partum Women and their Infants to be spent pursuant to 42 U.S.C. 290aa-13 to remain available until expended.

All House language in this Act, which is interpreted under the precedents of the Senate as being legislation under rule 16, shall become effective one day after the date of enactment of this Act.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, the end of the amendment simply states, as I told you, that $45 million would be hereby appropriated. It is specifically appropriated to the Model Projects Program for Pregnant and Post Partum Women and their Infants to be spent pursuant to existing law, specifically Section 42, United States Code, 290aa-13.

That is, I should add, not only an existing program; it is the one I described as having expended only the $45 million. The criteria that govern its administration do not require mandatory rehabilitation. In my judgment, we need to do so, but that is the subject of another day for a separate piece of legislation.

This simply takes the money that we would otherwise spend upon newsletters and makes it available instead to prevent substance abuse to pregnant women so that we will not have this dismal, frightening, tragic statistic, 1,000 plus crack babies a day, every day of the year; 11 percent of all the live births in this Nation.

Mr. President, I submit this amendment for myself, for Mr. DOLE, for Mr. GRAMM of Texas, for Mr. COATS, for the distinguished Republican manager, Mr. NICKLES, of Oklahoma, and for Mr. HELMS. At this point I yield the floor. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment of the Senator from California. I commend the Senator for getting to the heart of what I think is a very important issue.

Mr. President, I rise as one who is a substantial user of the frank, one who is new to the Senate, appointed to the Senate, not elected, given the vacancy created when the former junior Senator from Indiana moved to the Vice Presidency.

As a new Senator, I am unknown in many parts of the State and many people have asked many questions about what it is I am about in the Senate, how I am conducting their business, and I also am interested in knowing what their positions are on a number of issues, so I have utilized in a substantial way mailings to constituents throughout Indiana, to, No. 1, ask them their opinions on issues that are of importance to them, to ask them their thoughts about how I should represent their interests in the Senate. I felt that this was an appropriate exercise, given the unusual circumstances under which I arrived in the Senate, not having had the benefit of a long and substantial campaign in which I could determine the issues that people were interested in and which they wanted represented on the Senate floor.

By the same token, I have used newsletters to inform them of my activities in the Senate, issues on which I am working, the work of my committee, issues that I think are important. I have asked their opinions through surveys as to the areas of their priority, their concern, things on which they think I should be working.

I have used notices to inform my constituents of town meetings I have held throughout Indiana, of agricultural listening sessions, of drug meetings, meetings convened to determine the opinions of Hoosiers as to how they think we ought to address the drug problem.

So I stand as one who has utilized the franking privilege that is available to Members of the Senate and Members of Congress and the privilege that the Senator from California is wishing to eliminate with this amendment.

As I said, it has been of benefit to me and I hope it has been of benefit to my constituents as we have exchanged views on issues I feel have been very important. They have welcomed the opportunity to visit me at town meetings, to sit in on my agricultural listening sessions, to express their views on drugs and a number of other subjects. Many have publicly expressed their thanks for my willingness to travel around the State and inform them of my availability and to allow them to take the opportunity to meet with me.

I happen to represent an area that is reached only by television and media generated outside the State. As such, it would be almost impossible for me to notify many of my constituents through the media. That is one of the principal reasons why I have used mail, notices, and so forth, to notify them of my presence in a particular area. Nearly a million people in northwest Indiana receive most of their news from Chicago television and Chicago radio and newspapers. I venture to say that that media would not carry the notice of a particular town meeting of a Senator from Indiana. They might as a public service but it would certainly be buried deep into the paper and probably not noticed by most of my constituents.

Nevertheless, today we have been presented with a situation that I think demands a clear stand by all of us. It certainly demands that I examine the priority of my mission in the Senate.

Last evening, the President of the United States presented this country with the facts on a national crisis, a crisis of epidemic portions, one which is beginning to touch the lives of nearly every American. The tragedy is before us. We see it on TV each night. We read about it in the paper each morning. We discuss it almost daily on the Senate floor: What can we do?

One of the most difficult and one of the most excruciating parts of the drug problem facing our Nation is the question of drug-babies. The Senator from California outlined in some detail the tragedy that exists, as now nearly 400,000 infants a year are born drug addicted.

Those who have visited neonatal clinics, those who have seen firsthand, as I have, the suffering that these young infants go through, low birth rate, poorly formed internal organs, suffering from violent drug addiction seizures, so sensitive to the skin that they cannot be held, crying literally 24 hours a day, crying out for some relief which medical science has not been able to provide even though heavily sedated, they are still suffering terrible consequences of the addiction obtained in the womb.

I have been informed by medical personnel that a dosage of drugs in a mother magnifies ten times as it transfers through the placenta into the blood of the child, ten times the effects that the mother suffers.

So these more than 30,000 a month babies are crying out for our help. And the Senator from California has addressed a means to provide some of that assistance. It is a program that has shown some success, and a program that deserves our funding.

The Senator from California has presented us a choice: continue to communicate with our constituents, many times in effective ways, necessary ways, or direct those funds to provide real help to suffering infants and suffering mothers.

I should point out it is not really a choice. It is not something that we should deliberate on long. It is not something that even a new Senator attempting to do—communicate with his new constituents—should pause more than a moment before deciding.

So I am proud to cosponsor the amendment that is before us. I think it is absolutely necessary that we look for ways to prioritize our work here in the Senate, and clearly the suffering of these infants, the scourge of drugs in our country, ought to lead each of us to decide that this is a far more important use of our time and effort and money than unsolicited mass mailings to our constituents.

I will miss those surveys. I will miss the ability to inform my constituents of meetings that I want to hold with them. I will do the best I can with the media notices that the existing media allows me. This allows us to answer letters sent to us by constituents. But it is a small price to pay for our ability to direct some much needed funds to people who are hurting in a way that most of us cannot imagine.

So I again thank the Senator from California, and am proud to be a cosponsor of this bill.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, last night President Bush sounded the alarm for America fed up with drugs and crime. I think he provided the leadership we need to galvanize the Nation and take on one of the toughest foes we have ever encountered.

It is time to get tough, to stay tough, and to win. We seem to declare war on a lot of different things around here. Sometimes we succeed; more often we do not.

Last night, before the President spoke there were critics wringing their hands and saying:

> We can't pay for it. We can't cut spending anymore. We have to raise taxes.

I do not believe I have heard any outcry from the American people that we ought to raise taxes even though they know how important this issue is.

What Senator WILSON has given us is an opportunity to help those of us in Congrerss fund the war on drugs. This is an opportunity less than 24 hours after the President unveiled his plan where we can all sign up. We can all enlist in this war on drugs and say, "OK, we are willing to make a sacrifice."

The Senator from Indiana pointed out that it can be very helpful to have surveys and constituents, and sometimes it is very helpful to mail out 70,000 post cards saying you are going to be in a certain spot in our own State on a certain day at a certain time, and tell constituents that if they want to drop in, they are welcome. It is also a good way to get your name in every household at the taxpayers' expense.

We have a chance to help fund the President's war on drugs right now, right out of the chute, right on day one. To those who are screaming for funding—here is an opportunity. It is only $45 million. But we can find $45 million here and there. I bet we can take a look at executive consultants. I know the distinguished Senator from Arkansas Senator PRYOR has been doing that. I bet we could look at executive travel and find another $45 million, $50 million or more. That is just the beginning. This is an opportunity for those of us in Congress to make a contribution to the war on drugs.

These funds will come from our budget, out of our pockets for a change. Instead of adding to the congressional purse, we are going to take a little away.

I do not want to go back and tell people in Kansas:

> I do not want to give up the franking privilege even though you do not want that mail, because I want to raise your taxes. If I raise your taxes, then I can keep sending out all this mail. We cannot cut anything in Congress, especially in our own Senate budget.

The House and the Senate have been overdosing our constituents with junk mail for years. It is time for some withdrawal and treatment. It is time to tell our constituents that the war on drugs is more important than our war on their mailboxes.

It is the best recycling program I can think of—turning congressional junk mail into our fight against junk in our streets and schools.

So again, I commend Senator WILSON for his initiative, his common sense, his compassion. His proposal is a signal to the American people that we are not going to be hypocrites on the drug issue.

If the critics want a downpayment on the war on drugs, vote for this amendment. It is only $45 million, but that is a start. We only need to find $740 million more. I doubt that anyone will write in and complain if they do not get our newsletter. Maybe when the war on drugs has ended, we can reinstitute unsolicited mailing privileges.

As the Senator from California has pointed out, we take care of direct responses to constituents, letters to congressional colleagues, Federal, State, and local government officials, and press releases. So there is still plenty of opportunity for all of us to keep in touch with our constituents. These exceptions are provided to ensure the constituent concerns may be directly addressed, and I think they obviate the need for the town meeting notices and some of the other things.

The real question is about priorities. Are newsletters and notices for town meetings as important as what the President outlined last night in the war on drugs?

I have heard a number of speeches over the year, a number in the past few weeks, some today, saying over and over that we have to find the money. This is an opportunity to indicate to our constituents in a bipartisan way that certainly we are willing to cut our budget if it is going to make a difference. If we are not willing to cut our budget, why should we ask any other agency in the Government to cut theirs? And, believe me, this is not the end of it. There may be other places in our budget where we can find additional savings.

It seems to me that we have to set an example. We are the elected representatives. We cannot have it both ways. The war on drugs should not become an excuse for raising taxes. I know the media likes to talk about it. They just cannot have a press conference and say, do you not have to raise taxes? They have a fix on raising taxes. I suggested several months ago maybe there ought to be a special media tax. Maybe we ought to give the media a tax increase. They talk about it all the time. Nobody talks about it in my district. They do not want a tax increase. They have had enough taxes, and they know that Congress does when they raise taxes. They spend it for something else.

So the President is right. He does have strong bipartisan support and has had strong bipartisan support. I think it is a compliment to Congress that the President said last night the basic drug laws are on the books. They have been put on the books by Democrats and Republicans in the Senate and the House working together. What we need to do now is to fund those basic laws. Oh, there will be some minor changes, and there should be. I certainly commend the distinguished Senator from California, and I hope that his amendment will be accepted, and if not, that it will be adopted on a rollcall vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further discussion? The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I want to commend our distinguished colleague from Nevada for his handling of this legislation before us and his colleague from Oklahoma, Senator NICKLES, as well. I understand that most of the items here have been resolved, and we have a few amendments to be debated over the next several days regarding this bill, but a good many of them have been resolved. This is one that obviously has not, the question of dealing with the mass mailings that go out.

My intention would be to support some amendment that would reduce that because, frankly, aside from wherever the money may end up going, I think it is a mistake. It has been abused in the past. Aside from where the resources are allocated, I think the issue stands on its own merits. I will support some amendment—I presume that there may be alternatives offered, but at some point we will have an opportunity to vote on language that would reduce the proliferation of these mass mailings.

I would take advantage of this opportunity to comment, Mr. President, on the President's proposal last evening regarding the, once again, declaration of war on drugs. This is the sixth time in the last 20 years we have declared war on drugs, third time in the last decade. It is beginning to lose its sting, I suggest, a bit. You can only declare war so many times, I suppose, before people wonder whether or not we are serious about it.

I guess since the fall months have arrived again, the brisk days of September and October upon us, it must be that time of year again to declare war on drugs in this country.

I commend the President, Mr. President, for focusing much attention; clearly, the American public wants this issue addressed. The President is right in his statement that drug dealing and drug use are intolerable. There is no disagreement over that. We all know that this plague is wrecking families in this country, destroying neighborhoods and robbing children of their health and safety and future. That is not debatable. We all agree on that. I say, as well, that the President is correct when he says that the war against drugs must be fought on all fronts. We all agree on that. The strongest part of the President's program is his emphasis on coordination of Federal resources.

Now, Mr. President, there are now some 36 Federal agencies involved in one way or another in the war on drugs. There are tremendous duplication of resources and wasteful turf battles when you have drug enforcement agents arresting FBI agents and FBI agents arresting drug enforcement agents, and one agency confiscating planes that belong to another agency.

As I said a while ago, it is sort of a keystone cop program in many ways. The coordination of the agencies, if the President did not do anything else, would be a major step in the right direction. Coordination of these agencies' efforts is essential and is precisely why Congress created the position of the Federal drug czar.

What the President must do, in my view, is give Bill Bennett the tools and authority to organize and coordinate this war. Mr. President, I am not convinced that the program enunciated by the President last evening does that. As you know, there is nothing new in a President declaring war on drugs. As I mentioned, it happened six times since the Kennedy administration, three times in the last 8 or 9 years. Declarations, Mr. President, do not win wars. Resources, materials, and actual commitment do. The President has declared this war, and I commend him for that. But if he does not provide the weapons to win it, then the declaration is meaningless.

There are two ways to attack the drug epidemic: as a problem, a tragedy in and of itself with its law enforcement treatment and prevention components, or as a symptom of larger societal problems. The President falls short, I suggest, on the first score, providing inadequate resources to prevent and treat drug use and punish drug criminals, with too few drug educators, too few beds and treatment facilities, too few prosecutors and judges, and far too few prison cells.

On the second point, the President regrettably is completely silent, without even a nod toward the context of this terrible problem. Let me take these one at a time very briefly.

First, the resources are inadequate. Carefully thought out Federal programs are already in place to wage this war. In 1986 and 1988, the omnibus drug bills, we saw the problem in terms of funding, and yet, today, Mr. President, the problem is that we have not fully funded what has already been on the books. We are spending now $1.7 billion less than is authorized in current law.

The President said last evening, in addition to new resources, we are going to appropriate every nickel that has been authorized in this battle. For the last year or so we have found the authorization levels for this war on drugs at one level and the appropriation almost $2 billion less than what this Congress and the previous President called for. If you are going to wage war, you are going to have to do it with all the resources available. When you do not even appropriate the funds that have been authorized and declare war again, one has to question whether or not you are serious about all of this.

Mr. NICKLES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DODD. After I finish the statement, I will be happy to yield.

We are spending $1.7 billion less in the current law. The President's new outlay—listen to this staggering sum—is $715 million, which would not even close half the current gap.

Let me put $715 million into context. There are three major drug kingpins operating in Colombia. The net worth of each one of those kingpins exceeds what the President is going to wage war with on this battle against drug abuse in this country. The average net worth of those three kingpins is in excess of $2 billion per leader, not to mention their underlings and others. They are accumulating vast fortunes.

We are going to wage war with an additional new $715 million? Who is kidding whom? When we start talking about this great war and battle, we need full funding, Mr. President, of these prevention and enforcement programs. Strategy outlined last evening also continues, in my view, a very wrong-headed emphasis on the supply side of the drug equation, ignoring experts who tell us to focus on the demand side. Some 70 percent of the resources in President Bush's program are devoted to cutting supply, and only 30 percent would go to treat those who use drugs or prevent their use before it starts. And those demand side funds would just barely restore the funds cut during the Reagan years, I might add, producing roughly the same level of inflation-adjusted spending as existed in 1980. As it is now, only 15 percent of serious drug users get the treatment that they need. Mr. President, that is simply inadequate.

Let me put it in more concrete terms for you. I listened to Senator COATS from Indiana talk about the innocents, the truly innocents, being affected by this problem. There are an estimated 400,000 pregnant women in this country whose babies are exposed to drugs. It is estimated that to treat those women and their innocent infants would require $1.8 billion in funding. Mr. President, that is more than twice the total spending under the President's program for all forms of treatment for all categories of users.

It is just that one problem cannot even be met halfway with the resources that we are talking about in terms of this war on drugs.

Mr. President, we need treatment on demand for all serious drug users, starting with pregnant women and juvenile offenders, and that ought not to be a debate. These people are the innocent victims of this problem and they need to be given the proper kind of care and treatment they deserve.

From a broader perspective of course, this program just tragically misses the point. It treats drug use as discrete sociological phenomenon and argues, essentially, that if we make drugs hard enough to come by people will stop using them.

That may be true in some cases, but I believe as a general proposition it is nonsense. If drugs are harder to get, they will become more expensive, and the plague of crime and fear that feeds the drug epidemic will only spread. Drugs are never the first choice; they are the last resort from failed expectations and broken dreams in too many cases.

We need an approach to the drug problem that understands its roots. In too many cases we need to target efforts particularly to our inner cities. This is not a popular constituency. Unfortunately, too few of them vote. We are not considering debating these questions. If you want to get at this problem you are going to have to recognize that the lost expectations the frustrations that are felt by millions of Americans in the ghettos of this country are manifested in drug use and addiction to narcotics.

Until you really begin to deal with some of those underlying problems, you are only going to casually deal with this plague on our society.

Until we give those in our inner cities something to live for, some hope for a job, a decent place to live, some hope of a sane or healthy environment, some chance for a stable family structure, they will continue to squander their days and their lives in a drug induced stupor. And the crime that supports their drug habits will escalate and the fear and trepidation so many Americans have today as a result of this scourge on our society will only grow.

While I commend the President for focusing attention, I commend the President for calling for a coordination of the resources that are needed, and so forth, in this area, I must say that tragically in terms of the tools the kind of resources and the focus of the symptom that drug abuse is in terms of other problems that our society faces the President's program comes far short.

Having said that, we have before us, of course, an amendment that is going to solve all that because we are going to cut out newsletters and fund the war on narcotics and drugs. Let us not have any illusions about this.

I said at the outset I think there is a good case to be made for streamlining or cutting back or doing away with, if you will, of some of the mass mailings. They cost an awful lot of money.

Do not have any illusions about if you stop sending newsletters you are not going to stop the war on drugs. We ought not to be kidding ourselves that that is going to be the case.

We have to decide whether or not you really want to be effective in this contest, whether you really want to wage war, whether we are going to go through this process year in and year out and as the fall months arrive engage in the rhetorical declarations of war. I am beginning to think the enemy is not going to take us seriously.

I mentioned the worth individually of some of the individuals involved with these cartels. To cite statistics for the Medellin and cartel, they made an offer to the Colombian government to retire their external debts. The drug cartel in Colombia is the single highest provider of scholarships in that country. That is provided by drug cartels. The single largest builder of public housing are drug cartels in that country. The are worth hundreds of billions of dollars. With the $2.2 billion we will not even appropriate the money we authorized last year in this great war, this great crusade is a joke.

The American people, I suspect, are going to discover that all too quickly and the law enforcement officials and prosecutors and judges are on the streets and in the trenches every single day. We are not giving anybody the resources. Those who work in the treatment and the education field are just not getting the kind of equipment necessary to even make any kind of headway in this contest, in this war.

So I would say the amendment is maybe fine, but let us not delude ourselves. You are going to even afford a day's worth of rations in this war against drugs with the money that we save with this amendment.

Mr. President, I saw my colleague from Oklahoma.

I yield the floor at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KERREY). The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I appreciate the comments made by my friend and colleague, Senator DODD, from Connecticut.

I would like to point out that Congress appropriates the money.

I heard a lot of people talking about the war on drugs, saying the President did not do enough; we have not spent enough money. But it is Congress that is spending the money. We have the Appropriations Committees and Congress. Really, if that is the sentiment of most of the Members of the body, Congress has not collectively spent enough money. That is not the President's responsibility.

He has submitted budgets. He has called for full funding of the drug package that passed a year or so ago. Congress has not funded it.

We authorize a lot of money around this place that we do not spend. We do it every year in most appropriations bills.

The Senator from California is trying to reallocate, trying to set a different priority. Instead of mass mailings let us put some of the money to help victims of drug abuse.

I think it is a good amendment. I want to compliment him because Senator WILSON has been a leader in the Senate trying to curtail mass mailing, congressional abuse of the frank.

I compliment him. It is not the first time he has been on the floor doing it. He was involved earlier this year when there was a move to change the Senate rules. We had restrictive rules in the Senate on mass mailings and those rules were changed.

We fought those rules and I fought with the Senator from California. We were unsuccessful by maybe one or two votes.

So instead of reforming and curtailing congressional mail costs, we actually expanded it in the Senate. We made it as bad as in the House. Two evils make a right. Maybe it makes it easier to negotiate, I do not know, but we actually expanded mail privilege and mail expense earlier this year.

Senator WILSON is trying to change that.

I compliment Senator REID. We made a lot of reforms in the bill that I hope we will pass in the near future. We made significant reforms. We reduced the amount from 6 to 1. We put individual itemized accounts for both the House and Senate and Members of the House and Senate.

We made it if it goes above that amount, it is going to come out of my personal account.

We did not have that in the past.

Those are good things. We said you cannot make use of the frank within 60 days of election. That is a positive thing. We have several good provisions in our bill.

Senator WILSON wants to go further. He said we want to eliminate unsolicited use of mass mailings, unsolicited mass mailings. He did not say you could not respond to constituents or mail letters or news releases, and so on. But you could not have a mass mailing to every constituent in your district or State.

He is going further than what the committee did. I compliment him for it.

This is not a new subject for Senator WILSON. He worked hard on this issue for several years. I compliment him for it and compliment him for saying where the money should go, where we take the saving, instead of having it in the legislative account where we spend it on other legislatives uses. He said use it for the war to combat drugs. It is a small step, $45 million, it is a step toward the $700 million spending that the President called for last night. It is a significant step. It is a small appropriation bill. We are going to have 12 other appropriations bills, and I am sure we can find an additional amount in those bills, larger appropriations bills, where we can actually enact the President's program calling for increased spending but not increasing taxes but actually reducing spending on items of less priority.

So I compliment the Senator from California.

I understand the Senator from Alaska has an amendment. I would encourage him to bring it forth at this time so we can wrap up passage of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I join in commending the Senator from California in seeking to allocate money to the model projects program for pregnant and post partum women and their infants.

I want to say that the amendment ingnores the facts regarding the cost of congressional mail. The Senator from California comes from a State that has an abundance of interest group computers. His constituents can sign up and become a member of the Sierra Club, and the Sierra Club will send a letter to those constituents of the Senator from California expressing points of view. The Senator from California answers the resulting mail on his computers.

If he answers it in direct mail through his office it costs about $1 an answer. He has 20 million people there in that State. I happen to be a former Californian, so I think I know a little bit about California. He has more than 20 million now. How many do you have now?

Mr. WILSON. Twenty-eight million.

Mr. STEVENS. Twenty-eight million. They added a few when I left.

Let me say to the Senate in all seriousness that I represent a State where a great number of people have no daily newspapers. They get their news by radio once in a while about what is going on in the Nation's Capital.

Beyond that, the problem with this is that the mail the Senator from California uses to answer his unsolicited mail is costing the Senate about $1, as I said, a letter. When we send out a postal patron newsletter to people who have no other source of information on what is going on in the Nation's Capital, it costs us 13 cents.

It is prepared automatically. It is mailed automatically. It does not use stenographers. It is Zip Code addressed and therefore it is 13-cent mail.

The Senator's amendment would say we cannot send out unsolicited mail. I can show the Senate where if I have a small town in Alaska that I know has got a single issue it is really interested in, the oil spill right now for example—I have sent several reports to those small communities on what was going on in Washington to see what was happening in this massive disaster that hit my State.

Mr. President, people who have an interest in issues here ought to be notified by their Representatives and their Senators before they have to write and ask, "What is the status of legislation that affects me? What are you doing, Mr. Senator, about the great oil spill that just hit our State?"

We moved in with unsolicited newletters, specifically targeted issues that we knew would concern these people, and we were able to calm some of thier fears by the use of the kind of mail the amendment of the Senator from California would absolutely forbid.

Now I understand the target of the money and I will be happy to find other sources of money for that purpose. But my point is in heavily populated areas of this country in answering mail that comes to a Senator's office, they spend a lot more in responding to that mail, generated by public interest groups, than those of us who represent small population States do in notifying our people on what is going on, keeping them informed, keeping them in touch with their Government in isolated places throughout this country.

The amendment of the Senator from California is not good for States that have small populations. It is not good for the areas that have no daily newspapers. It is not good for those people who live in small villages such as exist in my State which get 15 minutes of daily television news subsidized by the State government. The State pays for the transmission time on the satellites to get that news to them.

The precedent that the Senator from California would set would be that taxpayers should not pay for that kind of distribution of news to an area that has no infrastruture that would support it otherwise.

I understand full well the concepts that are involved. I tell the Senate that this is wrong. This is a Nation that has been kept together by communication. You might as well say, "Let's do away with the postage stamp rate because California can mail a lot more mail than Alaskans can." Maybe, because Alaskans generate mail that is higher cost for the system, we ought to pay more. But communication kept us together as a Nation over these 200-plus years. I think that correspondence from the people who have been sent here from a long distance, such as this Senator, keeps my people involved in this Nation, keeps him informed of what we are doing to try to meet their needs, keeps them informed sometimes of things we could not do to meet their needs.

I think this amendment is wrong. It is touched with so much goodness that it is going to be hard to defeat. But if there is only one vote against it, this Senator will vote against it, because it is wrong in principal. In my judgment, this amendment does not stand on its merits.

This Senator has waged a battle with the House of Representatives over trying to control the spending for newsletters. This year, through the action of the two managers of this bill, once again they have devised another means to try and limit the expenditure of money under the frank. I commend them. I think it is an excellent bill, an excellent approach. I wish them success as they go to conference with the Members of the House, because I know how much success we have had in the past. I know, despite the limitations that were put in the bill last year, once again the amount of money that has been spent by the Congress exceeds the allocation for the franking privilege. There ought to be something different. There ought to be some different way to handle this money.

In the Rules Committee, I have suggested now twice that we allocate money the way we do our telephones. If any Senator does not want to spend his telephone allowance, he does not have to spend it. He can turn it back to the Treasury. And I know a lot of people that do that every year. They do not use that money.

We use it and more. In my State I add to it in moneys I raise for my campaign years before I am up for reelection. I spend the money to keep my people informed because it is not enough money to begin with, nor is this money enough to begin with. We have sent out additional mailings already this year paid for out of campaign accounts and it is official business mail because of the limitations we have already imposed on ourselves.

But, in terms of this bill, it assumes that there are other means of obtaining news of what is going on in Washington than to receive it from your Senator or your Representative that you have voted for to come to Washington and represent you as an American. I think the assumption is false. It cannot be upheld. And I do not think legislation like this should be adopted by the U.S. Senate.

Again I say I may be one person standing here saying, "Let's approach this issue rationally. Give the money to each Senator, as we do transportation costs, as we do telephone allowances, and say, 'Here is the money that you can spend to communicate with your constituents.'"

Mail ought to be treated the same way. If it is time to do away with the franking privilege, I am more than willing to do that, so long as we have a source of funding to communicate with our constituents that does not force them first to write and say, "What are you doing down there? You have not told us what you are doing. What are you doing?" Then if they do that, we can write back and say, "By the way, this is what I was doing but I couldn't tell you because we are not allowed to send you a letter unless you write first."

Well, my people send me down here to represent them. And when I have done something or don't do something, I like to tell them. I think they deserve that knowledge. They deserve that information. And this amendment would take it away from them and I oppose it.

I do not think we have had a chance yet to discuss this in full in the Rules Committee, in terms of the new type of funding I am suggesting. When the proper time comes I will provide the Senate with an opportunity to fund each Senator with an amount of money that that Senator may use to buy stamps, and do away with the franking privilege, if it has raised such a problem. However, it would cost the taxpayers more money.

As I say today, with proper use of the frank and proper use of a postal patron type delivery and a message to an area that is concerned with a particular subject, we can save the taxpayers money by sending to those people in a particular category the information they need.

I really believe we ought to approach this thing from the point of view of not spending the money if we do not have to. But I also think we ought to approach it from the basis of how does a person out in the hinterlands of the United States get information about what is going on in Washington.

My people just want some information and this amendment of the Senator from California would take it away from them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Alaska for his kind words. As I listened to him, it occurred to me that perhaps some of those folks who have traveled to those remote locales where they are afflicted with only 15 minutes a day of television have done so by choice so that they would not hear from people here in Washington.

But, as a matter of fact, I think some of the remarks he made, tongue in cheek, with respect to California, miss the basic point of this whole argument. I do not think that the problem is the franking privilege. I think it is the abuse of the franking privilege. But that is not the point of this. What we are talking about was what he alluded to when he made the comment about sex appeal. The sex appeal, as he terms it, of this issue is that there is a tragedy unfolding in this country because we have neglected to deal with the problem of substance abuse by pregnant women. That is what we are talking about.

Yes, it is true that I, personally, do not feel that there is anything remotely like the value for the taxpayer and the citizen from the receipt of newsletters that there will be from our making some beginning upon this tragedy.

What is wrong with California, to use my friend's phrase, will very soon be wrong with Alaska. And it will not be a lack of information from elected officials. It will be the fact that his constituents, as have too many of mine, have succumbed to the temptation to use drugs and that as a result, totally innocent victims, those to whom they give birth, are abused by substance abuse during pregnancy. That is what this amendment is all about. Let us not make any mistake.

My point is not to deprive the Senator's constituents from hearing from him. I will even resist the straight line that that debate affords. Because this is not a very funny subject. It is, unhappily, incredible in its dimensions, and it has mushroomed. Anybody who has spent time in any of those neonatal wards finds little to be cheered by and, as a result of that, we need to make this beginning.

I want to say a word in response to the very generous remarks of my friend from Oklahoma. He is more than generous. In fact, it was through his leadership that we focused upon the fact that the Post Office simply runs a tap for the Congress and does not worry, in particular, about when we will get around to paying. As though we were, somehow, members of a happy and exclusive club with infinite credit. But, as a matter of fact, it costs the taxpayers. The Senator focused on that issue with an absolutely gem-cutting brilliance some years back.

He has been my partner in this effort and he has been a great leader in terms of attempting to reform the abuse of the franking privilege. My colleague, the distinguished Republican leader who was also most generous, I think has put things with characteristic clarity and force. The choice we are facing is newsletters or dealing with the problem of crack babies. It is that simple.

Mr. President, I ask Senator DECONCINI be added as a cosponsor to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WILSON. I do not think we need to take more time. I think it is important, given the history of efforts to reform the use of the frank for congressional newsletters, that we send a very loud, clear message to the House because the House has been guilty of an abuse that far exceeds anything that this house has done.

For that reason I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, this amendment presents some problems. For example, what is Senator HARKIN's subcommittee to do? Separate and apart from that, I think this amendment will strengthen Senator NICKLES' hand and my hand during the conference with the House. Because of that, I am prepared to accept it on behalf of the majority.

Mr. NICKLES. Vote.

Mr. REID. We are prepared to vote.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 5 minutes as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. SIMON. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. SIMON pertaining to the introduction of S. 1582 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

Mr. SIMON. If no one seeks the floor, Mr. President, I question the presence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SIMON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment now before the body be set aside temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENTS NOS. 699 AND 700

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I send two noncontroversial amendments to the desk and ask that they be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. REID] proposes amendments numbered 699 and 700.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendments be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendments are as follows:

On page 13, after line 17, insert the following:

SEC. 12. (a) There is established in the Treasury of the United States a revolving fund within the contingent fund of the Senate to be known as the "Senate Office of Public Records Revolving Fund" (hereafter in this section referred to as the "revolving fund").

(b) All moneys received on and after October 1, 1989, by the Senate Office of Public Records from fees and other charges for services shall be deposited to the credit of the revolving fund. Moneys in the revolving fund shall be available without fiscal year limitation for disbursement by the Secretary of the Senate for use in connection with the operation of the Senate Office of Public Records, including supplies, equipment, and other expenses.

(c) Disbursements from the revolving fund shall be made upon vouchers approved by the Secretary of the Senate.

(d) The Secretary of the Senate is authorized to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

(e) To provide capital for the revolving fund, the Secretary of the Senate is authorized to transfer, from moneys appropriated for fiscal year 1990 to the account "Miscellaneous Items" in the contingent fund of the Senate, to the revolving fund such sum as he may determine necessary, not to exceed $30,000.

AMENDMENT No. 700

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following new section:

SEC. . There shall be available to meet any unpaid expenses incurred by any duly authorized individual, prior to the first day of the 101st Congress, under authority of section 31a-1 of title 2, United States Code, (1) any unexpended and unobligated funds appropriated for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988, which were available to such individual as an expense allowance under section 31a-1 or section 31a-3 of such title, plus (2) in case such individual was authorized to incur expenses under authority of section 31a-1 of such title 2 on the last day of the 100th Congress but was not authorized to incur expenses under such authority on the first day of the 101st Congress, 25 percent of the funds appropriated for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1989, under authority of section 31a-2 and section 31a-3 of such title 2.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, as to the first amendment, the Office of Public Records currently charges fees for the reproduction of reports required by law to be filed with this Office. Currently, these funds are returned to the U.S. Treasury. By establishing the Office of Public Records revolving fund, these funds will remain available to this Office to offset the cost of providing reproductions of reports on file with this Office.

The second amendment simply makes unobligated fiscal 1988 and 1989 funds in leadership offices available for obligations incurred in prior fiscal years. It has no budgetary impact whatsoever.

I know of no objection to these amendments. I urge that they be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection or any further discussion. If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments (Nos. 699 and 700) were agreed to.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to.

I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise in support of the legislative branch appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990, H.R. 3014.

The bill as reported provides $2 billion in new budget authority and $1.9 billion in outlays for the Congress and other legislative branch agencies, including the Library of Congress, the Government Accounting Office, and the Government Printing Office, among others.

I want to commend the distinguished chairman and ranking member of the Legislative Branch Subcommittee for producing a bill that is within their 302(b) allocation.

I would also like to urge my colleague not to offer amendments which would increase outlays, since the subcommittee is basicaIly at their outlay allocation.

I do have one concern relating to this bill. As the chairman and ranking member know, I have been concerned about the role that GAO seems to be taking lately. I have expressed my concerns to the Governmental Affairs Committee, the Legislative Branch Subcommittee, and I am again expressing my concerns now to the entire Senate.

Over my 16 years in the U.S. Senate, I have come to respect and depend upon much of the work of the GAO. Recent actions by the GAO, however, have made me question whether GAO has maintained that role as a nonpartisan, technical agency.

During debate on the financial institutions reform conference report, the distinguished majority leader quoted a letter from the Comptroller General regarding his views on the on-budget versus off-budget financing issue.

I do not know how GAO can advocate on-budget status for this legislation, when, last summer during Postal Service legislation, it advocated off-budget status for that agency. I would expect GAO to be consistent, at least, in its views on the structure of the Federal budget.

I am concerned that GAO has stepped over the line from being a technical expert to acting in a more political manner, and I believe that is contrary to the mission of the agency.

During subcommittee hearings, there were a few questions to GAO, which I had asked to be answered for the record. So far, I have not gotten any responses. Therefore, I would like to submit these questions for the record again.

First. In fiscal year 1987, the GAO requested and received a funding increase to hire more personnel to perform the tasks required under Gramm-Rudman Holdings. Even though GAO no longer plays a major role in the sequestration process, funding levels for the agency were never reduced. Can GAO tell me for what purposes this money was reallocated?

Second. In April of this year, GAO published their annual report, as required by Congress. I would like to know how much it cost to publish this report, and how the cost compares with similar reports published by other Federal agencies?

Third. I understand that GAO is currently not audited by an outside agency, and that GAO was trying to arrange for an audit by one of the inspectors general from another Federal agency. Has anything been scheduled yet?

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the fiscal year 1990 legislative branch appropriations. I am especially pleased that through this measure, the Senate is taking steps to provide access for individuals with disabilities. I want to thank the chairman of the Legislative Branch Appropriations Subcommittee for his sensitivity and commitment to improving opportunities within these walls for individuals with disabilities.

First, this legislation provides the resources necessary to implement Senate Resolution 13 which the Senate passed in June. Senate Resolution 13 calls for the close captioning of the Senate's televised floor proceedings. As you know, the Senate's floor proceedings have been televised since 1986. At that time, we decided that it is important that we be accountable to our constituents and that they have the opportunity to partake in the legislative process via television. I am pleased that the Senate has recognized that deaf and hard of hearing Americans be afforded the same opportunity. Not only will the implementation of this resolution bring the Senate floor proceedings into the homes of millions of deaf and hearing-impaired Americans, but it will allow also deaf and hearing-impaired Senate staffers the opportunity to more closely follow floor debates.

Second, the legislative branch appropriations bill also requires the Senate to hire one certified sign language interpreter and to provide funds to hire outside interpreters when needed. It is my understanding that the Senate's interpreter will be available to Member's offices for meeting with deaf constituents as well as to provide services to deaf Senate staffers so they can fully participate in staff meetings and other activities required by their jobs.

Mr. President, providing these services, captioned Senate proceedings, and interpreter services, can mean the difference between career development and career stagnation. As chairman of the Subcommittee on the Handicapped, I want to thank my colleagues for their support of these measures.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I have offered amendments to the previous appropriations bills to cap each department's consultant spending. The Congress and the legislative support agencies such as the General Accounting Office [GAO] and the Office of Technology Assessment [OTA] are not required by section 1114 of title 31 to report their request for consultant spending. Therefore, I will not be offering an amendment to cap the consultant spending of the Congress because there is no budget request on which to focus.

However, I do think it is important to have our own house in order. I want to urge the Senate Rules Committee and the Committee on House Administration to review the way in which Congress uses consultants and ensure that there are thorough guidelines and oversight in this issue. I would also ask that these committees consider whether requiring Congress to submit a budget request for consulting services would be appropriate.

Mr. President, I also want to take this opportunity to focus attention not only on the way Congress uses consultant services, but the way in which GAO uses consultants. GAO, Congress' investigatory arm, relies very heavily on consultants and contractors for a variety of services. I understand GAO's need to have access to experts with specialized expertise as it has to carry out a governmentwide oversight mission. However, it is my understanding that GAO is considering using consultants to assist them in performing audits and reviews of executive branch programs. This would cause me a deal of concern. Congress has to be able to rely on GAO for unbiased assessments of Government programs. Whenever the Government turns sensitive tasks over to private contractors, questions regarding the appropriate delegation and potential conflicts of interest always come up.

I am a great supporter of GAO and its work. However, I urge them to move cautiously toward any expansion in the use of contractors or consultants to carry out actual program work.

AMENDMENT NO. 701

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. REID] proposes an amendment numbered 701.

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

GENERAL PROVISIONS AMENDMENT

SEC. . For payment to Alison Leland, widow of Mickey Leland, late a Representative from the State of Texas, $89,500. For payment to Shelia A. Smith, widow of Larkin Smith, late a Representative from the State of Mississippi, $89,500.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, this amendment is also one that is not controversial. It adds the funds necessary for payment of survivor benefits to the widows of Representative MICKEY LELAND and Representative LARKIN SMITH, both of whom were victims of air crashes during the August recess.

This is a mandatory act, and so the addition of these funds has no impact on our 302(b) ceiling. I know of no objection to this amendment and ask that the amendment be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nevada.

The amendment (No. 701) was agreed to.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments and the Wilson amendments be set aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KERREY). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HUMPHREY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I have three amendments to offer which I understand are acceptable to the managers on both sides. Before I do that, I want to commend our colleague from California, Mr. WILSON, for the outstanding amendment which he has offered the Senate and on which we will be voting I trust soon.

Mr. President, I suppose it is easier for me and for that matter Senator WILSON to be critical of the franking issue, the use of the frank, the abuse of the frank because neither he nor I are running for election. We are both leaving the Senate. So it is a lot easier for us to address the franking privilege.

Before anyone accuses me of hypocrisy, I want to acknowledge that, like I suppose virtually everyone in this Chamber, I have overly used the frank from time to time, and to be even more honest I have abused the frank. And if there is a Senator in this Chamber who has not I would like to nominate that Senator for sainthood because he or she is a noble Senator indeed.

The fact of the matter is the frank is grossly overly used, and frankly it is abused. Let us face it. It is one of the prerogatives Members of Congress use to get reelected. It is one of the reasons why the reelection rate in the House of Representatives, for example, for those who seek reelection is 98.5 percent. At least it was in the last election. That is outrageous.

We used to hear about the imperial Presidency. Now it is imperial Congress, or if you will the invisible Congress, the unconquerable Congress. One of the reasons we have such a sluggish and almost nonexistent turnover in the membership of this body, and in particular the House, is that the incumbents have such enormous advantages over challengers. One of those enormous advantages, let us be honest, is the frank, the ability to use that frank, to save it up, and to use it heavily prior to an election cycle so that we can get our name out there before the American people. I did it. I think most Members have done it. It is an enormous temptation. So let us deal with it sensibly removing the temptation.

That is what the amendment of the Senator from California would do. It would simply zero out funds for mass mailings and devote the savings to a very praiseworthy and humanitarian effort—namely, the relief of these distressed children who are born to mothers who have abused drugs. It would devote the savings to that and to other programs in the area of dealing with this terrible problem of drug abuse in our society.

We will hear a lot of rhetoric in the next few weeks about the so-called war on drugs and the new battle plan, if you will. Here is a way for us to get off on the right foot. Here is a way for us to set an example.

President Bush, in his address, said it is essential that everyone get involved—everyone. Well, we are not used to thinking of ourselves as every man. We like to exempt ourselves from the laws that we pass and the regulations that we force upon everyone else. But maybe it is time to turn over a new leaf. I certainly think it is, and here is the good opportunity to do just that.

So I commend the Senator from California, and it is an outstanding, excellent amendment. I hope it will be adopted. I urge him to stick to his guns and insist upon a rollcall vote so that in conference our negotiators, our conferees, will have a strengthened hand in keeping the Wilson amendment intact and making it a part of the appropriations bill as it comes out of the conference.

AMENDMENT NO. 702

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I have a number of amendments again dealing with the frank. I send this first one to the desk, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HUMPHREY] proposes an amendment numbered 702. On page 60, line 10, strike "included" and insert "published quarterly in the Congressional Record and included".

On page 61, line 5, strike "included" and insert "published quarterly in the Congressional Record and included".

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the essence of this amendment is very simple indeed. That is to require publication of the report which this legislation anticipates in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. If reporting is a good thing, if divulging information about Members and their use of the frank is a good thing, then it is a better thing to widely disseminate that report.

As the legislation now stands absent my amendment, that information will be published in the report of the Clerk of the House and the report of the Secretary of the Senate. In any event, that report is thousands of pages long. This particular element of the report—the use of the frank which is broken down by each Member—would be buried in thousands of pages.

In any event, that entire report has rather limited circulation whereas the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is well known, and is widely circulated among reporters and other members of the news media. It is sent to the public libraries and thousands of communities across our country. It is very widely read.

The point is that by publishing it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD it would get wider dissemination. Is that good? I think so because the whole point, the whole rationale, in producing this report is to put the spotlight on the use of the frank and to put the spotlight on each and every Member of the Congress, each Member of the Senate, each Member of the House, and let the public know just how much that Member has used the frank or abused the frank, as the case may be.

So if reporting is a good thing, then wider dissemination of the report is that much better.

Mr. President, first, I commend the efforts of the two managers, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. REID] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES] for the language contained in the pending bill intended to restrict the use of congressional mass mailings.

The amendment I am offering will complement the work of the managers. This amendment will require that the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate shall submit for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a quarterly tabulation of the mail costs for each Member. This tabulation shall include the Member's name, the total number of pieces of mass-mail mailed during the quarter, the total cost of such mail, and the cost of such mail divided by the total population of the area from which the Member was elected.

While the Secretary of the Senate currently reports similar information for the Senate, the House does not. This change, combined with the publication in the RECORD, will ensure increased accountability with regard to the use of the frank and thus, it is hoped, curb some abuses.

There have been abuses. Congress' penchant for self-promotion has created a mass mail monster which has invaded millions of American mailboxes. We have created a congressional franking-stein.

According to the Congressional Research Service, over the last 18 years, Congress has spent over $1 billion for official mail. The cost of congressional mailings has escalated from $54 million in fiscal year 1981 to $114 million in fiscal year 1988. During fiscal year 1988, the House of Representatives received 157 million pieces of mail, and sent out 549 million pieces for a total cost of $77.9 million. The Senate received 54 million pieces of mail, and sent out 257 million pieces, for a total cost of $35.5 million.

Thus, last year, Congress spent a total of $114 million on mail costs, and sent out approximately 5 pieces of mail for each letter it received.

If you divide the 806 million pieces of mail sent out by Congress in 1988 by the number of working days in a year, this works out to slightly over 3 million pieces of mail per working day. If you divide that number by the 535 Members of Congress, this means that in 1988, Congress sent out an average of 5,765 pieces of mail, per day, per Member.

Yet, the problem of overzealous congressional mailings does not end when the newsletters are sent on their merry way. According to figures compiled by the U.S. Postal Service, from January 1, 1988 to July 1, 1989—an 18-month period—the U.S. Senate spent over $1.8 million on mass mailings which were returned because they were undeliverable. The total volume of this mail was approximately 8.3 million pieces.

Indeed, over a 3-month period ending last December 1988, two Senators spent a total of $300,000 without having sent out a single mass mailing during that period. How was this done? This money was used to pay for postage due mail from their previous month's mass mailings.

I believe that the American people have a right to be told about this outrageous waste of their tax dollars. This is why I believe that it is imperative that this information be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Under the pending bill, mass mail costs would be printed in the report of the Secretary of the Senate and the report of the Clerk of the House. I do not believe that these documents will allow for the greatest distribution of this information. According to the Government Printing Office, only 2,853 copies of the Secretary of the Senate's report are printed twice a year. Likewise, only 2,603 copies of the report of the Clerk of the House are distributed. In contrast, 21,500 copies of the RECORD are printed each and every day we are in session.

Further, I would suggest that the RECORD is a much easier document to read. I would welcome my colleagues to page through the Secretary of the Senate's latest report. The last version printed in May was two volumes, and totaled 1,779 pages. For the Senator's information, the quarterly mass mail report was on pages 1,562 and 1,563.

Finally, the RECORD has a wide and relatively diverse distribution. During the House hearing on legislative branch appropriations, it was reported that 6,100 copies of the RECORD are distributed for congressional use; 8,600 copies are distributed to correspondents, ex-Members, agencies, judges and other designated recipients, and 6,700 copies are sold to the general public.

For those Senators who are concerned about what type of additional cost which this would impose, a single page in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is $507. The quarterly mass mail costs for all Members of Congress could easily be printed on 1 or 2 pages of the RECORD—a small sum to pay for the efficient distribution of this information.

I believe that this modest proposal will improve on the package the committee has presented to the Senate. I urge support for my amendment.

The amendment, I am told, is acceptable to the managers on both sides.

Mr. REID. The Senator from New Hampshire is correct. The committee accepts the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment (No. 702) of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HUMPHREY].

The amendment (No. 702) was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REID. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I trust that the managers on both sides would make a good faith effort, notwithstanding the absence of a rollcall vote, inasmuch as they have accepted the amendment——

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Good faith effort to ensure that these amendments are retained in the conference report.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Of course.

Mr. REID. I have spoken at great length to Senator NICKLES. We have indicated that if these amendments help us in conference, we will do what we can to preserve our position.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am heartened to hear that, Mr. President.

AMENDMENT NO. 703

(Purpose: To require that Congressional mass mailing clearly state that they are mailed at taxpayer expense)

Mr. HUMPHREY. I send a second amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HUMPHREY] proposes an amendment numbered 703.

On page 61, between lines 11 and 12, insert the following:

(C) A mass mailing (as defined in section 3210(a)(6)(E) of title 39, United States Code) by a Senator or a Member of the House of Representatives shall contain the following notice in a prominent place on the cover page of the document: "PREPARED, PUBLISHED, AND MAILED AT TAXPAYER EXPENSE."

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, again this is a very simple amendment. In a sense, these mass mailings are political advertising, so let us call this the truth-in-advertising amendment. Let us state on the first page of these mass mailings sent out at taxpayers expense that in fact they are, as the amendment requires, and that they be stated to say, "prepared, published, and mailed at taxpayer expense," right there on the front page where the taxpayers, before they fall asleep reading this stuff, will get the message about who is sending it and at whose expense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment.

Mr. REID. The committee accepts the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. HUMPHREY.

The amendment (No. 703) was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REID. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 704

(Purpose: To limit franked Congressional mass mailings to 2 sheets of paper)

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I have a third amendment I send to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HUMPHREY] proposes an amendment numbered 704.

On page 61, between lines 11 and 12, insert the following:

(C) A mass mailing (as defined in section 3210(a)(6)(E) of title 39, United States Code) by a Senator or a Member of the House of Representatives shall be limited to 2 sheets of legal size paper (or their equivalent), including any enclosure that—

(i) is prepared by or for the Senator or Member who makes the mailing; or

(ii) contains information concerning, expresses the views of, or otherwise relates to the Senator or Member who makes the mailing.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, under the legislation of the bill that is now before us, Senators are limited to two mass mailings per year. As I understand it, House Members are limited to four. But there is no limit to the number of sheets of paper that each of those mailings may contain. In other words, where the Senate would be limited now to two mass mailings, a Senator, if he chose, could send out 6, 8, 10, 12, 20 pages in each of those mass mailings. Obviously, the cost of such a mailing, multipage mailing, would be very great indeed. With respect to the cost-savings features of this bill, it would largely defeat them.

The purpose of the amendment which I have now offered is to limit the number of pages which may compromise each of these mass mailings in either House, to limit it to two legal-sized sheets of paper printed on both sides. In other words, four printed pages, legal-sized pages. If you cannot say it in four pages, then you are in big trouble.

I suspect there are a few, indeed many, who are seeking to make the motion of the frank, who will, in fact, send out huge catalogs called newsletters, full of pictures and self-aggrandizing. Therefore, I think it is prudent to nail the door a little more tightly closed and ensure that these mass mailings, limited now under this bill—two and four, respectively—that it will not compromise more than two sheets of legal-sized paper printed on both sides.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, we have reviewed in detail the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire and feel that it is a good amendment. Certainly this sets guidelines that we can all live with. It would, in effect, be a four-page letter. I think it is good, and the committee would accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment (No. 704) was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REID. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I thank Senator REID and Senator NICKLES for their cooperation. We did not have to twist their arms at all. We are very happy with the meeting of the minds. These are some fairly substantive matters. They are not going to change, probably, the fate of the Nation by themselves, but they are significant. I appreciate the cooperation of the Senators in this.

There really and truly is something wrong with our system when we have such a sluggish turnover in the membership of Congress. It is a bad thing, because power corrupts. I do not care how noble and well-meaning an individual may be. The longer he or she is around, the more likely it is that subconsciously, insidiously, that person will be corrupted by all the power and the glory forever, as some would like to have it forever, it seems, of this institution. It is pretty powerful and breathtaking, and it turns your head. It sways your judgment, and it would be a lot better for this country if we had a more frequent, rapid, and regularized turnover in the membership of this body, this Congress. I think there would be a good deal more intellectual honesty in our legislation and vastly more political courage in our conduct if that were the case. Because Members nowadays are increasingly confident of reelection because they have increasing powers to secure reelection relative to challengers, the quality of our stewardship, in my opinion—and I have watched it for 11 years—is growing decidedly worse year after year. These proposals curb that to some little extent and are only to the good.

I congratulate the Senators for their positive efforts in this area.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I was pleased to learn that this bill as reported by the Subcommittee on Legislative Branch Appropriations and the full Appropriations Committee includes an earmark of $30,000 to support the employment of one certified sign-language interpreter. I commend my colleague from Nevada, Senator REID, for this initiative.

This body is on the verge of voting on major, comprehensive legislation to address discrimination against disabled individuals. It is imperative that the Senate provide leadership by example.

In 1984 the Senate took an important step toward breaking the barriers between this institution and disabled citizens. The Senate created a special office within the Sergeant-at-Arms office to assist disabled tourists. In the past year, that office has experienced a 57-percent increase in service requests.

The office simply cannot respond to staff requests when it must assist over 3,000 visitors a year. Senate staffs have tried, usually unsuccessfully, to obtain the assistance of this office for their own internal needs. In the month of January, over 100 requests for services had to be denied due to staff and resource limitations.

This office provides a wonderful and necessary service, Mr. President, but we must do better. Disabled citizens should not only have every chance to tour our great Capitol, but to work in it as well.

For these reasons, this new appropriation should be available to assist hearing-impaired Senate staff. The appropriation of funds for a sign-language interpreter is one small, but very important way we can ensure the hiring and promotion of qualified, hearing-impaired employees.

Mr. President, I am a cosponsor of the Americans with Disabilities Act largely because it will open the doors for employment opportunities to millions of disabled citizens. The Senate must open its doors also.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Florida that the Senate must be a leader by example. It is my intention that, through this additional appropriation of $30,000 for a sign-language interpreter, the Senate will more aggressively seek qualified, hearing-impaired job candidates and more aggressively serve, train, and promote hearing impaired staff.

(By request of Mr. REID, the following statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD:)

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, the Senate Budget Committee has examined, H.R. 3012, the legislative branch appropriations bill and has found that the bill is under its 302(b) budget authority allocation by $48 million and is under its 302(b) outlay allocation by less than 1 million.

I compliment the distinguished manager of the bill, Senator REID, and the distinguished ranking member of the Legislative Branch Subcommittee, Senator NICKLES on all of their hard work.

Mr. President, I have a table from the Budget Committee showing the official scoring of the legislative branch appropriations bill and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The table follows:

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, today's legislative appropriations report includes strong support for an important plan to implement a recycling program in the U.S. Senate. The report language instructs the Architect of the Capitol to proceed with a plan that would help the Senate recycle paper more efficiently.

According to the EPA Americans generate 160 million tons of trash every year. Only 10 percent of this waste is recycled, and 15 percent used for waste combustion. That means 75 percent of our Nation's solid waste is dumped in landfills. With one-third of our Nation's landfills scheduled to close by 1991, it is imperative that we encourage the American people to step up efforts to recycle products after use.

While I am pleased to see the number of bills introduced in Congress to promote recycling, I feel that we as a Congress must set the example for the rest of the Nation. Capitol Hill currently produces 20,000 tons of trash every year, of which only 30 percent is recycled. To no one's surprise, much of the Hill's trash is high-grade paper for which there is currently a large demand. Instead of paying people to dump our paper, along with wrappers, food, and other trash, in landfills, we could be responding to this market demand with recycled high-grade paper.

That is why I introduced Senate Resolution 99, which would implement a voluntary paper separation and recycling program in the Senate. On August 1, the House of Representatives passed a similar bill in the House, and my office is currently working with the Architect of the Capitol's Office to start a pilot project on the fifth and sixth floors of the Hart building. By separating our high-grade paper from newspaper and other waste, we can profit economically as well as environmentally from improved recycling.

This resolution is now included in the legislative appropriations report, and I would urge all of my fellow Senators to support this measure and encourage their staffs to participate in this program.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate return to the consideration of the committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Hearing none, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be considered and agreed to en bloc, provided that no points of order under rule XVI be waived thereon and the measure, as amended, be considered as original text for the purpose of further amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The committee amendments were agreed to en bloc.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I withdraw my unanimous-consent request to adopt the committee amendments en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be agreed to en bloc, that the only amendment remaining in order to the bill be the Wilson amendment, No. 698, that it be in order, that the bill, H.R. 3014 be laid aside until 12 noon tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Hearing none, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, for the information of Senators, we will remain briefly to move toward the Americans With Disabilities Act, which will be a subject of a meeting shortly among the distinguished Republican leader and other interested Senators.

It is my hope that I will be able to indicate shortly, following advice from the distinguished Republican leader, our plans in that regard for the evening and for tomorrow. It is my hope that we will be able to complete action on the legislative appropriations bill sometime tomorrow, as indicated in the unanimous consent request, which was approved. We will go back to it at noon tomorrow with only the Wilson amendment remaining.

Mr. DOLE. If the majority leader will yield.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. DOLE. We are having meetings as we speak on the Americans With Disabilities Act. It is our hope that we can obtain consent tonight and bring that bill up tomorrow after consultation with the two leaders, following disposition of the legislative appropriations bill. As I understand it, if we cannot work it out, the majority leader has no other choice but to do what he has to do, to move to proceed to the legislation.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator is correct. If I might say, it is my hope that if we can do that, we can start on that in the morning and begin to work toward it and then set this aside and come back to it after this is disposed of. I thank the distinguished Republican leader.

Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Republican leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader is recognized.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Kalbaugh, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations and a withdrawal which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE NATIONAL CORPORATION FOR HOUSING PARTNERSHIPS AND THE NATIONAL HOUSING PARTNERSHIP—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 59

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report: which was referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

I herewith transmit the 20th annual report of the National Corporation for Housing Partnerships and the National Housing Partnership for the fiscal year ending February 28, 1989, in accordance with the provisions of section 3938(a)(1) of title 42 of the United States Code.

GEORGE BUSH.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 6, 1989.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS

A message from the President of the United States announced that he had approved and signed the following enrolled joint resolutions:

On July 21, 1989:

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES RECEIVED DURING ADJOURNMENT

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of August 2, 1989, the following reports of committees were submitted on August 30, 1989:

By Mr. JOHNSTON, from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources with an amendment in the nature of a substitute and an amendment to the title:

S. 558. A bill to authorize a study on methods to protect and interpret the internationally significant Lechuguilla Cave at Carlsbad Caverns National Park in the State of New Mexico (Rept. No. 101-109).

S. 855. A bill to direct the Secretary of the Interior to establish a cave research institute at Carlsbad Caverns National Park (Rept. No. 101-110).

By Mr. JOHNSTON, from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, with amendments:

S. 931. A bill to protect a segment of the Genesee River in New York (Rept. No. 101-111).

By Mr. JOHNSTON, from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute:

S. 940. A bill to designate segments of the East Fork of the Jemez River and of the Pacos River as components of the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 101-112).

By Mr. JOHNSTON, from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, with amendments:

S. 974. A bill to designate certain lands in the State of Nevada as wilderness, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 101-113).

By Mr. JOHNSTON, from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, without amendment:

H.R. 419. A bill to provide for the addition of certain parcels to the Harry S Truman National Historic Site in the State of Missouri (Rept. No. 101-114).

H.R. 1529. A bill to provide for the establishment of the White Haven National Historic Site in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 101-115).

By Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute:

S. 933. A bill to establish a clear and comprehensive prohibition of discrimination on the bases of disability (Rept. No. 101-116).

By Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, without amendment:

S. 1182. A bill to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to restore the minimum wage to a fair and equitable rate, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 101-117).

By Mr. HOLLINGS, from the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute:

H.R. 838. A bill to authorize the Secretary of Transportation to release restrictions on the use of certain property conveyed to the Peninsula Airport Commission for airport purposes (Rept. No. 101-118).

H.R. 1486. A bill to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1990 for the Maritime Administration and for other purposes (Rept. No. 101-119).

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. JOHNSTON, from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute:

S. 712. A bill to provide for a referendum on the political status of Puerto Rico (Rept. No. 101-120).

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. BOSCHWITZ:

S. 1581. A bill for the relief of Stella Ubgoajah; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SIMON (for himself, Mr. PELL, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. REID, and Mr. ROBB):

S. 1582. A bill to amend the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 to provide for certain forms of assistance to Poland to ensure the success of freedom and democracy in Poland; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. BENTSEN:

S. 1583. A bill to amend the Disaster Assistance Act of 1989 to ensure that the net value of any crop planted to replace a crop for which disaster payments were received is considered when reducing the amount of such payments to avoid double payments; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

By Mr. CRANSTON:

S. 1584. A bill regarding the reliquidation of certain extracorporeal shock wave lithotripter.

By Mr. BINGAMAN:

S. 1585. A bill to amend the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act to improve procedures for the implementation of State compacts providing for the establishment and operation of regional disposal facilities for municipal and industrial solid waste, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

By Mr. GRAMM (for himself and Mrs. KASSEBAUM):

S. 1586. A bill to clarify a provision of the Disaster Assistance Act of 1989 in order to avoid penalizing producers who planted a replacement crop on disaster affected acreage, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

By Mr. HELMS:

S. 1587. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide for the designation on income tax forms of overpayments of tax and contributions to reward the return of a Vietnam POW/MIA; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. D'AMATO:

S.J. Res. 195. Joint resolution proclaiming Christopher Columbus to be an honorary citizen of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SUBMISSION OF CONCURRENT AND SENATE RESOLUTIONS

The following concurrent resolutions and Senate resolutions were read, and referred (or acted upon), as indicated:

By Mr. GRAMM (for himself and Mr. BENTSEN):

S. Res. 172. Resolution to acknowledge the high achievement, commitment, and vision of Mickey Leland; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DOLE (for himself and Mr. MITCHELL):

S. Res. 173. Resolution to express gratitude to David A. Brody; considered and agreed to.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. SIMON (for himself, Mr. PELL, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. REID, and Mr. ROBB):

S. 1582. A bill to amend the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 to provide for certain forms of assistance to Poland to ensure the success of freedom and democracy in Poland; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

INVESTMENT IN FREEDOM AND DEMOCRACY IN POLAND ACT OF 1989

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I am introducing at this point a piece of legislation that will be known as the Investment in Freedom and Democracy in Poland Act of 1989. Initial cosponsors are Senator PELL, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee; Senator CRANSTON, who just headed a group going to Poland; and Senator HARKIN. I welcome colleagues on both sides joining in cosponsoring this legislation.

It is extremely important that we act and act quickly in the Polish situation. I just spent 6 days in Poland. I met with the leaders of Solidarity, Lech Welesa, and the new Prime Minister. I met with just a broad spectrum of people there. For the first time in the history of modern civilization, we have a country that is moving from Communist totalitarianism to a free system. It is delicate. We have the government in the hands of Solidarity. You have the guns still in the hands of the Communists.

No one can be sure what can happen. But what we do know is there is a window of opportunity here that we ought to move into and seize and seize quickly.

What my bill does is basically three things. One is it says we will, subject to the approval of the President, postpone the payment of interest on the debt of Poland to the United States for 3 years, and then the following 2 years it be cut in half. So there is a 5-year period where the interest would be applied to the principal. It does mean some temporary loss of income, but if the United States can lead, then other nations can follow.

The Polish debt to the rest of the world is roughly $39 billion. Eight percent of that is owed to the United States.

I talked while I was in Warsaw with one ambassador of a major lender country to Poland, and he indicated they would be interested. I talked to another diplomat from another lending country and he indicated they would be interested.

I think it is extremely important that the United States act and act swiftly and generously.

The President has suggested a program that is, frankly, more modest than the program I have suggested. But it is interesting even in a little editorial in Time magazine—and I do not recall that kind of an editorial comment before—it said the President's program is inadequate.

Now, in fairness to the President, his program was introduced before Solidarity emerged as the government there, so we have a different situation.

My proposal is basically postponement of interest on debt. You capitalize that, make that part of the principal. No. 2, that we create a revolving fund of $300 million a year, up to $100 million of which could be food grains to help meat production in Poland, but $300 million for each of 3 years would be available for Poles or Americans who would want to get going on a free market system. Of the Polish agriculture, roughtly 75 percent is free, 25 percent state run; but in the industrial sector only 5 percent is free, roughly 95 percent is state run. And if Poland can shift over to a free enterprise system and a freely elected system of governance, then inevitably that is going to affect Hungary, it is going to affect the Soviet Union, it is going to change the political back of the world. We are at one of those crucial junctions in history where things really can change.

There is a third factor in my bill that I should have mentioned. It is a 1-year $25 million grant to the Government of Poland where they would on a competitive bid basis ask for a modernization of the telephone system; an American company should get the contract for that.

What you have is a very critical time period in which we have to move. Lech Walesa, in my talks with him, said it is really up to the United States to lead to make sure we can preserve our freedom.

I think that is not an exaggeration. We have to move. From meeting with the various leaders of Solidarity, I think the new leaders of the Government in Poland are probably the most exceptional leaders of a new government since the people who founded our Government 200 years ago. That is a strong statement, but I think it is true. With the possible exception of when President Sadat visited the Knesset in Jerusalem, this is the most important political change that has come about on the face of the Earth since World War II. We must take advantage of it and take advantage of it quickly.

I would add that my bill has safeguards. The President at any point can suspend what has happened. It is not a substitute for Poland facing her own problems. She has some very severe inflation problems. They have to make some tough decisions. But the United States must come through, and I hope that my colleagues will act and act quickly.

Again, I am open to other ideas, but what I have outlined here I have checked with the leaders of Solidarity as well as others who are knowledgeable on the Polish situation. I think what I am suggesting is sound. I hope we move quickly.

S. 1583. A bill to amend the Disaster Assistance Act of 1989 to ensure that the net value of any crop planted to replace a crop for which disaster payments were received is considered when reducing the amount of such payments to avoid double payments; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

PROHIBITION OF DOUBLE PAYMENTS ON REPLANTED ACREAGE

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, the bill which I am introducing today will correct a major error which was made by the Secretary of Agriculture last week.

Just before the August recess we passed, and the President signed into law, a disaster bill to help farmers who have lost crops to drought, hail, and a wide variety of other extreme weather conditions which have hit major parts of our country this year. One of the provisions of that bill, section 110, provided that the value of any second crop should be deducted from the disaster assistance payment. These second crop acres are sometimes referred to as "ghost acres" because farmers had been assured by the local ASCS offices that crops planted on those acres would not be counted for purposes other than farm program provisions such as acreage bases.

The President has a signing ceremony to announce that help was coming to our hard-pressed farmers, but last week the Secretary of Agriculture jerked the rug out from under many of those farmers when he issued rules for implementing section 110. The new rules do not make sense. They will deny disaster program benefits to many farmers who were expecting help and were counting on that help.

The press release issued by the Secretary states:

> The value of a replacement crop will be used to determine the producer's disaster payment for losses on the first crop. However, the value will be determined by reducing the actual replacement crop production by 25 percent, then multiplying the result by an average market price.

Mr. President, the Secretary is saying that he will assume that the farmer's profit margin on his replacement crop is 75 percent of the crop. This decision is arbitrary, capricious, and unreasonable.

In other words, this decision looks like a typical bureaucratic compromise. I had written to Secretary Yeutter last week concerning a major argument which was taking place behind the scenes over those rules. One faction with the USDA was arguing that the gross, not net, value of the crop should be deducted from the disaster payment. That was ridiculous. The intent in that bill was not to pay full disaster payments to farmers who made a profit from their second crop. Using the gross value for purposes of section 110 would have denied disaster payments to most farmers who planted a second crop and rewarded those farmers who did nothing. That is wrong, and I told the Secretary that.

Well, the Secretary apparently has decided that the law did indeed intend that the section 110 adjustment be done on the basis of the net value of the crop. That, at least, is good news.

However, the Secretary has also apparently sided with those who were trying to gut the disaster bill. He has ruled that 75 percent of the total value of the second crop will be considered to be net income for purposes of section 110. That is ridiculous. A number of farmers have pointed out to me that if they had any crop that would yield them a net return of 75 percent of total sales that they would have no need for farm programs, let alone disaster programs. That crop would also be their primary crop, not a secondary crop.

I hope that the Secretary can show the farmers in Texas a crop which they can grow and on which they can make a profit of 75 percent of sales. I might add that it should be a crop which will not get them sent to jail.

The fact of the matter, however, is that Texas farmers did not have any such profitable second crop. When they lost their primary crop, most farmers put in a second crop to try to make a little money. Many were required to do that by Federal Crop Insurance. Some will make a little money on that second crop. Many will not. However, none will make a profit of 75 percent of sales.

This requirement is simply confiscatory. It is also very bad policy. It makes no sense to reward farmers who did nothing and punish farmers who worked hard to produce a second crop.

The bill which I am introducing today will remedy that by requiring the Secretary of Agriculture to do what he should have done already—use the true net value of the second crop in calculating the disaster payment.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join with me in seeking prompt solution to this problem. The importance of this legislation is magnified by the fact that this is the first time this Secretary has issued regulations to carry out a major piece of farm legislation signed by this administration. I believe that we should work together to develop, pass, and implement legislation for the good of our country. That requires a high degree of cooperation, understanding, and trust. We cannot do that if implementing regulations are going to be used to cripple programs.

We will be writing a major farm bill next year. In the best of times that is a very lengthy piece of legislation. If we are going to have to write every little section of that bill in a way that will make it bullet-proof against foulups like this then it will be a truly massive undertaking. I do not want that. I do not want to force such a burden upon the Agriculture Committee or upon the staff at the USDA.

I again urge the Secretary to come forth with a real net value rule. If not, then I will seek to have this provision included in the upcoming budget reconciliation bill if no earlier vehicle is available.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be inserted in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1583

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. PROHIBITION ON DOUBLE PAYMENTS ON REPLANTED ACREAGE FOR PURPOSES OF DISASTER PAYMENTS.

Section 110 of the Disaster Assistance Act of 1989 is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by striking out "value" and inserting in lieu thereof "net value";

(2) in subsection (c)(1), by striking out "value" and inserting in lieu thereof "net value"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) NET VALUE.—For purposes of this section, the net value of a crop shall be the product of—

"(1) the amount of the replacement crop harvested in 1989; multiplied by

"(2) the market price for such crop; less

"(3) the average cost per acre for the production of such crop in the area in which such crop is produced, as determined by the Secretary.".

By Mr. CRANSTON:

S. 1584. A bill regarding the reliquidation of a certain extracorporeal shock wave lithotripter; to the Committee on Finance.

REGARDING EXTRACORPOREAL SHOCK WAVE LITHOTRIPTER

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill which would correct an inequitable situation. In 1985, a nonprofit medical center in California imported a kidney lithotripter. Under the Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Materials Importation Act of 1966, this entry should have been duty free. The center submitted a duty-free application to the Commerce Department, but due to administrative delays, decided to pay the duty in order to have the entry released. Unfortunately, by the time the center's application was approved, the Customs Service had already liquidated the entry and refused to refund the duty payment.

In the interest of fairness, this entry should be reliquidated and the duty payment refunded to the center. In the past, refunds have been made to other organizations which paid import duties on kidney lithotripters. Moreover, this course would be cost effective for the government. The duty refund will be applied to the capital cost of the lithotripter, thus reducing the amount by which the center is reimbursed by Medicare.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1584

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, notwithstanding section 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1514) or any other provision of law, upon proper request filed with the appropriate Customs officer within 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act entry numbered 86-707943-6, dated November 10, 1985, shall be reliquidated as duty-free and the appropriate refund of duty made.

S. 1585. A bill to amend the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act to improve procedures for the implementation of State compacts providing for the establishment and operation of regional disposal facilities for municipal and industrial solid waste, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

SOLID WASTE COMPACT ACT OF 1989

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation that would greatly enhance the States' ability to address substantively and responsibly our growing solid waste problem. With the upcoming reauthorization of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act [RCRA], now is the time to develop a comprehensive plan for handling this increasingly serious problem. I believe my legislation, the Solid Waste Compact Act of 1989, is a crucial step toward providing a solution to the solid waste disposal problem in the Nation.

Americans generate over 160 million tons of solid waste each year. This is more than one-half ton per person. There are several alternatives available to communities for managing solid waste. Landfills have become the preferred method in many areas, such as New Mexico, where the costs of landfill disposal are cheaper than other options. However, many areas of the Nation are now experiencing shortfalls of permitted landfill capacity as the amount of waste increases. The Environmental Protection Agency estimates that 80 percent of existing permitted landfills will close within 20 years. The problems associated with the disposal of solid waste are rapidly becoming evident across the country, causing local communities major difficulties.

New Mexico has not escaped this crisis. I chaired a forum in Las Cruces, NM, in April on the solid waste issue. I heard from local, county, and State officials on the tremendous challenge facing our State in dealing with the waste dilemma. The declining number of landfills has caused communities in New Mexico and throughout the United States to transport their wastes greater distances for disposal which has increased disposal costs. Siting new landfills is difficult because of the potential environmental risks involved. As siting becomes more difficult and as the volume of waste increases, solid waste disposal, once considered a local problem, has become a national concern.

I hope the development of compacts will assist States such as New Mexico by focusing needed attention on other alternatives for solid waste management, including recycling and incineration. Recycling is one area that clearly deserves increased attention and Federal support. Recycling saves energy and conserves natural resources by reducing the use of raw materials.

My legislation would amend the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act to provide a mechanism for States to enter into whatever compacts that may be necessary to provide for the disposal of solid waste which can be most safely and effectively managed on a regional basis. Each State would be responsible for providing, either by itself or in cooperation with other States, a plan to satisfactorily dispose of all solid waste that is generated within their State. Within 12 months of the enactment of the Solid Waste Compact Act of 1989, each State would submit its plan to the United States EPA for approval. Each compact that is developed must be approved by Congress. Compacts must be ratified every 5 years. Additionally, the Environmental Protection Agency would be required to identify potential alternative management programs for the control of solid waste, and establish and publish technical guidance regarding the implementation of such programs.

With the reauthorization of RCRA, we in Congress have a great opportunity to take a creative approach to answering the serious problems associated with solid waste. This legislation represents an important effort to develop a comprehensive strategy for solid waste management. I am pleased that Congressman KANJORSKI has introduced similar legislation in the House. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1585

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. 101. SHORT TITLE.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Solid Waste Compact Act of 1989".

SEC. 102. AMENDMENT TO THE RESOURCE CONSERVATION AND RECOVERY ACT.

The Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (42 U.S.C. 6903) is amended by inserting at the end of section 6903 the following:

"(40) COMPACT—The term 'compact' means a compact entered into by two or more States pursuant to this act.

"(41) COMPACT COMMISSION—The term 'compact commission' means the regional commission, committee, or board established in a compact to administer such compact.

"(42) COMPACT REGION—The term 'compact region' means the area consisting of all States that are members of the compact.

"(43) SOLID WASTE DISPOSAL—The term 'solid waste disposal' means the recycling, incinerating, depositing into landfills, or burning of solid waste pursuant to the requirements established by the Environmental Protection Agency, or any State environmental agency in which a compact is physically located.

"(44) NON-SITED COMPACT REGION—The term 'non-sited compact region' means any compact region that is not a sited compact region.

"(45) REGIONAL DISPOSAL FACILITY—The term 'regional disposal facility' means a non-Federal municipal or solid waste disposal facility in operation January 1, 1990, or subsequently established and operated under a compact.

"(46) SOLID WASTE—The term 'solid waste' pertains to any nonhazardous waste generated by a municipality, industry, or community.

"(47) STATE—The term 'State' means any State of the United States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.".

SEC. 103. The Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (42 U.S.C. 6904) is amended by striking subsections (a) and (b) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(a) STATE RESPONSIBILITIES.—Each State shall be responsible for providing, either by itself or in cooperation with other states, a plan to adequately dispose of all solid waste that is generated within their state. Within 12 months of the enactment of the Solid Waste Compact Act of 1989 each State shall submit their plan to the United States Environmental Protection Agency for approval.

"(b) REGIONAL COMPACTS FOR SOLID WASTE DISPOSAL.—(1) IN GENERAL.—

"(A) FEDERAL POLICY.—It is the policy of the Federal Government that the responsibilities of the States under section (a) for the disposal of solid waste can be most safely and effectively managed on a regional basis.

"(B) INTERSTATE COMPACTS.—To carry out the policy set forth in paragraph (A) the States may enter into such compacts as may be necessary to provide for the establishment and operation of regional disposal facilities for solid waste.

"(2) APPLICABILITY TO FEDERAL ACTIVITIES.—

"(A) EFFECT OF COMPACTS ON FEDERAL LAW.—Nothing contained in this Act or any compact may be construed to confer any new authority on any compact commission or State—

"(i) to regulate the package, generation, treatment, storage, disposal, or transportation of solid waste in a manner incompatible with the regulations of the Environmental Protection Agency or inconsistent with the Department of Transportation;

"(ii) to regulate health, safety, or environmental hazards from source or byproduct material.

"(B) FEDERAL AUTHORITY.—Except as expressly provided in this Act, nothing contained in this act or any compact may be construed to limit the applicability of any Federal law or to diminish or to otherwise impair the jurisdiction of any action taken pursuant to any compact.

"(C) STATE AUTHORITY PRESERVED.—Except as expressly provided in this Act, nothing contained in this Act expands, diminishes, or otherwise affects State law.

"(3) RESTRICTED USE OF REGIONAL SOLID WASTE DISPOSAL FACILITIES.—Any authority in a compact to restrict the use of regional solid waste disposal facilities under the compact to the disposal of solid waste generated within the compact region shall not take effect before each of the following occurs:

"(1) January 1, 1991; and

"(2) the Congress by law consents to the compact.

"(4) CONGRESSIONAL REVIEW.—Each compact shall: Provide, That every 5 years after the compact has taken effect the Congress may by law withdraw its consent.

"(c) ALTERNATIVE SOLID WASTE DISPOSAL METHODS.—

"(1) Not later than 12 months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Compact Act of 1989, the Environmental Protection Agency shall, in consultation with the States and other interested persons, identify potential alternative management programs for the control of solid waste, and establish and publish technical guidance regarding the implementation of such programs.

"(2) Not later than 24 months after the date of the enactment of the Solid Waste Compact Act of 1989, the Environmental Protection Agency shall, in consultation with the States and other interested persons, identify and publish all relevant technical information regarding the technologies pursuant to subsection (1) that a State or compact must provide to the Agency in order to pursue such programs, together with the requirements that such facilities must meet, in the judgment of the Agency, if pursued as an alternative to traditional solid waste management.●

By Mr. HELMS:

S. 1587. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide for the designation on income tax forms of overpayments of tax and contributions to reward the return of a Vietnam POW/MIA; to the Committee on Finance.

VIETNAM POW/MIA RESCUE FUND

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, the question of whether any American might still be held captive in Southeast Asia is one that is deeply troubling in the mind of the American public. The official policy of the United States Government—as stated in a report in the outgoing days of the Reagan administration—is that the United States Government has found "no evidence" that North Vietnam held American prisoners of war after 1973. Nevertheless, in July 1989, Secretary of Defense Richard Cheney reaffirmed a previously longstanding policy in the following words:

Although we have thus far been unable to prove that Americans are still being held against their will, the information available to us precludes ruling out that possibility. Actions to investigate live sighting reports receive and will continue to receive necessary priority and resources based on the assumption that at least some Americans are still held captive.

Therefore, despite official assurances, deep-seated doubts remain in the minds of many Americans. These issues must be resolved once and for all if the American mind is to be satisfied.

Mr. President, a national poll taken in 1987 by Arthur Finkelstein & Associates showed that 84.9 percent of the American public in his sample, which had a margin of error of plus or minus 3 percent, believed that there are Americans still being held captive in Southeast Asia. Another national poll taken by the Wirthlin Group in 1987 found that 82 percent of the Americans polled said yes when asked: "Now, do you believe there are living U.S. prisoners of war held against their will in Vietnam and Laos?"

On June 8 of this year, the Associated Press reported that:

Five or six American POW's were sighted in Vietnam by a Japanese Buddhist monk who spent 14 years in Vietnamese reeducation camps before being freed in January, a Japanese news report said today.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Associated Press article be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

On August 11, 1987, the Washington Times, published a front page story titled: "Vietnam Hints MIA's May Be In Bush Areas." The lead paragraph of the story read:

Vietnam insists it has no live American prisoners under its control but indicates there are wild areas of the country where missing Americans could be living, Presidential envoy Gen. John Vessey said yesterday at the White House.

The story went on to report that—

General Vessey said the Vietnamese agreed to pursue 200 discrepancy cases of which 70 are considered urgent because of compelling evidence the individuals were alive within enemy territory.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article quoted above titled: "Vietnam Hints MIA's May Be In Bush Areas," be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Moreover, Mr. President, a special Pentagon panel—chaired by Lt. Gen. Eugene F. Tighe, Jr., a former director of the Defense Intelligence Agency—concluded in September 1986 after a 5-month review of intelligence files, that American servicemen are still being held in captivity in southeast Asia.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a New York Times article of September 30, 1986, titled: P.O.W.'s Alive in Vietnam, Report Concludes," be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

In 1986, the ABC news magazine "20/20" devoted an entire program to the issue of Americans still captive in Vietnam. The CBS news magazine "60 Minutes" also devoted one segment to this issue. The producer of that "60 Minutes" segment, Monika Jensen Stevenson, and her husband, William Stevenson, are presently completing a book on the POW/MIA issue. Mr. Stevenson is the author of "The Man Called Intrepid," among other nonfiction, intelligence-related books. Both Monica and William Stevenson are convinced, Mr. President, that American servicemen are alive and are still being held captive in Southeast Asia.

In October 1985, the Wall Street Journal reported that Robert C. McFarlane told "a private business group that he believes United States prisoners of war are still being held in Indochina and that the United States should step up efforts to gather conclusive information about any POW's there." The report went on to say that McFarlane said: "There is quite a lot of evidence given by people who have no ulterior motives and no reason to lie, and they're telling things that they have seen."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article titled "McFarlane Tells Group He Believes Some U.S. POW's Remain in Indochina" from the Wall Street Journal of October 15, 1985, and the article titled "McFarlane Says POW's 'Have To Be' in Indochina," from USA Today, be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

I do not know, and I doubt that any of us here knows for certain whether there are American servicemen still being held in Southeast Asia. However, Mr. President, reports that must be taken seriously continue to come to my attention that indicate Americans are still being held in Southeast Asia. Among the most credible reports are some that put the number of Americans being held prisoner in Southeast Asia in the hundreds.

Mr. President, the U.S. Congress must develop a creative and effective policy to resolve this issue. If there are American servicemen being held in Southeast Asia, then the U.S. Senate has the responsibility to see that they are brought home.

Mr. President, one possible way to bring this about is to provide a financial incentive to individuals who might have knowledge of the whereabouts of any American serviceman who may be alive to bring that person home.

Mr. President, the bill before the Senate today provides that incentive. It specifically targets the incentive at any national of Burma, Laos, Cambodia, and Vietnam, in the assumption that such persons would be most likely to have first-hand information.

That is why this bill proposes to create a POW/MIA Rescue Fund. Specifically, this bill would provide a fund to reward any successful rescue of U.S. prisoners of war or persons missing in action by an individual or group of individuals from the countries specified.

It should be noted, Mr. President, that any reward could go only to individuals who are citizens of Burma, Laos, Cambodia, or Vietnam. That means that only citizens from Burma, Laos, Cambodia, or Vietnam are eligible as rescuers to receive the reward. This bill, Mr. President, is not an attempt to encourage American citizens to go off on "Rambo" missions on their own.

The amount of the reward given to any successful rescuer would be determined at the end of the calendar year by the total value in the fund at that time. The fund would be raised and regenerated each year by a $1 checkoff on taxpayer's individual income tax form.

Mr. President, from a budget standpoint this $1 checkoff provision is revenue-neutral, that is, the $1 will come from the taxpayer's own pocket, and not create a deficiency in U.S. Treasury receipts. Functionally, the $1 would be deducted from the taxpayer's refund, if any, or the taxpayer would add it to any amounts due.

The process set forth in this bill is as follows: Participating taxpayers would contribute directly to the establishment of the POW/MIA Rescue Fund. The Secretary of Veteran Affairs would be authorized to establish the regulations for dispersal of any reward and to publicize those terms.

The whole sum in the fund available at the end of the calendar year would then be made available as a reward to any individual or individuals who accomplish a successful rescue pursuant to the regulations established by the Secretary of Veteran Affairs.

All of the funds accumulated at the end of the calendar year would be awarded—based on the number of American servicemen brought out—to any individual or divided among those individuals who had accomplished a successful rescue during that year. For example, suppose that in one year there are two separate successful rescues; and the first rescue team brings back two American POW's, and the second team brings back one American POW. At the end of the year, the team that rescued two POW's would get two-thirds of the reward money in the fund, and the second team would get one-third of the money in the fund.

Needless to say, Mr. President, the proposal includes necessary safeguards. No one is eligible for a reward who is acting in any official or unofficial capacity for any government or agency. This includes both the United States Government, the Vietnamese Government, or indeed any other government.

Furthermore, a rescuer who rescues a person determined by the Secretary of Veteran Affairs who: First, is absent without leave [AWOL]; or second, is a civilian United States Government employee who remained in Southeast Asia voluntarily, the rescuer would not receive any reward. This would insure that no reward would be given on behalf of persons who may have collaborated with their captors.

Further, the American rescued must be positively identified, as defined by regulations established by the Secretary of Veteran Affairs, as a combatant in the Vietnam war, or as an individual in a missing status as a result of the Vietnam conflict.

The bill authorizes the Attorney General of the United States to grant political asylum to any defector who escapes from Southeast Asia with an American POW.

Finally, the program would sunset at the end of the year 2003, a date marking 30 years after the close of the Vietnam war. By the year 2003 the American people could definitely assume the POW/MIA chapter in our history could be closed, after having made a good-faith effort to explore all avenues. If any moneys remain in the POW-MIA Rescue Fund on January 1, 2004, then they would be used to reduce the Federal deficit.

Thus, Mr. President, this bill will assure that the United States will have a policy that:

First, makes the prudent and humane assumption that we should not exclude the possibility that Americans may still be held captive in Southeast Asia;

Second, creates an incentive which may contribute to their discovery and release;

Third, is not funded with imposed taxes but allows each taxpayer to decide personally whether to participate in this national program;

Fourth, does not reward the captors, or any government that may or may not be involved in the holding of the American servicemen;

Fifth, gives the executive branch flexibility to pursue its own policies on this issue; and Sixth, will resolve this issue, over time, in the mind of the American public.

Mr. President, this bill will provide the incentive to any citizen of Burma, Vietnam, Cambodia, or Laos, who has the bravery and ability to find and bring out of Southeast Asia any American servicemen who may be held as prisoners.

Mr. President, this bill is the least we can do for servicemen who may still be held captive. If there are any such captives, we must keep faith with them. We must not abandon them to live as prisoners for the rest of their lives.

Mr. President, until Americans are certain that all of our POWs have come from Southeast Asia, our peace with Vietnam will appear to be a peace without honor.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the official list of the 60 servicemen from North Carolina listed as "MIA" be printed in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD along with the previous referred to material.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1587

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. DESIGNATION OF OVERPAYMENTS OF TAX AND CONTRIBUTIONS TO VIETNAM POW/MIA RESCUE FUND.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter A of chapter 61 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to returns and records) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new part:

"PART IX—DESIGNATION OF OVERPAYMENTS OF TAX AND CONTRIBUTIONS TO VIETNAM POW/MIA RESCUE FUND

"Sec. 6097. Designation by individuals.

"SEC. 6097. DESIGNATION BY INDIVIDUALS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Every individual (other than a nonresident alien) may designate that—

"(1) $1 of any overpayment by such individual of the tax imposed by chapter 1 for the taxable year, or

"(2) $1 cash contribution by such individual who does not overpay such tax, be paid over to the Vietnam POW/MIA Rescue Fund. In the case of a joint return of husband and wife, each spouse may designate that $1 be paid over to the Rescue Fund.

"(b) OVERPAYMENTS TREATED AS REFUNDED.—For purposes of this title, any overpayment of tax designated under subsection (a)(1) shall be treated as being refunded to the taxpayer as of the last date prescribed for filing the return of tax imposed by chapter 1 (determined without regard to extensions) or, if later, the date the return is filed.

"(c) MANNER AND TIME OF DESIGNATION.—A designation under subsection (a) may be made with respect to any taxable year only at the time of filing the return of the tax imposed by chapter 1 for such taxable year. Such designation may be made either on the first page of the return or on the page bearing the taxpayer's signature.

"(d) TERMINATION.—This section shall not apply to any taxable year beginning after December 31, 2002 and no designation may be made under this section after December 31, 2003."

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of parts for subchapter A of chapter 61 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Part IX. Designation of overpayments of tax and contributions to Vietnam POW/MIA Rescue Fund."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1988.

SEC. 2. ESTABLISHMENT OF VIETNAM POW/MIA RESCUE FUND.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter A of chapter 98 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to the trust fund code) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 9511. VIETNAM POW/MIA RESCUE FUND.

"(a) CREATION OF TRUST FUND.—There is established in the Treasury of the United States a trust fund to be known as the 'Vietnam POW/MIA Rescue Fund', consisting of such amounts as may be appropriated or credited to the Rescue Fund as provided in this section or section 9602(b).

"(b) TRANSFER TO VIETNAM POW/MIA RESCUE FUND OF AMOUNTS DESIGNATED.—There is hereby appropriated to the Vietnam POW/MIA Rescue Fund amounts equivalent to the amounts designated under section 6097 and received in the Treasury.

"(c) EXPENDITURES FROM RESCUE FUND.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall pay, on the order of the Secretary of Veterans Affairs, amounts to eligible individuals specified by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs.

"(2) ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—Amounts in the Vietnam POW/MIA Rescue Fund shall be available to pay the administrative expenses of the Department of the Treasury directly allocable to—

"(A) modifying the individual income tax return forms to carry out section 6097,

"(B) carrying out this chapter with respect to such Rescue Fund, and

"(C) processing amounts received under section 6097 and transferring such amounts to such Rescue Fund.

"(d) TERMINATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall use any money remaining in the Rescue Fund on January 1, 2004, to pay at maturity, or to redeem or buy before maturity, an obligation of the Government included in the public debt.

"(2) TREATMENT OF OBLIGATIONS.—Any obligation of the Government which is paid, redeemed, or bought with money from the Rescue Fund shall be cancelled and retired and may not be reissued."

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subchapter A of chapter 98 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 9511. Vietnam POW/MIA Rescue Fund."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1988.

SEC. 3. VIETNAM POW/MIA REWARD PROGRAM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall authorize payments by the Secretary of the Treasury from the Vietnam POW/MIA Rescue Fund on behalf of eligible individuals.

(2) AUTHORIZATION OF PAYMENTS.—Payments under paragraph (1) shall be available—

(A) to reward an eligible individual (or individuals) who, during any calendar year, personally delivers (or collectively deliver) into the custody of the United States Government a living Vietnam POW/MIA, and

(B) to pay the costs of notifying potential eligible individuals of the availability of the Rescue Fund, except that payments under this subparagraph for any fiscal year shall not be less than 5 percent nor more than 10 percent of the balance in the Rescue Fund at the end of such fiscal year.

A reward shall be paid under subparagraph (A) for each living Vietnam POW/MIA delivered and shall be made only at the end of such calendar year (except for the reimbursement of expenses of such eligible individual (or individuals) not exceeding $50,000). The total of all rewards for such calendar year shall equal the total amount in the Rescue Fund available at the end of such calendar year.

(b) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

(1) ELIGIBLE INDIVIDUAL.—The term 'eligible individual' means any national of Laos, Vietnam, Cambodia, or Burma who is not acting in any official or unofficial capacity on behalf of any government or agency.

(2) VIETNAM POW/MIA.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The term "Vietnam POW/MIA" means any individual—

(i) who is a member of a uniform service (within the meaning of section 101(3) of title 37, United States Code) in a missing status (as defined in section 551(2) of such title 37) as a result of the Vietnam conflict, unless it is officially determined under section 552(c) of such title 37 that such individual is officially absent from such individual's post of duty without authority, or

(ii) who is an employee (as defined in section 5561(2) of title 5, United States Code) in a missing status (as defined in section 5561(5) of such title 5) as a result of the Vietnam conflict.

Such term shall not include any individual the Secretary of Veterans Affairs determines remained in Vietnam, Laos, or Cambodia voluntarily.

(B) PERIOD OF CONFLICT.—For purposes of this paragraph, the Vietnam conflict began February 28, 1961, and ended on the date designated by the President by Executive order as the date of the termination of combatant activities in Vietnam. For purposes of this paragraph, an individual is in a missing status as a result of the Vietnam conflict if immediately before such status began he was performing service in Vietnam or was performing service in Southeast Asia in direct support of military operations in Vietnam.

(c) PROTECTIONS FOR ELIGIBLE INDIVIDUALS.—The Attorney General of the United States is authorized to grant political asylum in the United States to any eligible individual who receives a reward under this section, upon the request of such individual.

(d) RIGHTS TO SUE OR BENEFIT ENTITLEMENT NOT CREATED BY SECTION.—This section shall not be construed to create any private right to sue by or on behalf of any eligible individual, and shall not be construed to create an entitlement on behalf of any individual.

(e) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall prescribe by regulation the procedures, terms, and conditions for the determination of eligible individuals and the verification of the awarding of the reward described in subsection (a)(2)(A).

APN 06/08 0134 JAPAN-VIETNAM

TOKYO.—Five or six American POWs were sighted in Vietnam by a Japanese Buddhist monk who spent 14 years in Vietnamese re-education camps before being freed in January, a Japanese news report said today.

Ganshin Yoshida, 65, now in a Sapporo hospital being treated for ailments resulting from his detention, told Kyodo News Service on Wednesday that "five or six" American prisoners of war were at the camp where he was last held.

The location of the camp was not disclosed.

Kyodo quoted Yoshida as saying he did not know what the living conditions of the POWs were like because they lived in a separate building from him.

An official of the Vietnamese Embassy in Tokyo called Yoshida's remarks "groundless."

"Our government has repeatedly discussed that issue in the past. There are no more American POWs" in Vietnam, the official told The Associated Press.

Yoshida, formerly a city councilman on Japan's northernmost main island of Hokkaido, became a monk in 1966 and emigrated to Vietnam, where he set up a temple in Saigon, now called Ho Chi Minh City.

Yoshida was granted citizenship in 1973 by the former South Vietnamese government but arrested in 1975 following the takeover of Vietnam by communist forces and detained without trial in re-education camps and jails.

On Jan. 20, Vietnam released Yoshida for humanitarian reasons after appeals filed by himself and international human rights groups such as Amnesty International.

Kyodo said U.S. government officials received the information about the POWs through Yoshida's daughter in Tokyo on Wednesday.

An official of the U.S. Embassy in Tokyo would not confirm that the information had been conveyed. "All reports and information concerning MIAs (missing in action) in Vietnam will be sent to the home government for analysis by experts," he said.

A total of 1,730 Americans are still listed as missing in action in Vietnam, while 634 others are missing in action in Vietnam, while 634 others are missing in Cambodia, Loas and China, according to U.S. figures. The Indochina War ended in 1975 with communist victories over U.S.-supported governments in Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos.

VIETNAM HINTS MIA'S MAY BE IN BUSH AREAS

(By Jeremiah O'Leary)

Vietnam insists it has no live American prisoners of war under its control but indicates there are wild areas of the country where missing Americans could be living, presidential envoy Gen. John Vessey said yesterday at the White House.

He reported to President Reagan yesterday after returning from three days of talks in Hanoi with Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach and other officials.

Gen. Vessey, who served in Vietnam and was chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff before his retirement, said the Vietnamese insisted "there are no live American prisoners under the control of the Vietnamese government.

"The Vietnamese have acknowledged that there are some wild parts of their country. . . .

"The suggestion is that it is possible for there to be live Americans in Southeast Asia, not under the control of the Vietnamese government," he said. "That is the inference that I draw. They did not say that."

Gen. Vessey said the Vietnamese agreed to pursue 200 "discrepancy" cases, of which 70 are considered urgent because of compelling evidence the individuals were alive within enemy territory.

In return, he said, the United States will send experts on what he termed "humanitarian considerations" such as problems of rehabilitating severely wounded Vietnamese.

The U.S. delegation agreed that America will accept Amerasian children of American GIs and Vietnamese women when a system is established.

"We agreed that we would address these as humanitarian concerns and not link them to broader political issues, such as normalization of diplomatic relations, resumption of trade or economic aid," he said.

There are 2,413 Americans unaccounted for in Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia, of whom 1,776 were in Vietnam, Gen. Vessey said. "I don't know if there are any there, but there is evidence some might be there. But it's a long time since the end of the war.

"We made it very clear there are a number of questions to be answered before the American people, and particularly the families, will be satisfied that there are no live POWs or that they're not holding out on the issue of remains," he said.

Gen. Vessey said he told the Vietnamese, "We have people who were seen parachuting near Vietnamese forces during the war, who were probably confined and who did not return to the U.S."

In another case, a Vietnamese newspaper published a photo of a wounded American during the war, but that person did not return nor were his remains recovered.

"Those sorts of questions have to be answered. The Vietnamese have acknowledged the importance of answering those questions," Gen. Vessey said.

There will be meetings of two groups of experts from each side this month in Hanoi to go further into the MIA-POW situation and the humanitarian concerns of Vietnam.

The Defense Department has said, "There is much evidence to indicate that the Vietnamese have knowledge concerning the fate of many U.S. personnel lost over North Vietnam. In the south, representatives of the former Provisional Revolutionary Government should have information on many unaccounted for U.S. personnel."

He was accompanied on the trip by Anne Mills Griffiths of the National League of Families, who remained in Southeast Asia, as did Richard Childress, the specialist on MIA-POW affairs on the staff of the National Security Council.

Mr. Childress was in Bangkok yesterday, completing the first round of talks with Laotian officials about the fate of 549 Americans missing there since the Indochina war ended. Laos has provided little information on unaccounted-for Americans.

The communist government in Cambodia recently claimed it has some knowledge of U.S. personnel missing in that country.

POW'S ALIVE IN VIETNAM, REPORT CONCLUDES

(By Richard L. Benke)

WASHINGTON, September 29.—A Pentagon panel, after a five-month review of intelligence files, has concluded that American prisoners of war are still alive in Southeast Asia.

The head of the group, Lieut. Gen. Eugene F. Tighe, Jr., a former director of the Defense Intelligence Agency, said in an interview today that "a large volume of evidence points" to the likelihood that Americans are being held by the Vietnamese Government.

He said he doubted that the evidence was strong enough to give the United States added leverage to win the release of any prisoners. He suggested Vietnam might accept war reparations in return for the Americans.

The group's report, to be released at a briefing Tuesday at the Pentagon, found that there was no cover-up of evidence that there are still prisoners, according to General Tighe.

Last March, the current director of the Defense Intelligence Agency, Lieut. Gen. Leonard H. Perroots, told a House subcommittee on Asian and Pacific affairs that he had appointed General Tighe, at the request of Congress, "to come in for as long as necessary to get updated on follow-up actions" by the Government on missing servicemen.

General Tighe said his task force could not say how many missing. Americans were alive. Government officials have estimated that the number could be at least 100.

General Tighe said the best evidence came from many reports by refugees who said they had seen Americans.

"There were as many differences as you could imagine," he said of the refugee reports. "They ran the gamut from first-hand sightings to hearsay. But when you have that large volume of evidence that points in those directions, why that's what you conclude."

The review panel included Lyman Kirkpatrick, former inspector general of the Central Intelligence Agency; Gen. Russell Dougherty of the Air Force, who is a former head of the Strategic Air Command; Gen. Bob Kingston of the Army, who is a former commander of the United States Central Command; Brig. Gen. Robbie Risner of the Air Force, who was a prisoner of war in Vietnam, and Lieut. Gen. John Peter Flynn of the Air Force, who was a leader of prisoners of war.

The actual search of intelligence files was conducted by Maj. Gen. John S. Murray of the Army, former chief of United States military interests in Vietnam; Col. Lester E. McGee Jr. of the Army, former intelligence specialist; John Francis McCreary of the national strategic warning staff, and Roberta Carper Maynard, a management specialist of the Defense Intelligence Agency.

MCFARLANE TELLS GROUP HE BELIEVES SOME U.S. POW'S REMAIN IN INDOCHINA

(By Bill Paul)

President Reagan's national security adviser has told a private business group that he believes U.S. prisoners of war are still being held in Indochina and that the U.S. should step up efforts to gather conclusive information about any POWs there.

The comments, by Robert C. McFarlane, leave a different impression from previous White House statements that the U.S. was using all applicable intelligence capabilities to determine what happened to the missing Americans, whose fate has been debated ever since the nation ended its combat involvement in the Vietnam War in 1973.

The national security adviser's remarks came in response to questions last Wednesday at a semiannual forum for business executives and political consultants The sessions, sponsored by syndicated columnists Rowland Evans and Robert Novak, are held under ground rules that require that all remarks made at them by public officials are off the record, according to Mr. Evans. But former Congressman John LeBoutillier, a conservative Republican from New York, recorded the talk and made the tape available to this newspaper.

Mr. LeBoutillier and another symposium participant, John L. Thornton, a vice president of a Wall Street investment banking firm, said they weren't told the session was off the record.

Karna Small, spokeswoman for the national security adviser, said, "This account is a gross misrepresentation of Mr. McFarlane's views." She declined to elaborate in any way on the ground the session was off the record.

On the tape recording, Mr. McFarlane emphasized that he was expressing his personal feeling. "How I really feel about it," Mr. McFarlane said to the group. "I think there have to be live Americans there." He acknowledged that there wasn't any conclusive proof that U.S. military or civilian personnel are being held by communist-governments in the region but said, "There is quite a lot of evidence given by people who have no ulterior motives and no reason to lie, and they're telling things that they have seen."

Mr. McFarlane was critical of U.S. efforts to find out what happened to nearly 2,500 Americans still unaccounted for. "What we need to do is to have better human intelligence in Vietnam," Mr. McFarlane said. "Now we don't. It takes time to get it. But I wouldn't pretend to you that we have done enough to even start. And that's bad. And that's a failure."

In the past, the administration has maintained that resolving the issue of Americans missing in action was a high priority, with President Reagan telling a gathering of MIA relatives in January 1983 that "the intelligence assets of the U.S. are fully focused on this issue."

Mr. McFarlane did say that he believed the Reagan administration has made progress by continuing to press the Vietnamese government for an accounting of the missing Americans. He also indicated that U.S. efforts to collect better intelligence on the subject would be stepped up. "We are doing more, (but) there is more that we ought to be doing than we are. And I think we shall very soon."

[From USA Today, Oct. 16, 1985]

MCFARLANE SAYS POW'S "HAVE TO BE" IN INDOCHINA

The question arose again Tuesday whether U.S. servicemen remain prisoners in Indochina. National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane has told a private business group that U.S. efforts to find the prisoners have been inadequate, The Wall Street Journal reported. "I think there have to be live Americans there," McFarlane was quoted as saying last week in remarks he intended to be off the record. "There is quite a lot of evidence given by people who have no ulterior motives and no reason to lie, and they're telling things that they have seen," he added. The Pentagon said it continues to keep an open mind on the issue and checks out each reported sighting. A McFarlane spokesman declined to elaborate Tuesday.

By Mr. D'AMATO:

S.J. Res. 195. Joint resolution proclaiming Christopher Columbus to be an honorary citizen of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PROCLAIMING CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS TO BE AN HONORARY CITIZEN OF THE UNITED STATES

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise to introduce a joint resolution proclaiming Christopher Columbus to be an honorary citizen of the United States. This resolution was introduced in the other body by the Honorable THOMAS FOGLIETTA.

Christopher Columbus was a man of great vision, talent, and persistence who overcame insurmountable odds to embark on a journey that would lead him to a new world. Since the year 1992 will mark the quincentennial of this historical voyage to the Americas, I can think of no better time to honor and pay tribute to the founder of our home by giving him honorary citizenship.

During this quincentennial of this historical voyage, a reenactment of his trip will take place in that year. Spain has invested $4 million to construct models of the Nina, Pinta, and Santa Maria; which are scheduled to land in America on Columbus Day, 1992. The passage of this resolution will amplify interest in this simulation, and pay a deserved tribute to the man who linked Europe with the Americas.

Mr. President, Christopher Columbus' determination to overcome the many obstacles facing him makes him a model for us all. He was not deterred by France's, England's, and Portugal's rejection of his plan, nor by Spain's 6-year delay in its funding of his journey. The four expeditions he led eventually spurred the immigration that made our country what it is today. His persistence and talent made him an indelible part of our heritage, and we should pay tribute to this great explorer by giving him honorary citizenship status.●

SENATE RESOLUTION 172—ACKNOWLEDGING THE ACHIEVEMENT, COMMITMENT, AND VISION OF MICKEY LELAND

Mr. GRAMM (for himself and Mr. BENTSEN) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. RES. 172

Whereas Mickey Leland gave unstintingly to the people of Houston, Texas, and to all America as a legislator and Member of Congress, as a humanitarian, and as an activist;

Whereas Mickey Leland provided the poor of America and Africa, especially the children, with special compassion, inspiration, and leadership;

Whereas Mickey Leland served as the progenitor and chairman of the Select Committee on Hunger of the House of Representatives and as two-term chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus;

Whereas Mickey Leland was effective in winning the hearts of his colleagues for the famine relief efforts of the 1980's in Ethiopia and other nations of Africa;

Whereas Mickey Leland secured the freedom of Americans being subjected to harsh imprisonment in Cuba and the freedom from Vietnam for children of Americans;

Whereas Mickey Leland worked tirelessly to assure freedom for the people of Israel, especially for Ethiopian Jews, and to improve relations between the United States and Israel; and

Whereas throughout his career Mickey Leland exemplified the ideal of public service in terms of the highest qualities of dedication, integrity, and rectitude: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate acknowledges the high achievement, commitment, and vision that characterized Mickey Leland's career of service on behalf of the people of the United States and expresses profound sorrow at the loss of Mickey Leland to his family, to the House of Representatives of the United States, and to the people of America and the world.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, today I am submitting a resolution, cosponsored by the distinguished senior Senator from Texas, Senator BENTSEN, which expresses the appreciation of the Senate for the work that was done by our colleague from Texas, Congressman MICKEY LELAND, and which expresses our sorrow at his loss.

MICKEY was a man of special dignity and compassion. Our hearts go out to his family. I urge all of my colleagues to add their names to the resolution and I look forward to working with the Senate leadership in an effort to obtain swift approval of the resolution.

SENATE RESOLUTION 173—EXPRESSING GRATITUDE TO DAVID A. BRODY

Mr. DOLE (for himself and Mr. MITCHELL) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 173

Whereas David A. Brody is an American of uncommon wisdom and vision;

Whereas David A. Brody has served this country faithfully, as an officer in the United States Navy during World War II, as an attorney in the Department of Agriculture, and as a distinguished lawyer and lobbyist in Washington, D.C.;

Whereas David A. Brody has devoted more than 40 years of his life to the promotion of issues that concern not only the Jewish-American community, but also Americans;

Whereas such issues include the security and prosperity of Israel, Soviet Jewry, civil rights, civil liberties, and social welfare;

Whereas David A. Brody has been an exemplary representative of the Anti-Defamation League of the B'Nai B'Rith, particularly as the Director of the Washington Office of such League;

Whereas during the past 40 years, the advice and judgment of David A. Brody has proven to be an invaluable and welcome resource to the Senate;

Whereas many past and present members of the Senate consider David A. Brody to be a dear and trusted friend; and

Whereas David A Brody has often been described as the "101st Senator": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That—

(1) the Senate commends David A. Brody for his years of exemplary and faithful service to the Anti-Defamation League of the B'Nai B'Rith and to the United States, and

(2) the Senate expresses its gratitude to David A. Brody for the wise counsel he has provided to the Senate during the past 40 years.

(A) by striking out "Two" in clause (ii) and inserting in lieu thereof "Four"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(vii) One person, selected by the Secretary at the Secretary's discretion, from among persons in categories described in clauses (i), (ii), (iii), or (vi),"; and

(2) in subsection (c)(2)(B)—

(A) by striking out "Two" in clause (ii) and inserting in lieu thereof "Four"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(vii) One person, selected by the Secretary at the Secretary's discretion, from among persons in categories described in clauses (i), (ii), (iii), or (vi).".

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am today submitting, along with my good friends and colleagues on the Veterans' Affairs Committee, Senators MATSUNAGA, DECONCINI, and GRAHAM, amendment No. 710 to S. 13, a measure which, if enacted, would amend the Department of Veterans Affairs Act, Public Law 100-527, so as to provide that any commissions established pursuant to section 3 of that act for the purpose of recommending individuals for appointment to the position of Chief Medical Director [CMD] or Chief Benefits Director [CBD] of the Department of Veterans Affairs would be comprised of up to 13 members, to include 4 persons representing veterans served by VA. Under current law, as enacted last October, such commissions are comprised of up to 10 members, with only 2 being specified as persons representing veterans served by VA.

Earlier this year, a commission was established to recommend individuals to fill the position of Chief Benefits Director. In setting up that entity, VA Secretary Edward Derwinski appointed four representatives from veterans' service organizations. Despite my concerns that this action did not accord with the law, I did not voice any formal objection then because I was aware of questions which were raised at the time within VA as to whether there was, under the statute, the need for such a search commission for that task since there was no vacancy in the CBD position; rather, the current CBD, John Vogel, had not resigned or announced his intention to resign—indeed, he is a leading candidate for appointment as the first CBD under the new Department.

More recently, Secretary Derwinski appointed a commission to seek recommendations for the position of Chief Medical Director following the announcement by Dr. John Gronvall, VA's current CMD, of his intention to step down as soon as a replacement has been selected. In accordance with section 3(b)(2)(B) of Public Law 100-527, which clearly applies in the situation of an "anticipated" vacancy, Secretary Derwinski appointed only two representatives of veterans' service organizations—one from the American Legion and one from the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Mr. President, many members of the Disabled American Veterans have contacted me to express their very strong disappointment about their organization not being represented on the CMD search commission, noting the fact that all of their members have service-connected disabilities and, as such, as primary consumers of VA's health-care system. I have also been made aware of substantial unhappiness among other organizations, including the Paralyzed Veterans of America which has a very active and effective medical program.

I am generally sympathetic to the concerns expressed, but, at the same time, I recognize that Secretary Derwinski was able to appoint only two veterans' service organization representatives, thus ensuring that he would have to exclude some important organizations. The measure we are introducing today is designed to avoid a recurrence of this unfortunate situation.

Mr. President, our amendment would also provide for the addition of a 13th commission member in order to achieve three purposes: First, to make the commission membership an odd number; second, to help keep the role of representatives of service organizations in appropriate balance; and third, to give the Secretary a little more discretion in comprising the commissions. Under our amendment, the Secretary would appoint a 13th member from among four statutory categories—persons representing program activities affected by the VA entity concerned, either the Veterans' Benefits Administration or the Veterans Health Service and Research Administration; persons representing veterans served by VA; persons who have experience in the management of VA programs or of programs of similar content and scope; or an individual who is a former CMD or CBD.

Mr. President, I note that the provisions in Public Law 100-527 relating to the establishment of these CMD/CBD search commissions and the composition thereof originated in S. 533 as reported by the Committee on Governmental Affairs and passed by the Senate, in H.R. 3471, on July 12, 1988, and arose out of recommendations made by the Veterans' Affairs Committee to that committee. The provisions originally reported in and passed by the Senate would have required the appointment of commissions of up-to-14 members, including 4 representatives of veterans served by VA. The provisions finally enacted relating to the size and composition of these commissions represent the end point of extensive negotiations on this issue, among others, between House and Senate conferees, one of whom I was privileged to be. Thus, our amendment now represents a further effort to put forward, and secure House reconsideration of, the original Senate position as to the makeup of these search commissions.

Mr. President, I intend to offer this measure as an amendment to S. 13 when that measure, soon to be reported by the Veterans' Affairs Committee, comes before the Senate later this month. I urge all of our colleagues to support this measure and solicit their cosponsorship.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the public that an oversight hearing has been scheduled before the Subcommittee on Mineral Resources Development and Production of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

The hearing will take place on September 14, 1989, at 10:15 a.m. in room 366 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building in Washington, DC.

The purpose of the hearing is to receive testimony from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission concerning the potential producing sector impacts of the Commission's proposed policy statement on gas inventory charges [GIC's].

Those wishing to submit written statements for the hearing record should address it to the U.S. Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, Dirksen Senate Office Building, room 364, Washington, DC 20510. For further information, please contact Donald Santa of the subcommittee staff at (202) 224-4820.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON OVERSIGHT OF GOVERNMENT MANAGEMENT

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I wish to announce that the Subcommittee on Oversight of Government Management, Committee on Governmental Affairs, will hold a hearing on oversight of oilspill protections for the Great Lakes on Wednesday, September 6, 1989, at 9 a.m., in room 342 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building.

COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I would like to announce that the Small Business Committee will hold a full committee hearing on Wednesday, September 13, 1989, to examine the impact of certain current tax laws on small business. The hearing will be held in room 428A of the Russell Senate Office Building and will commence at 9:30 a.m. For further information, please call Marja Maddrie at 224-8488.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION AND STABILIZATION OF PRICES

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I wish to announce that the Subcommittee on Agricultural Production and Stabilization of Prices of the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry will hold a hearing on the preparation for 1990 farm bill: Rice. The hearing will be held on September 26, 1989, at 10 a.m. in room 332, Russell Senate Office Building.

Senator DAVID PRYOR will preside. For further information please contact Miles Goggans of the subcommittee staff at 224-2353.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION AND STABILIZATION OF PRICES

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I wish to announce that the Subcommittee on Agricultural Production and Stabilization of Prices of the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry will hold a hearing on the preparation for 1990 farm bill: Cotton. The hearing will be held on October 26, 1989, at 10 a.m. in room 332, Russell Senate Office Building.

Senator DAVID PRYOR will preside. For further information please contact Miles Goggans of the subcommittee staff at 224-2353.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

KENAI PENINSULA CUSTOMS INSPECTORS

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, during the Committee on Appropriations consideration of H.R. 2989, the Treasury, Postal Service, and general government appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990, report language, sponsored by Senator STEVENS concerning Customs inspectors at seaports in

Kenai Peninsula, AK, was approved for inclusion in the committee report accompanying the fiscal year 1990 Treasury bill. However, in the rush to get the committee report together for floor action, the report language which was approved by the committee was inadvertently left out. Therefore, Mr. President, at this time, I would like to identify the language which was approved and state on the record that it is the intent of the committee that this language be treated as any other language included in the Senate report on H.R. 2989 for the purpose of agency compliance with committee directives. The language is as follows:

The committee notes that the Customs Service responded to a request in the conference report on the fiscal year 1989 dire emergency supplemental appropriations bill for a study of the feasibility of providing reimbursable services to ports along the Kenai Peninsula, AK, with specific emphasis on inplace presence. The report advised that the authorizing statute—19 U.S.C. 58b—would have to be changed in order to apply reimbursable customs services to vessel activity.

The committee is aware of efforts being made to amend the authorizing statute to apply reimbursable services to seaports and other facilities. Consequently, the committee recommends that when the Customs Service places additional inspectors on a user fee basis, consideration be given to locating an inspector on Kenai Peninsula, AK, to service the Kenai Municipal Airport, as well as seaports and trucking facilities on the Kenai Peninsula.●

FOUNDATION FOR ETHNIC UNDERSTANDING

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize the efforts of the New York-based Foundation for Ethnic Understanding in the critical struggle against the hostility and discrimination that, sadly, still exists within our society.

The evils of discrimination have existed for generations within our country. In the last several decades, great strides have been made to create a positive society for all. Important legislation enacted by this body over the years has carved into stone the civil rights of all Americans. Still, there remain many obstacles to overcome the animosity that lingers in the pockets of American society. As we enter the 1990's, we cannot be complacent about these issues. We, as Americans, must take action.

The Foundation for Ethnic Understanding is on the front line of this battle. Led by Rabbi Marc Schneier of the Park East Synagogue in New York, and presided over by a group of prominent and distinguished New Yorkers, the foundation's board has joined forces with the New York City Commission on Human Rights in this necessary battle. The commission has been in existence within the structure of New York City government for many years. Through education of the public, support of community efforts and individual case investigations, the commission has fostered more positive interracial relations and taken great strides toward the goal of wiping out discrimination of every kind. Together the two groups launched a major media and advertisting campaign on June 21, 1989, appealing to all New Yorkers for ethnic understanding. The campaign is dedicated to strengthening ties between all people, stimulating interest in issues pertaining to the variety of cultures within the great American melting pot, and reducing the existing tensions among New York's diverse racial and ethnic groups. Most of all, the campaign urges New Yorkers to address head-on, the dangers of prejudice and bigotry.

This campaign will alert New Yorkers and all Americans to the need to deal with the challenges of living in a pluralistic society. It will allow us to recognize the strength that comes from sharing and celebrating our differences and similarities. I am hopeful that the Foundation for Ethnic Understanding will act as a catalyst, propelling others to join in this inspiring effort.

Mr. President, in recognition of their outstanding efforts I would like to honor the Foundation for Ethnic Understanding by having this statement read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. By honoring them we show support for their hard work and dedication in eliminating discrimination. It is important for all Americans to understand the importance of racial and ethnic understanding.●

SMALL BUSINESS EXPORTS

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, with the United States still facing a trade deficit, we often focus upon the difficulties and barriers which American companies face in trying to sell overseas. Entering the export market is certainly challenging, and can be particularly so for small businesses. Nevertheless, many American small and medium-sized companies are getting into exporting and are achieving success in the international marketplace. A recent article in the Wall Street Journal by Barbara Marsh, entitled "Small Businesses Aren't So Little When It Comes to Role in Exports," presents some encouraging information.

In June of this year, the United States reached a record level of $30.91 billion in exports for the month. Small businesses, many new to exporting, appear to be responsible for a large share of the increase in export activity. Mr. Noor Doja, executive director of the Minnesota Export Finance Authority, estimates that of the 1,000 exporters in Minnesota, 200 to 300 of them began exporting just within the last year. Almost all of them were small and medium-sized companies.

One new and successful exporter cited in the article is Jaechul Ahn of Minneapolis. Mr. Ahn exports timber products to the Far East. Even though he started the company only 2 years ago, Mr. Ahn had an international outlook right from the start. Already, he is exporting over $2 million worth of goods a year, with even greater prospects for this year.

As ranking minority member of the Committee on Small Business, I am pleased to see American small businesses looking beyond our national borders to the vast potential markets overseas. The success so far should lead us to redouble the efforts of the Congress and the administration to encourage American businesses to export and to ensure that they have open markets to enter. There remain many small businesses with the potential to export which do not yet do so. These small businesses should be encouraged by the achievements of Mr. Ahn and others, and I hope to hear of further successes in the future.

Mr. President, I submit for the RECORD the article from the Wall Street Journal.

The article follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, Aug. 18, 1989]

SMALL BUSINESSES AREN'T SO LITTLE WHEN IT COMES TO ROLE IN EXPORTS

(By Barbara Marsh)

Small-business owners are playing a bigger role in U.S. export activity. Just add up the people like Bob Knosp.

When Mr. Knosp started producing computerized sign-making systems in his garage three years ago, he never expected that his products would soon be selling well overseas, even though he advertised in a few international trade journals.

In fact, within the past year, more than half of his $500,000 business has come from abroad. He's been surprised by the number of customers from England, Australia and Switzerland seeking out his Bellevue, Wash., company. In some ways, he even prefers doing business with his new European dealers: Unlike their American counterparts, they promote and advertise his product themselves, rather than relying on him to do so.

Untold numbers of small exporters like Mr. Knosp are now a critical, albeit quiet, component of American exports, foreign trade experts say. Because specific statistics on small exporters aren't kept, it's impossible to know exactly how much they contributed to the unexpected jump in U.S. exports, which hit a record $30.91 billion in June, and in the narrowing of the trade deficit, reported yesterday by the U.S. Commerce Dept. Even so, export specialists say there's both indirect and anecdotal evidence to suggest that small exporters constitute a larger part of the export trade than is often supposed, and their portion is growing.

Indeed, small businesses far outnumber large companies in the export arena. A recent Commerce Department study shows that 80 percent of the 100,000 American exporters in 1987 had shipments totaling less than $25,000 that year. Most of the firms making such limited shipments are probably small companies, surmises Tony Radspieler, an economist with the Commerce Department's foreign-trade division.

What's more, in the manufacturing sector, there's evidence that small companies may account for a larger share of the nation's manufactured exports than once thought. A recent study by the Small Business Administration estimates that manufacturers with fewer than 500 employees accounted for half of the value of U.S.-made goods exported by manufacturers in 1985.

Foreign trade experts say small-business owners are showing increased interest in opportunities overseas. Lawrence Harper, a consultant in Price Waterhouse's international trade group, detects a "heightened awareness" among small-business owners that they should be developing internationally.

He says that much of the small-business interest focuses on the prospects for expanding in Western Europe, anticipating the removal of nearly all trade barriers there in 1992. "That's doing as much for the small exporter as anything else right now," he says.

In addition, he says, small businesses are seeing prospective clients from Japan, Taiwan and China. He says that wood products are particularly in demand in the Pacific Rim.

Korean-born Jaechul Ahn, a Minneapolis-based exporter of timber products, says he's running rings around his larger American competitors in sales to Korea, Taiwan and Japan. Basswood is particularly hot in Korea right now. He says he's been racking up basswood sales while his larger U.S. competitors have been holding on to their stocks, in hopes prices will rise.

Though he started his company only two years ago, he says he expects to have sales of between $2 million and $3.5 million this year.

Small companies, hankering for their first bits of export business, are calling up trade consultants for advice. Noor Doja, executive director of Minnesota's export finance authority, says the increase in such inquiries has been "dramatic" this year. He estimates that over the past 12 months or so, 200 to 300 businesses with sales of less than $10 million have dipped their toe in international waters for the first time. Those small concerns have accounted for "virtually all" of the companies that have joined the ranks of Minnesota's 1,000 exporters since last year, he adds.

What's driving this interest? Two factors, says Mr. Doja. First, there are the export benefits of the dollar's modest value in comparison to the early Reagan years. Secondly, entrepreneurs view exporting as a way to build profits that will carry them through the seasonal swings in their domestic markets.

Most of the Minnesota activity is coming from the state's major food and packaging industries, computer and software businesses, and medical equipment companies. But, Mr. Doja says, there's also growing interest from more off-beat enterprises, such as a fresh crayfish company in Duluth that ships to Sweden.

"A few years ago, we would have laughed" if a crayfish seller had asked the state for advice on marketing overseas, he says.

Still, there's a possibility that first-time exporters are feeling less adventurous now, than, say, a year ago. Hank Selby, who heads the Richmond, VA., branch of Schenkers International Forwarders Inc., says he had a lot more requests last year to put on trade seminars for small businesses. Export fervor ran high last year after the dollar reached its lowest level against the yen since the late 1940s. He says the slacker interest he sees from would-be, first-time exports these days probably reflects the 20 percent gain the dollar has shown against the yen since that low point in January 1988.●

AL BREWSTER—A PATRIOT

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, as we wrapped up our business for the August recess, a dedicated American completed his last day of formal employment in service to our Nation's security. Brig. Gen. A.E. Brewster, USMC (Ret.), known to many of us as Al, retired as the vice president, legislative affairs of the Northrop Corp. after an illustrious 37-year career.

Prior to joining Northrop, Al Brewster served for 28 years with distinction in the Marine Corps, with combat tours in both Korea and Vietnam. Those who have been in the Senate since before 1980 probably first became acquainted with him in his capacity as legislative assistant to the commandant from 1977 to 1980. They will recall the constructive role he played in communications between the Marine Corps and the Congress and in supporting congressional requirements in deliberations on all manner of concerns related to the Corps.

More recently, we have known Al Brewster as a senior representative of one of this country's major defense contractors, the Northrop Corp. In this capacity he has demonstrated expertise and professionalism in informing the Congress about the many important programs Northrop produces or has under development to bolster deterrence and fulfill other national security requirements.

His latest commendable effort was with regard to the B-2/Stealth bomber when we had that proposal on the Senate floor. Those who have had occasion to work with Al Brewster will miss him. He brought integrity, balance, and humor to his dealings, but most fundamentally is a fine American. We wish him and his lovely wife Suzanne much well-deserved pleasure in retirement. I salute this American patriot.

WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE ON SMALL BUSINESS AUTHORIZATION ACT, S. 977

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today as a cosponsor of the White House Conference on Small Business Authorization Act, S. 977.

The White House Conference on Small Business is important in that it acts as a barometer indicating the major issues affecting small businesses and setting the tone of Government small business policy for years to come. In 1980, its delegates produced a list of 60 recommendations, of which some 60 percent were enacted wholly or in part, ranging from action on the Federal budget deficit to providing adequate Government research spending. The most recent conference, in 1986, produced a 60-item priority list including 10 top issues that were presented to the President and Congress.

The frequency of the last two conferences appears to demonstrate an awareness on the part of the small business community of its impact upon Government policy. The 1980 conference was the first to be held since the original meeting called by President Franklin Roosevelt in 1938.

S. 977 authorizes a White House conference on small business in 1991, and additional conferences at least every 6 years thereafter. The impending institutionalization of these conferences would abolish the spontaneity of past conferences and would provide the necessary visibility to the needs and concerns of small businesses in our rapidly changing world economy.

I urge my colleagues to join in cosponsoring this worthy legislation.●

NOTICE OF DETERMINATION BY THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON ETHICS UNDER RULE 35, PARAGRAPH 4, PERMITTING ACCEPTANCE OF A GIFT OF EDUCATIONAL TRAVEL FROM A FOREIGN ORGANIZATION

● Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, it is required by paragraph 4 of rule 35 that I place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD notices of Senate employees who participate in programs, the principal objective of which is educational, sponsored by a foreign government or a foreign educational or charitable organization involving travel to a foreign country paid for by that foreign government or organization.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 for G. Robert Wallace, a member of the staff of Senator WALLOP, to participate in a program in the People's Republic of China, sponsored by the Chinese People's Institute of Foreign Affairs, from August 26–September 8, 1989.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Wallace in the program in the People's Republic of China, at the expense of the Chinese People's Institute of Foreign Affairs, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Mr. Cesar Conda, a member of the staff of Senator KASTEN, to participate in a program in Taiwan, sponsored by the Soochow University, from August 21-29, 1989.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Conda in the program in Taiwan, at the expense of the Soochow University, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Mr. Michael C. Mitchell, a member of the staff of Senator ROTH, to participate in a program in Korea, sponsored by the A-san Foundation, from August 6-13, 1989.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Mitchell in the program in Korea, at the expense of the A-san Foundation, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Mr. James O. Ratliff, a member of the staff of Senator SIMPSON, to participate in a program in the People's Republic of China, sponsored by the Chinese People's Institute of Foreign Affairs in conjunction with the Far East Studies Institute, from August 26-September 8, 1989.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Ratliff in the program in the People's Republic of China, at the expense of the Chinese People's Institute of Foreign Affairs in conjunction with the Far East Studies Institute, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Mr. Martin J. Gruenberg, a member of the staff of the Subcommittee on International Finance and Monetary Policy, to participate in a program in Taiwan, sponsored by the Soochow University, from August 21-29, 1989.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Gruenberg in the program in Taiwan, at the expense of the Soochow University, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Ms. Kathleen Harrington, a member of the staff of Senator DODD, to participate in a program in Taiwan, sponsored by the Soochow University, from August 21-30, 1989.

The committee has determined that participation by Ms. Harrington in the program in Taiwan, at the expense of the Soochow University, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Dr. Robert McArthur, a member of the staff of Senator COCHRAN, to participate in a program in the People's Republic of China, sponsored by the Chinese People's Institute of Foreign Affairs, from August 25-September 8, 1989.

The committee has determined that participation by Dr. McArthur in the program in the People's Republic of China, at the expense of the Chinese People's Institute of Foreign Affairs, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Mr. Bruce Marks, a member of the staff of Senator SPECTER, to participate in a program in Taiwan, sponsored by the Tunghai University, from August 7-13, 1989.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Marks in the program in Taiwan, at the expense of the Tunghai University, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Mr. Timothy Bergreen, a member of the staff of Senator BREAUX, to participate in a program in Taiwan, sponsored by the Chinese Culture University, from August 19-27, 1989.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Bergreen in the program in Taiwan, at the expense of the Chinese Culture University, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Mr. Thomas Hill Moore, a member of the staff of Senator BREAUX, to participate in a program in the People's Republic of China, sponsored by the Soochow University, from August 22-29, 1989.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Moore in the program in the People's Republic of China, at the expense of the Soochow University, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.●

RURAL HOUSING REVITALIZATION ACT

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I am pleased to support legislation introduced by Senator SANFORD, S. 1371, the Rural Housing Revitalization Act of 1989. This bill builds upon the rural housing provisions contained in the National Affordable Housing Act which Senator CRANSTON and I introduced in March of this year. S. 1371 focuses additional attention and resources on the housing programs of low- and moderate-income families of rural America.

Contrary to popular opinion, housing problems are not focused solely in our large urban centers. The rate of poverty and unemployment is now higher in rural areas than in the big cities, and the depression of the rural economy has had a devastating effect upon housing in these areas. In an 8-year period from the mid-1970's to the mid-1980's, housing costs of low-income rural households increased 64 percent. More than 7 million rural households across the country are struggling with serious housing problems. They are faced with inadequate living conditions, overcrowding, and the inability to manage their financial burdens.

Because the rural poor live in areas where there is a vast shortage of decent housing, urban solutions are inapplicable. Where rent and mortgage supplements are a necessity for low-income urban dwellers, low-income families in rural areas may need much more. Rural housing can be so inadequate that assistance for housing rehabilitation and development is needed in addition to rent and mortgage supplements.

An estimated 44 percent of the Nation's occupied substandard housing units are located in rural areas. It is a struggle for low- and moderate-income families in rural areas to afford safe, decent, and sanitary shelter. These families often live without plumbing, running water, weatherproofing, or electricity. It is not unheard of for a family with several children to live in a one-room house. The children may not have a safe place to play. Appalachia, the Deep South, the Ozarks, Indian reservations, and the Hispanic Southwest are the areas where these substandard conditions are the most prevalent, but such conditions are not limited to these regions. These depressed rural areas exist throughout the country.

The situation has been exacerbated by a decline in Federal funds. The U.S. Department of Agriculture's Farmer's Home Administration [FmHA], which provides primary assistance to low- and moderate-income rural families, has had its funds severely cut. Funding for the Section 502 Program, which provides assistance for single families to buy a home, has decreased from $2.9 billion in 1979 to $1.3 billion in 1989. New York State received $38.6 million of these funds in fiscal year 1989. Funding for the Section 515 Program, providing multi-family housing loans, has been reduced from $821 million in 1979 to $555 million in 1989. New York received $18.5 million of these funds in fiscal year 1989. The number of new loans made during this period has dropped substantially.

The Rural Housing Revitalization Act aims to turn these trends around by providing expanded funding levels and services to the rural communities. The bill reauthorizes FmHA at increased levels (an increase of $100 million for fiscal year 1990 to an estimated total of $2.4 billion, and an increase of $300 million for fiscal year 1991 to an estimated total of $2.7 billion), sets aside FmHA loans for specifically underserved areas, authorizes a grant program to develop housing assistance capacity and authorizes a guaranteed loan program to families who have demonstrated a severe lack of mortgage credit. In addition, the legislation will create a demonstration program providing grants to nonprofit public and private organizations to develop partnerships to create low-income rental housing.

As the demand for decent, affordable housing in rural areas exceeds the supply, we must continue to support those programs which have a proven track record of providing safe and decent housing in our rural areas. The Rural Housing Revitalization Act establishes realistic goals to build upon our experience of the past. By making resources available to provide homeownership affordability to rural residents and improve substandard living conditions, we are able to improve the overall quality of life in rural America. A revitalization of rural housing is directly linked to a greatly needed increase in rural prosperity.●

CHILDREN HELD HOSTAGE BY TERRORISTS ON PLAYGROUNDS

● Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, a cartoon recently appeared in the Oregonian which expressed a sad, but realistic portrayal of life for America's children. The cartoon pictured two young friends headed to the neighborhood park to play. One says "Mom! Can I go to the park with Billy?!" His mother replies, "Alright, but be careful crossing the street * * * and watch out for hypodermic needles, used condoms, junkies, drug dealers, and sex perverts!" The children grimace at each other and Billy says "Let's just watch TV, OK?"

While this message went unnoticed by many in my region, one of my constituents, Mr. Thom Thompson of Beaverton took the liberty of responding with a letter to the editor written in hope for our children. Mr. Thompson is a consultant in playground safety and supervision. He currently serves as a member of the National Task Group on Playground Safety, a committee of the American Society for Testing and Materials. He and I agree that attention to our youngest citizens is not only the mark of a thoughtful society, but crucial to our continual development as caring and compassionate people.

A familiar quotation notes that "A society is not known for what it does for its greatest, but what it does for its least able." Children are dependent upon society and its demands and attitudes toward early intervention and development. As leaders, we must realize this is one of our greatest trusts. Children are not political or partisan. As Mr. Thompson notes, they only ask that their friends be "nice."

I am pleased to bring Thom Thompson's letter, entitled "Children Held Hostage by Terrorists on Playgrounds" to the attention of my colleagues. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

CHILDREN HELD HOSTAGE BY TERRORISTS ON PLAYGROUNDS

(By Thom Thompson)

Horsey's editorial cartoon, Oregonian, Wednesday, August 23rd, would be humorous if it wasn't so tragically true. It was the good old days when all children had to do to be safe was look both ways when they crossed the street. Now they are in peril when they play in a place we designated for them. This sad commentary is not unique to urban parks or school yards on the East Coast. It is the condition of well-heeled suburban playgrounds as well.

Now a major factor in the current design or renovation of any play site is safety and security. You cannot meet the serious liability issues without a strict adherence to make sure children are not injured needlessly. Loose material for a safety surface under equipment used to be common. However, the first comment now is, ". . and we have a problem with hypodermic needles or crack vials, so we can't have sand under equipment," and "drug dealers hang out on the playground so what we need to talk about is lighting or fences or no closed areas." Children have been injured by knives deliberately stuck in the ground or at the end of slides.

Then, as the cartoon mentions, there is the problem of "sex perverts." It is standard curriculum in safety programs to warn children to watch out for strangers, especially around playgrounds. Sex offenders state that a common area they watch is a playground and look for the uninvolved child.

If executives had to wander past drug dealers in the corridors of their office buildings or remove needles, condoms and crack vials from the reception area, you can bet that building would be staffed with armed security 24 hours a day. If receptionists had to run to their cars past strangers lurking in shadows, there would be thousands of dollars in lighting outside that building.

Playgrounds are so unsafe in some areas that children are better off to stay at home. The very territory we have designated for their fun is being held by captives. Play is essential to the wholesome, total development of children. It is, in fact, their work place. It is where they test their skill, build their muscles, learn social skills, practice getting along with others and play magic games. We would never surrender our work place to the terrors or terrorists that freely hold the children's.

We make grand speeches about how we will never give in to terrorists in the Middle East. We increase security to nearly the point of inconvenience at airports to make certain no dangerous objects get on our planes. Yet with a wink, we surrender our most valuable territory to terror at home. This holds the children hostage in their own homes, for safety's sake, as surely as if we guarded the door.

Their blindfolds and ropes are all those lost opportunities to learn a new skill, to test their strength against another, to run and jump and climb, to play in a magic place with a friend, to marvel at a park filled with leaves. Without a speech, we have surrendered a children's place to terrorists. Those opportunities, once missed, are gone forever. Gone as surely as the missed years of growing up a prisoner in the Middle East doesn't see in his own children. Children can never recapture those lost developmental years.

This missed development is paid for in every classroom. Play is critical to inner-ear development; this affects reading. Play with others is an essential social skill; this affects group behavior. Taking turns on equipment and playing fair teaches patience and values. Instead of these positive learning environments, the children are held captive in front of televisions and repeating video games. Ask an educator if we don't pay for that in the classroom. This is not the only price we pay. We pay when school and park budgets increase to meet the rising cost of insurance, or when they pay triple for a manufactured safety surface. We pay when health costs rise to meet the influx of injuries. 185,000 children a year are sent to emergency rooms due to playground injuries. That is one child every two minutes. That would constitute an epidemic in nearly any disease.

Are there solutions? The first solution is a commitment from neighborhoods to take back the valuable land they have lost, to take back the rights to their children's informal education, to commit to watching playgrounds when their child is there, to report people hanging out around playgrounds. If we need a reason to address solutions, other than the sheer joy of a neighborhood's reclaiming its rightful territory, then we can look to our legal responsibilities. Children are recognized under the Constitution as "persons." Therefore, the compelling state interest to provide for the health and safety of citizens applies to children. A right to an equal education is a battle currently being fought in this state in relation to schools. Play spaces are no less learning environments then classrooms. This is a responsibility we carry legally and morally.

What are the costs in dollars? The answer to a good start is almost ironic. With a $10,000 investment for each of the nearly 50,000 public school playgrounds, you come up with the total for one B-2. The question then becomes, does part of our commitment to national defense start at home? This $500 million would put some pretty good safety surface on almost all of these playgrounds, or this money would put some good developmentally appropriate equipment on a lot of these playgrounds. This money would get rid of a lot of sterile concrete playgrounds; sterile for safety's sake, and show more than a lip service attitude toward our greatest resource—children. If children are our future, the question is where and when do we protect them from terrorists?●

INTERPRETING AVAILABLE FOR HEARING-IMPAIRED STAFF

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I want to thank the Committee on Appropriations for approving the funding necessary to have interpreting services available on a permanent basis for our deaf and hearing-impaired Senate staff.

As a Senator who has experienced hearing loss, I have my own personal understanding of what it means to be hearing impaired. I also have a deaf person on my Senate staff, Marci Wolfangle, and because there has not been an official policy in the Senate to provide interpreting services, I was forced to make arrangements for an outside interpreter to be available to my staff on an as-needed basis. Marci has told me that interpreting is essential for deaf staff to be able to actively participate in the functioning of a Senate office. I am proud to have her on my staff.

The committee approved $30,000 for one certified full-time interpreter and $12,500 to be placed in a fund to be available to hire outside interpreting services when needed. Mr. President, this is a very small amount when we consider the benefits this money will provide. Without interpreting available, deaf people have little, if any, access to Senate services, such as computer training classes, seminars, demonstrations, et cetera. Deaf persons have had little or no opportunity to participate in staff meetings or to even apply for a job in the Senate. The denial of this access for the deaf has been unfair. As we are now considering action on the Americans with Disabilities Act [ADA], I cannot think of a more appropriate time to approve this funding.

We will be doing a great service for our deaf constituents and the deaf community at large by approving this funding. But we will be doing a great service for the Nation as this will result in more people understanding and communicating with the deaf. And we will be doing a great service to the institution of the Senate by now having deaf persons and their contributions to our staffs.

Mr. President, I strongly urge my colleagues to approve this level of funding in the legislative appropriations bill.●

THE BUSINESS-EDUCATION COMPACT OF WASHINGTON COUNTY, OR

● Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize an excellent example of private sector involvement in education: The Business-Education Compact of Washington County, OR.

Washington County has a population of 287,000, and is home to rural and farming communities, as well as some of the finest wineries in the State. Companies such as Nike, Tektronix, Intel, Sequent, Mentor Graphics, and NEC America also call Washington County home.

There are 13 school districts, with 100 public schools, 17 private schools and approximately 4,000 educators.

The Business-Education Compact is a nonprofit organization designed to assist educators and business people within Washington County to exchange information regarding current developments in business and technology. The goal of the compact is to help teachers apply practical knowledge acquired from the information exchange to the classroom setting. The businesses also benefit from the added skills the students receive by having a better educated work force.

As many of my colleagues are aware, I am very concerned about the emerging crisis in math-science education in our country. The United States is falling behind other nations in technological literacy. A recent study entitled "The National Assessment of Education Progress" disclosed some alarming statistics regarding the relative competitiveness of the United States in math-science education. Among college-bound high school seniors, the United States ranked 9th out of 13 countries in physics proficiency, 11th in chemistry, and 13th in biology. The study also reported that only 7 percent of our Nation's 17-year-olds have the basic scientific knowledge required fo them for a college education, and that the average proficiency of our black and Hispanic students is 4 years behind that of other students. These bleak figures are a call to action for both the traditional education community and the private sector. The Business-Education Compact of Washington County is a positive example of a public-private partnership, which work together to provide hope for our seemingly technologically illiterate society.

A report entitled "Nation at Risk" raised some concern amongst the leaders of Washington County. After much effort and research, and examining similar programs around the county, the collective chambers of commerce in Washington County came up with what is now the Business-Education Compact. The compact is especially impressive in that it has enhanced both businesses and schools without spending additional tax dollars. It is staffed mainly by volunteers, and is funded through business contributions and membership fees, with over 60 percent of the budget funded by donations.

The Business-Education Compact is divided into seven working groups: Educator assistantships, business-school partnerships, math-science curriculum, East Asian studies, higher education working group, work force preparation—also referred to as Workforce 2000—and funding. These working groups are designed to focus on specific areas in which the compact can be of most use. The educator assistantship places educators in businesses for 3 to 9 weeks during the summer to learn practical applications of subjects and skills they are teaching, and to introduce the educators to new resources for their classrooms. The assistantship is simply a hands-on approach to education, a means of nontraditional professional growth. Educators are required in some way to use their assistantship experience in the classroom.

The remaining programs are making great strides toward increasing the level of awareness in the schools. The business-school partnership links schools and businesses for special projects, and the East Asian studies program promotes better student awareness of the Pacific Rim countries. The higher education working group is a watchdog group that identifies gaps in Washington County's postsecondary education offerings. The higher education group established the Oregon Center for Advanced Technology and the Lintner Center, which serves as an information clearinghouse for high-tech companies in search of additional employee training.

One of the most important programs of the compact is the work force preparation group, or Workforce 2000, which was created to identify future needs of the business community and discover ways to better prepare the future work force for the changing times. The math/science group involves identifying ways to make math and science learning more practical and interesting, to enhance math and science teacher training—with a special interest in applied instructional skills—and recommended ways to expand and improve curiosity-based math and science instruction at the primary level. Finally, the funding working group is responsible for identifying funding for the activities and expenses of the compact.

The Business-Education Compact of Washington County involves students from kindergarten age to those pursuing postgraduate work. In the future, math and science education improvement will be of tremendous importance, and the compact will focus largely on the need for increased math and science education at the elementary level, as well as practical applications at the high school level. Recently, the Washington County Compact received $50,000 from the State of Oregon to design tool kits in order to replicate similar educator assistantship programs, programs which will be tailored to the needs of local school administrations. The compact also benefits from a 3-grant from the National Science Foundation, which amounts to $8,000 annually, and has submitted a twofold grant request to the NSF, which involves receiving funds to borrow an outstanding math/science teacher and create a computer network in which the business community and educators could exchange information.

The Business-Education Compact of Washington County is a highly successful effort to better inform educators of the changing needs in the business future, and thus better prepare tomorrow's work force. I commend this program, which includes over 80 educators this summer alone. I would especially like to commend visionary Gary Conkling, who works on the business end with Tektronix, and executive director Tamra Busch-Johnsen. I share their enthusiasm for this program and encourage further efforts of this kind.●

RECYCLING WASTE

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, while I was back in my State during the recess I had the opportunity to visit two communities that have taken a leading role in recycling garbage. Champaign and Urbana have set an example for a country too comfortable with throwing its garbage in a landfill and at the same time throwing away valuable resources. I have outlined their fine program in a column I write for newspapers in my State. I ask that it be reprinted in the RECORD.

The column follows:

ILLINOIS SOLUTIONS TO FULL LANDFILLS

I have had a chance to look at an important part of our future: what we do with our trash.

In 1970, Illinois had 1,200 landfills. Today, we have 146. Because of the growing national problem, we will soon face tighter and tighter regulations on garbage disposal. And even if that were not coming, just the practical problem of running out of places to put out trash would be forcing change.

I had heard from Mayor Dannel McCollum of Champaign about what his community was doing together with Urbana and Champaign County officials so I went to take a look at their operation.

In the process of disposal, people separate cans, newspapers, plastic bottles, glass bottles and what is called yard waste from the rest of the garbage. And it works!

Evanston and Naperville and other Illinois communities have similar programs.

Newspapers are sold to paper companies for reprocessing, though a stronger market for old newspapers is needed. I'm trying to get the Government Printing Office to use more recycled paper.

The metal cans are magnetically separated and crushed; glass bottles are broken up; plastic bottles are shredded. All of these processed products are then sold to companies to be manufactured into new products.

Twenty percent of what we call garbage is yard waste, much of which is diverted to a special processing facility. In Urbana, leaves and grass clippings are put into special degradable bags made in part from corn starch (which also helps farmers). Unlike the plastic bags with a petroleum base normally used, these disintegrate. The compost from the leaves and grass is sold for $2.50 a yard.

Brush and smaller limbs and Christmas trees are chewed up by a grinder that spits them out as wood chips, which are sold for $3.50 a yard.

Larger limbs and three stumps are also taken to the yard waste site. There they are sawed by students or unemployed people and sold as firewood for $70 a cord. Or you can come and saw your own firewood and get it free.

Individuals or families really struggling to get by can make a few extra dollars by picking up cans and bottles, and then bringing them to the recycling center.

According to an article by Eileen Ogintz in the Chicago Tribune, Evanston had 50 fewer truckloads of waste for its landfill the first 3½ weeks of the Evanston program, saving that city $12,000.

What I saw in Champaign and Urbana is similar to what I remember we did when I was a boy during World War II. We knew it was patriotic not to waste the nation's resources. Once again we must learn that same lesson.

In Woodbury, N.J., you can be fined as much as $500 for not separating your trash. And while there have been few fines there, the message to the citizens is clear.

In the next five years one-third of the remaining landfills in the nation will be filled. We'll have to change some of our literally wasteful habits.

What Champaign and Urbana and other communities have shown is a view of our future. And once we get accustomed to it, it should not be difficult.●

TRUMBULL CAPTURES LITTLE LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIP

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, on August 26, as the summer wound down and the major league pennant races heated up, 15 young men from Trumbull, CT, realized the dreams of millions of 11- and 12-year-olds the world over. By defeating a tough squad from Kaosiung, Taiwan, the youngsters from Trumbull captured the 1989 Little League World Series championship.

Trumbull's success was the result of an all-around team effort. Simply to earn a trip to Williamsport, PA, home of the world series, Trumbull played a total of 13 games in district, State, and regional tournaments. No one player was solely responsible for the fact that Trumbull outscored its opponents 155 to 29 in these games, or that Trumbull slugged nine home runs in the four regional games alone. Trumbull won because all its players contributed when called on to do so.

Likewise, in the championship game, the Trumbull club turned in a fine all-around performance. There was good pitching, as the Kaosiung squad managed only five hits. There was clutch hitting, as a two-out single in the third inning put Trumbull on top to stay. There were also more of the long ball, as a solo shot in the bottom of the fifth sealed the victory for Trumbull. And finally, there was solid fielding—including, in the fifth, a perfect strike from the left fielder that nailed a Kaosiung runner at the plate and dampened a major scoring threat.

Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to salute the 15 young men on the Trumbull team: Matt Basztura, Dan Brown, Paul Coniglio, Chris Drury, Chris Fasano, Dave Galla, Todd Halky, Jason Hairston, Chris Kelly, Cody Lee, Harlan Marks, Ken Martin, Dan McGrath, Andy Paul, and Matt Sewell. I would also like to pay special tribute to manager Tom Galla and to coaches Ed Wheeler and Bob Zullo, whose wise guidance was responsible in no small measure for Trumbull's success in tournament play.

Mr. President, in many ways, Trumbull's success story was an appropriate final chapter for the 1989 Little League season. Just as the Trumbull squad began its campaign for the world championship with the modest goal of winning one game at a time, so Little League began in 1939, with a simple goal—to enable 30 Williamsport youngsters to play organized baseball on a regular basis.

Little League was the brainchild of Mr. Carl Stotz, who still resides in Williamsport. As the Associated Press has reported, Mr. Stotz came up with the idea while playing catch with his nephews in August 1938. He envisioned a league in which his nephews could play organized ball on a good field, in uniforms, with bats designed for young hitters. Through the fall and winter, Mr. Stotz worked hard to transform his dream into reality, overcoming a number of obstacles on the way. He had to call on 57 businesses before he found one that would agree to sponsor a team, and he was forced to make up some of the league's expenses that first year out of his own pocket. Nonetheless, the inaugural season, which began on June 6, 1939, must have convinced Mr. Stotz that his hard work had paid off. The youngsters beamed as uniforms were distributed, and played the games, as little leaguers have ever since, with considerable gusto.

From such modest beginnings, grew an organization that is today active in the United States and 33 other nations. In total, 2.5 million youths play on 140,000 teams in 6,000 leagues. In America of course, Little League serves as an introduction to our national pastime. All over the world, however, Little League baseball teaches young people the value of teamwork, and channels youthful energy into a productive pursuit.

Mr. President, the Trumbull team's victory in the World Series, and Little League's 50th anniversary, are welcome nuggets of good news. Increasingly, as adults, we try to keep our youngsters away from destructive influences by telling them to say no to things—to music with lyrics that endorse violence and destruction, to sex, and of course, to drugs. It is good to remember that there are still some things that American youth can say yes to. Little League baseball is one of them. It encourages kids to dream grand dreams. And as the 15 young men from Trumbull have learned, some of those dreams do come true.●

HIROSHIMA

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I noted the 44th anniversary of the bombing of Hiroshima.

What is a nuclear attack like? Why is it so vital that we make sure it never happens again, particularly in a world where we have many thousands of times more nuclear power than was dropped on Hiroshima?

To get some feel of that you have to look at the lives of people.

The Chicago Tribune recently ran four interviews of women who were at Hiroshima, who managed to survive. The articles were written by Chieko Kuriki of the Chicago Tribune's Tokyo Bureau.

I ask to insert all four in the RECORD at this point, and I urge my colleagues to read these moving stories.

On the same day, the New York Times carried a story by Yasuo Takeyama, the retired chief editorial writer of Nihon Kazai Shimbun, one of Japan's largest newspapers, on his recollections of Hiroshima.

It is also a moving account. I hope my colleagues will read this, as well as the four interviews that appeared in the Chicago Tribune. At this point, I ask that his article be inserted into the RECORD.

The articles follow:

[From the Chicago Tribune, Aug. 6, 1989]

ALTERED LIVES

(They survived the blast of an atomic bomb only to face the scorn of their society.)

Monday, Aug. 6, 1945, dawned hot and clear in Hiroshima. A bomb alert, issued in the early hours, was lifted at 7:31 a.m. Workers headed for their offices, and children gathered in school yards. Citizens and students already were at work removing buildings in the densely populated central area of the city to create a fire belt. Shops were about to open.

At 8:15 a.m. the first atomic bomb was detonated over the city on the Inland Sea.

Fire storms, which lasted several hours, followed the initial explosion and ravaged the city center. Moisture condensed on the rising ash and dust and fell in a deadly radioactive rain that became known as black rain. Thermal radiation—estimated to be 5,400 to 7,200 degrees—burned people as far away as 2.2 miles.

Exact casualty figures are unknown, but the city of Hiroshima estimates that, by Nov. 1, 1945, at least 130,000 had died. Many continued to die from the after-effects decades later.

Most of the victims were women. Many men were away at the front lines. Those women who survived were doubly injured. In a society in which women were treated as second-class citizens, the A-bomb victims were viewed as damaged goods. Families demanded that their sons divorce injured wives.

Many of the survivors—marked by scars, often ill—became social outcasts. Those who bore children lived with fear, of birth defects and life-threatening illnesses, such as leukemia.

Today, an estimated 109,000 A-bomb survivors, known as hibakusha, live in Hiroshima—more than 66,000 of them are women. Chieko Kuriki of the Chicago Tribune's Tokyo Bureau talked with four of those women.

TOYOKO YOSHINO

(Toyoko Yoshino, then 21, and her brother were 1.3 miles from ground zero. Miraculously, both of them suffered only minor injuries. Because she worked in a military office, she was engaged to give first aid to victims right after the bombing. In 1949, she married Takaai Yoshino, who is also an A-bomb survivor. They have one daughter, Ikuko.)

I was on a local train that morning reading a book. As the train was approaching Hiroshima Station, the page turned yellow. At the same time I looked back and a deafening sound came from beneath my feet. The train rolled. The ceilings and baggage racks collapsed.

The next thing I remember was 1st Lt. Kubo, my boss, who happened to be on the same train, dashing water on my face. I was lying between the railroad tracks.

As we stepped out from the station, we found all the buildings had collapsed as far as the eye could see.

Grotesque looking people, all seriously burned and injured were walking south on bare feet. All remained silent and appeared absent-minded. Something dreadful had happened. "Are we going to win the war?" I asked my boss. He said nothing.

I heard a voice calling my name. Someone was waving not far from me. The person, almost naked, was sitting among the wounded. The face looked like one made of clay with one horizontal line about the eyes. Dark red blood oozed out of the peeling skin. When she touched me, black peeled skin adhered there.

"Who are you?" I asked. "It's me. Hisako Yoshida," relied a weak voice. It was a colleague of mine. She had been walking toward home after the night shift. I put my jacket over her shoulder. I promised her that I would send help and we hurried on to the office.

I was assigned to medical care. I reported about Hisako Yoshida and returned to my duties. Two of our buildings were used as an emergency shelter. We put blankets on the concrete floor.

Most of the victims brought there were 12- to 13-year-old-students who had been assigned to help remove buildings to prevent fires in the downtown area. It was hard to judge their features and sex from their appearances. They asked us to give them medicine.

What we had was a bucketful of mercurochrome and cooking oil. The students told me their names and asked me to contact their families. I promised them to do so. But it was impossible.

The dead were cremated.

I resigned from the office at the end of 1945 and stayed at home. I married Takaaki Yoshino in 1949, who used to serve in the army. He was also an A-bomb victim one mile from ground zero. Our daughter was born two years later.

It was a difficult time. Everyone struggled to live. I tried to think I was fortunate, but my white blood cells began increasing when I was 33. I prayed every day to be allowed to live until my daughter became 18. She married 13 years ago and has a son and daughter.

Mr parents received a notice from the village office in 1965 that they had my bones. They discovered later that they were those of my colleague, Hisako, as I had given her my uniform jacket, which had my name on the lining. As no one from her family reported to the office (all of them were supposed dead), the office had kept them until her cousin came to pick them up six years later.

As for myself, I had a cerebral blot clot in 1986. My speech ability is much better after six months training, but a slight paralysis has remained in my right arm and leg.

I think of Hisako especially when I'm not feeling well. I can't forget her voice. "Hurry back. Help me." were her last words. but I couldn't help her.

The desperate eyes of the students looking for their family members is also my lifelong regret. How much they wanted to see their mothers before dying. How much they had sacrificed for the country. Please forgive me. I lied.

ETSUKO KANEMITSU

(Etsuko Kanemitsu, then a 15-year-old student at the all-girls Shintoku Senior High School, one mile from ground zero. Her face, back, arms and legs were seriously burned, but she managed to return home. Only 5 of the 250 girls (including Kanemitsu) survived. A sister died. She married Akiji Kanemitsu in 1959, and they have one child, a daughter, Masae.)

We were assigned to help remove rows of houses that morning. The bell rang around 8 a.m., so I dashed into the school yard with my friends. It was such a beautiful morning. The sky was blue and clear without any clouds. An airplane (a B-29 bomber) was glittering in the sun leaving a vapor trail across the sky.

Then a blinding yellow light pierced my eyes. When I first became conscious, it was completely dark. The second time (I came to), the air was clear again. People were running around. Babies were crying madly. People were bloody, almost naked with dark peeled skins. I had no idea what had happened. Someone shouted to run away. So I stood up. But to run where? All the buildings had collapsed.

My neighborhood, on the other side of the hill, was intact. My sister (then 4) burst into tears when she saw me. Mother rushed from the house. She couldn't recognize me. My face was swollen. My hair was gone. I was naked. The skin peeled from my arms and legs and hung loosely. I don't recall any pain at this time, but I do remember the heat all over me.

Mother took me to an uncle's in Fuchu, a Hiroshima suburb. It had been arranged between us to escape to his place in case of emergency. It was a long journey. We stooped by a relative's on the way. As I was like that, they didn't let me in. I rested at the entrance. The next time when I recovered consciousness, I found myself at the uncle's.

There was no medicine available. People were saying potato was good. So mother grated them and placed them on my exposed, raw flesh. She also used grated cucumbers. Removing dried potatoes was so painful, causing bleeding. The moisture from the cucumbers caused my wounds to fester.

My red arms and legs made me anxious to see my face. Every time I asked mother to bring me a hand mirror, she didn't. I made my way to the washroom when no one was at home. What I found was unbelievable. My black hair—I was proud of it—was all gone. It was like a monk's head. The face was red. I saw a keloid already on my right cheek. How could I live like this? Impossible.

Cooking oil was the best treatment for burns in those days. The problem was how to get it. Mother managed to obtain oil with much effort. My face was cured by my mother only with cooking oil.

We returned to Hiroshima in mid-September. I was miserable. People avoided me at the public bathhouse. When I was in the common bathtub, the other women gathered at the other side, I didn't notice this until the bathhouse owner told me not to come after a couple of visits "You scare others," she said. I returned home crying. Father bought a small wooden tub. So I bathed at home.

About two months after the bombing, bleeding from my gums began. If I used a toothbrush, this made my mouth all red with blood. Then dark purple spots appeared all over. Those who were A-bombed died every day in my neighborhood in those days. The purple spots were considered a sign of death. When I was tired, the spots darkened. That condition lasted for several years.

I had also severe anemia. Cloudy weather gave me a headache. When it was fine, I felt dizzy and couldn't go out, I felt a constant fatigue and used to catch cold easily. It took a decade to improve my overall physical condition. I'm still anemic.

I returned to school in the winter of 1946. Though I loved learning, I was bullied by my classmates calling me akamen (red face) and sarumen (monkey face). As my hair didn't grow for one year, I covered my head with a pink scarf, a memento of my sister who died in Hiroshima on that morning.

As Hiroshima was destroyed, many people from other areas came into the city. They showed no sympathy toward the A-bomb survivors. It was rare to see surivors in five years, as many of them had died by then. But my school principal, who had lost his daughter to the A-bomb, was very supportive. The day of my graduation, he called me to his office and encouraged me, saying, "You are an eyewitness of the A-bomb. So you must live long to tell the others your experience." I didn't understand at the time.

It was impossible for me to find employment. I didn't want to go out either. After graduation, I studied kimono sewing for four years and supported myself. I had three unsuccessful omiai, marriage meetings. Each time I told them that I had been A-bombed, which was usually kept secret. I thought it was unfair not to tell.

Then the fourth offer of omiai came to me. I wanted to decline, but this time the person didn't mind my A-bomb experience. So I met him in December 1958. We married in March, 1959, when I was 27.

My husband worked for a bus company. He is a hard worker and was very supportive. Marriage eased my depression. I had Masse, our only child, two years later. I was so happy to know that she was a normal, healthy baby.

My husband, who was not A-bombed, entered Hiroshima on the same day, as he was assigned to help put the city in order. He stayed there for three days. He is in the hospital now.

As for myself, I had a tumor on my right shoulder last year and received chemotherapy, which damaged my liver and gallbladder.

I now understand the principal's words. Living eyewitness of the A-Bomb. This is probably why I am alive today.

SUZUKO NUMATA

(Suzuko Numata, then 22, worked in an office building 0.6 miles from ground zero. Now 66, she lives with her sister, Fusako, 64, who also suffers from A-bomb after-effects. She has been vice chairman of the Association of the Atomic Bomb Victims in Hiroshima since it was formed in 1984.)

I left home earlier than usual with my father and sister for the Communications Ministry. We all worked there. It was hot and I was tired. I was going to get married within a few days. It was my job to wash the desks at the office before the boss and coworkers came in. I went to the washroom on the fourth floor to wash out the cloths. All of a sudden there was a flash all over the huge glass window [of the washroom]. It was a mixture of yellow, red, orange, green and blue. But orange was the most impressive. It was so beautiful. Then I fainted.

When I became conscious, I found myself under fallen fragments of the building. Two men helped me out and carried me to a nearby playground. My office was burning.

I was lucky. My father found me. He was safe, as he was between bookshelves. My foot was almost severed. The bleeding didn't stop. Father managed to bring a tatami mat in which to carry me to a safer place. I was temporarily deafened.

Then the sky darkened. Huge rain drops, as big as a tip of a little finger, began falling. I felt I was being constantly beaten by soybeans. It was the radioactive "black rain," but we had no idea what it was at that time. Struggling voices asking for help continued around me.

Later that night my left foot was removed by a doctor without anesthesia under candlelight. I don't remember any pain. I guess I couldn't feel anything. The open wound became infected; the doctor cut off my leg four days later, again, without anesthesia. How painful it was this time. I remember I shouted and then I became unconscious.

It was on one of those days that I was informed about my fiance's death. I was in the middle of the struggle with pain; I couldn't think of anything else. It was much later when I grieved.

A United States medical team came to the hospital in March, 1946, to take photos of the A-bomb patients. I was taken to the roof for the photo session and saw the city for the first time since the bombing. Hiroshima was gone. The department stores, schools and office buildings, all familiar to me, had disappeared. Only the remains of the [railroad] station were recognizable to me.

Despite four operations before I left the hospital in March, 1947, my overall physical condition didn't improve for a long time. My period, which restarted a few months after the operations, was terribly painful. I was often hospitalized. I was uneasy even after my period was over worrying about the next month. This limited my daily activities: There was only a week or two of the month I could go out freely. This condition lasted until a tumor was removed when I was 50.

For two months, I practiced walking on an artificial leg, wearing a kimono to hide it. But this leg made a noise when I walked. The noise never disappeared. I also couldn't walk without leaning to the left. Children mimicked my walk. Adults stared at me on the street. Father and my sister used to escort me to the office.

But I soon quit my job. I didn't want to go out anymore. So I stayed at home and thought about killing myself many times.

I kept asking myself what I could do to make a living and decided to become a teacher. I love learning and children. I reentered Hiroshima YDM College [for sewing and dressmaking]. After graduation (in 1949), I became a teacher at Yasuda Women's Senior High School in 1951, teaching sewing and home management.

It was widely believed at that time that the A-bomb survivors could not bear healthy children. In addition to this, I had lost my leg. So I gave up hope to marry. My parents worried about me a lot. But we avoided talking. It was too painful for us.

I never told my experience to anyone, not even my students.

Eight years ago, Hideaki Nagai, then a theoretical physics professor at Hiroshima University, visited me with the photo of my wound. He was making a film of the A-bomb survivors. He asked me to tell my story in the film. I declined his offer and asked him not to use my photo in the film.

Prior to his visit I used to go to the nursing home every day to take care of my mother. I resigned from school in 1979 for this purpose. There were 250 aged A-bomb people at the home. We became friendly and they used to tell me their stories, which made me think I should do something for them. After many days of consideration, I finally accepted the professor's proposal to tell my experience. The film was completed in 1982.

Many of my students who saw the film called or wrote to me. They asked, "Why didn't you tell us? We could have been of help. Please come and talk to us. We want to understand."

They were right. So I told my story in front of 25 students for the first time in 38 years the following year (1983).

People say time heals everything. But while talking, I burst into tears. I was ashamed of myself, so I tried not to cry the next time. But I couldn't. No, time doesn't heal my experience.

I love children and wanted to become a good mother. If I had married, I would have had grandchildren by now. So I speak to the students as if they are my own grandchildren.

SHIZUKO ABE

(Shizuko Abe, then 16, was on a house roof, one mile from ground zero. When her husband, who was in Manchuria during the war, returned, his relatives asked him to divorce her. He declined. They have three children.)

While I was attending sewing school, my aunt arranged an "omiai," a marriage meeting. I met a gallant lieutenant, Saburo Abe, in January, 1944. My father accepted his proposal. We married Jan. 30 in Hiroshima wearing ordinary (everyday) clothing, but we had our picture taken dressed in traditional wedding costumes at a photo studio as proof of our marriage.

It was common in those days to wait for a considerable time [usually until a child was born], before entering the new bride's name in the family register. Women's status was low. We lived together for one week before he returned to Manchuria. He used to write to me every day.

I can never forget that morning. I was on the roof helping to tear down rows of houses [to prevent fires from spreading], when I heard a sound like air escaping from a huge balloon. I don't remember what happened after that. When I woke up, I had been thrown about 30 feet from the roof. It was dark and the smell was horrible.

I must have been badly burned. The skin had peeled from my arms and legs, and hung loosely at my nails. When I put my arms down, this only intensified the stinging burns. So I had to raise my arms in front of me, though it was very exhausting, and walk. We surely looked like ghosts.

I reached a huge factory site. People waited for treatment in a long line. Soldiers applied cooking oil to the wounds from a bucket with a brush. It was so crowded, I couldn't get any treatment. I had no more strength. I laid down and soon after I slept deeply.

People in my neighborhood panicked as their family members, looking like ghosts, returned from Hiroshima around noon. They had seen a huge mushroom cloud over the city, while we (at ground zero) didn't see it. My parents began searching for me, visiting schools and temples that were used as temporary shelters. [Her father found her three days later.]

Our family doctor couldn't help as he had no medicine. My parents applied grated potatoes to my wounds.

I was quite optimistic, believing in my full recovery until I saw my face in the mirror. The skin was so reddened that it made me look like a Japanese monkey. Why couldn't I have died in Hiroshima at that time? A-bomb victims died every day in my neighborhood. I wanted to die, too.

The keloid [an excessive growth of scar tissue] beneath my mouth screwed it up, making it difficult to eat. My right eye wouldn't shut properly due to the keloid around it. The keloids kept appearing for 10 years, one after another even after they were surgically removed.

I usually stayed at home except for going out for treatment, as people used to call me akaoni, or red devil.

My husband came back unexpectedly at the end of 1945, when my skin condition was at its worst.

I wanted to have health children for my husband. I am fortunate to have two boys and one daughter, all grown up and independent, although they were all bullied at school as "the A-bomb children." My daughter, who has been married for 10 years, still has no children.

I decided to have plastic surgery to improve my daily life. A hole in my right ear, which was almost closed, caused a hearing problem. I couldn't use my right hand properly.

Most people I knew who had been exposed by the A-bomb have died. I had no idea that I could live to be 62. I am indebted to my husband for this. So I'm praying every day to let me live longer than him. I want to sustain him when he's dying. That's probably the only thing I can do in return.

I WAS REBORN AT HIROSHIMA

(By Yasuo Takeyama)

TOKYO.—Forty-four long years have passed since that fateful day in Hiroshima.

For three years, I lived in utter debility and lethargy, suffering from all the aftereffects of atomic bomb disease. "Tomorrow and tomorrow and tomorrow" crept at a painful pace, each night prolonging the agony of imminent death.

The sun was a ball of fire in a cloudless sky on that Aug. 6 morning. I was serving as an officer of the Imperial Fleet and Naval Air Force headquarters staffs. Due to report to a 10 A.M. staff meeting at the Kure regional headquarters of the Imperial Navy, I boarded the 8 o'clock train on the Kure line at Hiroshima station, took off my military jacket, threw the window wide open and began reading as I waited for the train to leave.

At 8:15 A.M., out of the corner of my eye I caught sight of an incandescent pillar of magnesium flash about one foot wide and reaching as far up in the sky as I could see. I have no memory of the roar of the explosion.

The next moment, it got pitch dark and I was dashed to the aisle. "Another engine boiler blowing up, for heaven's sake!" I thought, until an officer shouted, "It's an air raid!"

I grabbed my jacket, bayonet and briefcase, crawled to the end of the car and jumped out onto the tracks. Box cars were toppled sideways and the station building was ablaze, the smoke obscuring the bright sun. I glanced back and saw the train catch fire and burn uncontrollably. Had I been knocked senseless by the blast, I would have been incinerated.

I clawed my way out of the station precincts and ran to seek the designated shelter at the Imperial Army's east drill ground, only to step right into an inferno of piles and piles of dead bodies, with their thin summer clothes ripped off and their faces, heads, backs and torsos scorched, some of them half-immersed in muddy pools of water, and faint dying groans of "water, water" rising on all sides.

I was bleeding profusely, all the way down to my belt, and my throat burned. As I tried to plug the hole in my throat with my handkerchief, suddenly large drops of a summer shower began to fall on the scene.

The next thing I knew, I found myself in one of the shelters the Army had managed to set up all across the city, in the company of a young girl cradling herself in tattered shreds of what must have been a white summer blouse, and miserably sobbing at the reflection of her terribly burned face in her hand mirror.

I waited until her tears subsided and asked her to let me use her mirror. I was shocked to find a gaping cut about an inch across my throat, exposing the pinkish vertical line of my trachea and the dark column of the artery throbbing beside it.

I made my way back to the Red Cross sign of a field hospital station that the Kure naval hospital ambulance team had set up in one corner of the drill ground. I identified myself and asked for emergency care. The medic said, "It's going to hurt like hell, sir, but try and hold on!" He yanked off the blood-soaked handkerchief I had stuffed into the hole in my throat and poured in some tincture of iodine.

I almost fainted. My knees gave way and I fell into one of the trenches dug for drills in antitank warfare. They pulled me out, and I looked around, only to find rows and rows of dead bodies under the shelter of a makeshift tin roof.

I looked in the direction of the downtown area and saw the city shrouded by dark clouds and the fumes of death, while roaring flames licked across the apocalyptic landscape.

It was no use trying reaching my office at the center of Hiroshima, and I began to trudge back to my boarding house. I later learned that the blast center was not far from my office.

I carefully picked my way across the Sanyo trunk line, crossed several bridges until I reached Koi station, the second stop from Hiroshima, which had burned down and was still smoldering.

As I went on, singing marching songs to cheer myself up, I was stopped by the sight of a man wrapped in a straw mat laboriously picking himself up from the rice paddy by the tracks, and falling down again as he called my name.

He was first secretary Kuzuhara, who was under my direct control at the office. He was stripped and terribly burned from the waist up. With great difficulty, I held him in my arms and carried him along, until, thank heaven, a small Datsun picked us up not far from the Koi station.

The driver happened to be working at Mitsubishi's Hiroshima shipyard, then under my supervision. We took Kuzahara to my boarding house and for three days and three nights I did all I could to save him. Alas, I lost one of the most personable and dependable, careful and faithful of my men, and returned him to ashes in the confused aftermath of the Pika-Don—the Big Bang.

I commandeered a truck the next day and began to go daily to the burned-down office in the city. I gathered the remains of my colleagues—charred pieces of bone scattered above the ground and several bodies stifled to death in the basement—which soldiers helped me to burn with gasoline on the banks of the Ota River. The ghastliness of reducing the naked bodies to ashes without so much as a makeshift coffin is indelibly imprinted in my mind's eye even today.

Army soldiers used firemen's hooks to pull ashore the naked bodies that floated down the river, piled them up and burned them day and night.

(For about six months after I was discharged from the Navy in October 1945, I used to feel sick at the harmless sight of a broiled fish, and my stomach refused to take it.)

The same grisly rites were repeated on block after block, which all had been reduced to rubble. Day and night, the air was filled with the putrid smell of death, and the eery flickers of cremations created a hell on earth.

Within two weeks of the fateful day, my throat wound began to granulate, and I survived a life-or-death crisis. It must have been the hands of God that had sustained me. I also have to thank the youthful recuperative vigor of my 22-year-old body and, more importantly, the precious supply of badly needed nutritious food provided by the late Taro Kawakami and his wife Shigeko.

Brimming with love for me as if I had been their kid brother, the Kawakamis looked after me with the tenderest care and allowed me to quaff nightly cups of unheated sake, presumably as a final gesture to a young man facing imminent death.

Hiroshima represented my second birth. I was reborn that fateful morning to devote the rest of my life as a journalist, to be a living testament to survival and to fulfill my duty to make this world more peaceful. I keep telling myself, "I died in Hiroshima, and I live by Hiroshima."●

NATIONAL ACADEMIES OF PRACTICE

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to cosponsor S. 511, legislation which will provide a Federal charter for the National Academies of Practice. I commend my colleague from Hawaii, Mr. INOUYE, for bringing this legislation to the attention of the Senate.

The National Academies of Practice is an organization representing distinguished practitioners from each of the various health care disciplines. These individuals have been selected by their peers for their significant contributions to the practices of applied medicine, dentistry, osteopathy, podiatry, optometry, psychology, nursing, social work, and veterinary medicine.

Brought together under the umbrella of the National Academies of Practice, these practitioners will serve as a vital source of policy expertise for the Congress and the executive branch. Given the numerous health care decisions that are being made on the Federal level, it is essential that policymakers in Washington have access to qualified and exemplary practitioners.

Again, I commend Mr. INOUYE for supporting interdisciplinary activity in the health care industry, and I encourage my colleagues to join me in supporting S. 511.●

IMPEACHMENT TRIAL COMMITTEE ON THE ARTICLES AGAINST JUDGE WALTER L. NIXON, JR.

● Mr. FOWLER. Mr. President, on May 11, 1989, the Senate agreed to Senate Resolution 128, providing for the appointment of a committee, pursuant to rule XI of Rules of Procedure and Practice in the Senate When Sitting on Impeachment Trials, to take evidence and report to the Senate a certified record of evidence taken in the impeachment trial of Judge Walter L. Nixon, Jr., chief judge of the Southern District of Mississippi.

At an organizational meeting of the committee, Senator HATCH was designated vice chairman and I was named chairman. The committee has, since then, been engaged in pretrial proceedings to get this matter ready for trial. The case is now ready for trial, and the committee will begin hearing evidence this Thursday, September 7, at 9:30 a.m. in the Central Hearing Facility, room SH-216 of the Hart Senate Office Building. The committee will receive evidence from 9:30 a.m. in the morning until approximately 12:30 in the afternoon and from 2 until approximately 5 in the afternoon on the 7th and 8th of September and from September 12 through September 15 the following week at these same times, or until the parties complete the presentation of their evidence.

All Members of the Senate are welcome to attend any of the committee's proceedings. In addition, with the assistance of the Senate Recording Studio, the proceedings will be broadcast live to all offices on channel 12 of the Senate's closed circuit television system and will be videotaped for Members' subsequent viewing at their convenience. At the conclusion of the committee's proceedings, the committee will file with the Senate a complete record of its evidentiary proceedings and a summary of the issues and evidence involved in this matter.

I would like to take this opportunity, on the eve of the committee's proceedings, to remind all Senators of the Senate's important constitutional responsibility in this case and to encourage Members to take advantage of these various means of familiarizing themselves with the evidentiary record on which the Senate will take up the questions of whether the House has proven its charges and whether Judge Nixon should be removed from office.

To ready this case for trial, the committee has been conducting pretrial proceedings with the parties. In the course of that process the committee has issued pretrial orders disposing of a number of motions filed by the parties. So that all Members will be able to familiarize themselves with the actions of the committee that have brought this case to the hearings that are about to commence, I would like the committee's pretrial orders to be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The orders follow:

IMPEACHMENT TRIAL COMMITTEE, DISPOSITION OF PRETRIAL MOTIONS, FIRST ORDER

The parties have filed several motions on pretrial issues, which they have supported and opposed by the submission of written memoranda and oral argument before the Committee. In disposition of these motions, the Committee has authorized the Chairman and Vice Chairman to issue the following rulings on its behalf:

MOTION FOR TRIAL BY THE FULL SENATE

Judge Nixon has requested reconsideration of the decision to appoint this Committee to compile an evidentiary record pursuant to Senate Impeachment Rule XI. His motion for a full live evidentiary proceeding on the floor of the Senate, without the assistance of this Committee, rests on claims of both constitutional requirement and fairness. The constitutional arguments about the use of a Committee have recently been considered thoroughly by the Committee on Rules and Administration during the Hastings impeachment matter. The Committee's studied conclusion that the Constitution permits the Senate to appoint a Rule XI committee underlay the Senate's decision both in the Hastings matter and in this one to use a committee to compile an evidentiary record. The courts have confirmed the Senate's discretion to use a committee to assist it in impeachment matters.

To the extent that Judge Nixon's objection to the use of a committee rests on the existence in this case of important issues of credibility of witnesses, we note that Judge Hastings' case presents no less important issues of witness credibility. The Hastings Impeachment Trial Committee accepted the recommendation of the Committee on Rules and Administration to provide all Members of the Senate with as much opportunity as possible to view the Impeachment Committee's proceedings, including observing witnesses' demeanor, by broadcasting them live to all Senate offices and by videotaping them for later viewing. This Committee will adopt the same practice.

In short, by the adoption of Senate Resolution 128 establishing this Committee, the Senate has already determined that Rule XI is constitutional and that it should be used in this proceeding. This Committee does not have jurisdiction to alter the Senate's decision, and no useful purposes would be served by requesting the Senate to revisit its determination at this point. Rule XI preserves the right of the Senate, following the conclusion of this Committee's proceedings, to send for any witness and hear his testimony in open Senate or to have the entire trial in open Senate. Accordingly, to the extent that Judge Nixon's motion should be interpreted as a request that the Committee desist from its pending proceedings, the motion will be denied, without prejudice to his renewing it in accordance with Rule XI following this Committee's report of an evidentiary record to the Senate as mandated by Senate Resolution 128.

MOTION TO DISMISS ARTICLE III

Judge Nixon has moved to dismiss Article III on the grounds that it fails to state an impeachable offense, is duplicative, and is confusing. In recognition that the Committee lacks jurisdiction to dismiss any of the Articles of Impeachment, he has requested that the Committee refer this motion to the full Senate. Because the Senate recently denied a similar motion by Judge Hastings to dismiss the culminating Article in his case, no useful purposes would be served by referring Judge Nixon's motion to the Senate for resolution. To the extent that Judge Nixon's motion to dismiss rests on the repetition of elements of earlier articles in Article III or on the inclusion of allegations of violation of general standards of misconduct warranting conviction in the view of the House, his motion seeks to present issues rejected by the Senate in the Hastings case.

The House's inclusion of statements of violations of general standards of misconduct in impeachment articles, like the initial two paragraphs of Article III, has never been understood to constitute factual allegations intended to be subject to evidentiary proof. The Committee similarly understands that the initial two paragraphs of Article III are prefatory and the allegations in Article III that are to be the subject of the evidence adduced by the parties are the allegations of false statements contained in Article III.

To the extent that the motion rests on the House's inclusion of fourteen distinct allegations of false statements in one article, we believe that Article III states an intelligible and adequately discrete charge of an impeachable offense by alleging that Judge Nixon concealed information concerning several conversations in which he had engaged by making "one or more" false statements to investigatory officials and "one or more" false statements to a grand jury. The House has substantial discretion in determining how to aggregate related alleged acts of misconduct in framing Articles of Impeachment and has historically frequently chosen to aggregate multiple factual allegations in a single impeachment article. The House's itemization of the fourteen particular statements whose knowing falsity it is alleging serves to give Judge Nixon fair notice of the contours of the charge against him without reducing the intelligibility of the article's essential accusation that Judge Nixon knowingly concealed material information from the government's law enforcement agents. Because the Committee believes that evidentiary proceedings may fairly be conducted on Article III as it is presently drafted, Judge Nixon's motion to refer his motion to dismiss Article III to the Senate at this time is denied. Judge Nixon may press his effort to dismiss Article III before the full Senate after the conclusion of the Committee's proceedings. If the House wishes to redraft or revise Article III in light of Judge Nixon's objections and the possibility that he will renew them before the Senate, it is free to do so.

MOTIONS RELATING TO USE OF PRIOR TESTIMONY

The parties have crossed motions on the use of prior testimony. Judge Nixon has sought to exclude all use of prior testimony, whether from his criminal trial or from the House's impeachment proceedings, unless needed to impeach or refresh a witness or to substitute for an unavailable witness. The House has moved to accept into evidence the record of all prior testimony and exhibits in its entirety. The Committee believes that introduction of the record of prior testimony and exhibits will be useful to enable the Committee to focus the live testimony that it hears on the most critical witnesses. The prior testimony has been the subject of adverse cross-examination, and its use will not prejudice any party. In accordance with the House motion and in the interest of a thorough and fair proceeding, all testimony and exhibits in Judge Nixon's criminal proceeding, including the post-trial proceeding (as requested by Judge Nixon), will be admitted, as well as all testimony and exhibits admitted in the House impeachment proceeding.

MOTIONS TO EXCLUDE EVIDENCE

Both Judge Nixon and the House Managers have moved to exclude particular areas of inquiry from the evidentiary proceedings. Judge Nixon seeks to exclude evidence of his oil and gas investments with Wiley Fairchild. The House seeks to exclude evidence of prosecutorial misconduct or vindictiveness. These motions are premature. Neither party has yet had an opportunity to specify what evidence, if any, in the disputed categories it wishes to present. Each party will have such an opportunity when it files its pretrial statement.

In addition to the other material that should be included in the pretrial statements, Judge Nixon shall include a particular issue proffer for the categories of prosecutorial vindictiveness and prosecutorial misconduct, in which he indicates what facts, if any, he intends to prove and how they are relevant to these allegations and to the Articles of Impeachment, what witnesses he desires to call, what he specifically expects them to testify to, and how long he anticipates their testimony will take.

In light of the Committee's ruling admitting prior testimony, the House shall include in its pretrial statement a particular issue proffer in which it indicates what facts it intends to prove relating to Judge Nixon's oil and gas investments, which of those facts may be established through prior testimony or stipulations, which of these facts require live testimony, which witnesses it desires to call, specifically what it expects them to testify to, and how long he anticipates their testimony will take. The Committee will defer disposition of these motions pending these submissions.

MOTION FOR DEFENSE FUNDS

Judge Nixon has moved for the Senate to reimburse him for the costs of his defense, including all out-of-pocket costs and his attorney's fees at the rate of $75 an hour. The Committee has no authority to grant this request. In accordance with unbroken Senate practice, the Committee declines to recommend to the Senate that it grant Judge Nixon's request for funds with which to conduct his defense. Judge Nixon may renew his request for defense funds at the close of the Senate's proceedings on the Articles of Impeachment. The Senate will follow its usual practice of paying the costs of bringing the witnesses for whom it issues subpoenas to Washington to testify in this proceeding.

MOTION TO IMMUNIZE A WITNESS

Judge Nixon has advised that he may wish to call as a witness Robert Royals, who declined to testify at Judge Nixon's criminal trial on the basis of his privilege against self-incrimination. The Committee will defer determining whether to obtain an immunity order until it has become clearer whether Royals' testimony will be necessary. If Judge Nixon determines to place Royals on his witness list, he should accompany that designation with a formal description of the effort that he has made to determine whether Royals will assert a Fifth Amendment privilege. In the meantime, the Committee will take the necessary action to enable it to obtain an immunity order in an expeditious manner at a later date should that prove necessary.

STIPULATIONS

The parties have made some progress in stipulating to uncontested facts, but additional progress is expected. Judge Nixon has objected to a number of the House's proposed stipulations on the grounds that they are biased, inaccurate, or incomplete. With regard to the proposed stipulations that are the subject of such objections, the House should determine whether it is possible to reformulate them to meet Judge Nixon's objections. Judge Nixon should assist the House in that effort by detailing the specific bases for his objections. The parties should work together in this process to achieve additional progress, rather than simply exchanging fixed positions. The Committee's deferral of Judge Nixon's motion seeking to exclude evidence on his oil and gas investments should not prevent the parties from attempting to make progress on these stipulations, as well as the others. Any stipulations agreed to in this area will be understood to remain subject to Judge Nixon's objection as to relevance, until the Committee rules on that issue.

PRETRIAL STATEMENTS

The Committee has authorized the Chairman and Vice Chairman to issue a further order detailing the specifications, in addition to those described earlier and in this order, of the pretrial statements due on July 31.

WYCHE FOWLER, Jr.,
Chairman.
ORRIN G. HATCH,
Vice Chairman.

July 25, 1989.

IMPEACHMENT TRIAL COMMITTEE, ORDER DESIGNATING CONTENTS OF FINAL PRETRIAL STATEMENTS, SECOND ORDER

By letter from the Senate Legal Counsel on June 9, 1989, the Committee informed the parties of the required contents of pretrial statements, due on July 31, 1989, and indicated that those specifications would be supplemented in greater detail. The Committee's First Order provided some additional requirements for the pretrial statements. This order contains further guidance from the Committee concerning the preparation of pretrial statements.

The parties' Final Pretrial Statements should do the following:

1. Statement of the Case.—Provide a brief and general statement of the case as the party intends to present it at the impeachment trial proceedings.

2. Witnesses.—List the names and addresses of witnesses whom the party wishes to call, with a statement of the nature of their testimony sufficient to illustrate the relevance of that testimony to these proceedings. If any expert witnesses are listed, provide a brief statement of the subject of their testimony and their qualifications as experts.

The Committee shall treat the inclusion of an individual's name on the witness list as a request to the Senate that a subpoena be issued to that individual requiring his or her appearance at the impeachment trial proceedings. Upon receipt of the Final Pretrial Statements, the Committee will determine which subpoenas shall issue.
